Before yesterday's meeting Mr. Smith of the anti-administration faction announced that he had prepared a plan for the dissolution of the Exchange by the Legislature and the appointment of receivers for the property. He promised to submit his ideas to the meeting in the form of a resolution, and it was expected that he would stir up a lively fight. Mr. Smith did not show up at the meeting, and his resolution was not heard from.

The members expressed their agreement with the findings of the Investigating Committee by resolving that the Ways and Means Committee work with a committee of the Board of Managers and see how best the reforms could be carried out.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 2.—New York exchange was 25 cents discount. Time and call loans, 5@5½ per cent.

Trading on the local Exchange in point of dullness resembled that in New York. Street's Car Line common turned firm and sold up above 30. Swift's held around 107, Edison improved fractionally on small lots, and Brick, Biscuit, and Kansas City Light were about steady. Subway seemed to be under pressure again and sold early at 45.

In the afternoon Subway regained its lost position and sold at 47. South Side Elevated sold up to 94, and Match, after losing a point, rallied ½.

February's Greatest Bank Clearings.

February's bank clearings, according to Bradstreet's, were the greatest for that short month in the history of the country. The aggregate for ninety-four cities included in the reports was $12,374,687,601, a gain of 16.7 per cent. over February, 1905, which held the record up to that time. January of this year established a new record, so that 1906 to date is the banner year in the banking history of the United States.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Heinze Coppers Again on the Down Grade—Market Generally Dull and Irregular.

Interborough-Metropolitan common and preferred and the 4½ per cent. bonds of the merger all suffered losses in yesterday's curb market. The common stock established a new low record at 51⅛. The close was 52⅛, a loss of ⅞ for the day, after sales of 1,900 shares. The preferred sold during the day between 92 and 89, closing at the latter figure after sales of 2,500 shares. The bonds lost ⅜ points after sales of $360,000.

Trading in coppers brought, in most cases, only fractional changes. United Copper was an exception, selling four points down, to 65, but recovering to 67 after sales of 14,800. Industrials were heavy and irregular. International Mercantile Marine preferred sold from 33½ down to 32.

CURRENCY MOVEMENT.

Estimates of the results of the movements of currency published yesterday indicate a net loss in cash to the banks for the week varying from $3,500,000 to $5,300,000. The banks lost heavily to the Sub-Treasury, but appear to have gained on the transactions with the interior.

> The reported movement of currency this week indicates a loss in cash held by the banks of $5,308,800. They received from the interior $6,037,000, and sent to the interior $5,552,800, including $200,000 transferred through the Sub-Treasury to Cincinnati, and $1,843,000 National banknotes sent to Washington for redemption. The gain from the interior was $84,200.
> Receipts of new gold were $1,204,100, namely, $1,003,300 on New York Assay Office checks, $153,700 on San Francisco Mint checks and telegraphic transfers, and $47,100 on Seattle Assay Office checks.
>
> Ordinary disbursements by the Sub-Treasury were $19,064,900. Payments by the banks to the Sub-Treasury for customs, internal revenue, 5 per cent. redemption fund, retirement of circulation, &c., were $26,062,000. The loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper was $6,997,100. The total gain from the interior, $484,200, and new gold, $1,204,100, was $1,688,300. Deducting this from the loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper, the net loss was $5,308,800.
>
> Receipts of currency from the interior were about $600,000 less than in the preceding week, while shipments were about $300,000 more. The receipts were chiefly from nearby cities, attracted by the high rates for money. Shipments were chiefly to the West, and to some extent also to near-by points. The movement to the West was developed in the last days of the week, and is expected to continue for some time.
>
> The big loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper was caused by large transfers of internal revenue collections at interior cities to the Treasury by draft upon New York correspondents by payments into the 5 per cent. fund, and for the retirement of outstanding circulation of National banks whose charters were renewed three years ago. So heavy a loss on this latter account has not occurred for twenty years, and may not occur again until 1926. Collections of customs were $5,135,800, compared with $3,952,767 in the preceding week. Pension payments were $1,228,000, compared with $2,064,000 in the preceding week.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Orders for Pig Iron Still Far Ahead of the Output.

The enormous output of pig iron continues to be absorbed as fast as produced, and yard stocks have no chance to accumulate. Trade experts see no justification for a prediction of lower prices, and the decided firmness of quotations in the face of the tendency to hold off on the part of buyers is taken as confirmation of the furnacemen's statements that they are full of orders for the half year.

Finished steel deliveries for January and February have broken all records, as was expected, and the same comparative increase is looked for in March. The earnings of the United States Steel Corporation for the quarter ending this month are estimated at $36,000,000.

This vast increase over previous records for this period is due in some measure to a change in bookkeeping methods which does not take account of the profits on ore until it is in the shape of finished steel and in the hands of the consumer. Up to last year ore profits were figured before conversion, and consequently the Summer months, when ore deliveries were heaviest, showed larger earnings than the Winter months.

MERGER STOCK $155,000,000.

ALBANY, March 2.—The Interborough-Metropolitan Company of New York City to-day filed with the Secretary of State a certificate of increase of capital from $15,000 to $155,000,000. This is the holding company of the New York City traction lines.

The certificate was signed by Walter G. Oakman, who was Chairman, and Edward Cornell, Secretary, of the meeting of stockholders on March 1 in New York City. The company paid into the State Treasury $77,492.50 for the privilege of increasing its stock.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

BOSTON, March 2.—The local money market is dead.

Call loans, 5½@6 per cent. Time loans, collateral, 5@6 per cent. Time loans, mercantile paper, 5½@6 per cent. Clearing House loans, 4 per cent. New York funds, 10c discount. Clearings, $34,473,241. Balances, $1,714,270. Sub-Treasury debit, $60,371.

Almost perfect quietness pervaded the local market to-day. Trading was nearly at a standstill. Stocks were offered for sale when the New York market turned weak and prices sagged all through the list. Amalgamated was a particularly weak feature, declining about 3 points. United Copper was also under pressure, losing over 2 points, and, in fact, declines were shown all through the copper shares. Toward the close a few buying orders made their appearance, and last prices were at a slight rally.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

French Automobile Awarded Lower Duty—Other Decisions.

In a decision by I. F. Fischer the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a claim filed in behalf of the Société Anonyme Westinghouse of Havre regarding the entered value to be placed on an automobile shipped to New York. The machine, which is of 30-horse power, was invoiced as possessing a foreign market value of 18,000f. The local appraiser deemed the entered price too low, and assessed a 45 per cent. duty on a higher valuation. This action caused the importers to ask for a review by the board. After considering the evidence the tribunal reversed the appraiser and sustained the original valuation.

In a decision by W. F. Lunt the board affirmed the Custom House authorities in their assessment of a higher duty on hair dye shipped by Adrien Monsegur of Paris. The merchandise was entered as possessing a value of 12f. per dozen boxes, whereas the American customs officers required the importer to pay duty on a valuation set at 18f. per dozen boxes.

The board took drastic action in the case of Kaitsu Gomei Kwaisha of Yokohama and Kobe. The firm shipped to St. Louis expensive Japanese porcelains which the customs appraiser found to be undervalued to the extent of 40 per cent. On review the board affirms the judgment of the appraiser. As the law requires a penalty of 1 per cent. for every 1 per cent. of advance imposed by the officials, the merchandise must stand duty on a basis 80 per cent. higher than entered values.

STREET CAR TRUST OFF.

Effort to Unite Builders in One Corporation Abandoned.

The $56,000,000 Street Car Trust, which has dragged out nearly a year in the embryonic stages of organization, was formally declared defunct yesterday by Kean, Van Cortlandt & Co., the banking firm, which has been working to bring about the consolidation.

The proposed merger included the largest street car building plants in the country, and a short time ago its success seemed assured. Strong financial interests had consented to participate in the plan, under which the owners of the plants were to take part payment for their properties in the securities of the new concern.

Negotiations were finally abandoned because of the unwillingness of some of the manufacturers to accede to the terms of the merger.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT—The wheat situation showed very little change yesterday. After moderate fluctuations throughout the session the market closed ⅛c net lower to ⅛c net higher and close to the lowest figures of the season. Trade was almost entirely professional, the crowd selling on every bulge, while bulls made a strong effort to advance the price on talk of cold weather in western parts of the wheat belt. Liverpool closed ⅛d to ¼d net lower, the Paris markets were 5 to 20 points higher, Berlin 1 mark down, and Budapest 4 points above the previous night. No. 2 red closed at 85¼c, elevator, and 88¼c, free on board afloat, nominal; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 90¼c, free on board afloat.

CORN—The corn market had a firm and higher opening, but eased off for a time with wheat. As the movement continued light, however, and weather conditions were unfavorable, prices soon recovered, ruling about ⅛c above the previous night all day. A slight reaction near the close, in sympathy with wheat, left the market finally ⅛c net higher. Liverpool was up ⅛d. Interior receipts amounted to 540,000 bushels, compared with 794,000 bushels the previous year; seaboard clearances were 502,000 bushels. Argentine shipments, 105,000 bushels, compared with 150,000 bushels last year, and Argentine weather, according to a late cable, unfavorable. Exporters took 2 loads. No. 2 corn closed at 49c, elevator, and 47¼c, free on board afloat; No. 2 white, 48½c, and No. 2 yellow, 47½c, free on board afloat.

COTTON—The cotton market was moderately active and generally higher during to-day's session as a result of bullish estimates on cotton ginned and continued evidences of a big trade demand. Two reports were issued on ginning, one placing the amount ginned to Feb. 26 at 10,355,000 bales, issued by the recent bear leader, and the other placing the amount ginned to Feb. 25 at 10,348,000 bales by the President of the Southern Cotton Association. These two reports were considered to practically confirm each other and point to a report by the Census Bureau on about March 20, which is the final report of the season, of about 10,400,000 bales. The market closed at a net gain of 8 to 13 points. Sales were estimated at 300,000 bales.

The market opened steady at an advance of 3 to 5 points on the higher cables and reports of big spot sales in the Liverpool market. Right after the call it advanced to a net gain of 8 to 10 points on the ginning reports, but during the middle session made little further progress, owing to increased offerings around 10.60c for May. In the early afternoon the continued buying by smaller shorts and fresh bull interests absorbed the cotton offering around 60, and May sold up to 10.68c, when there was realizing by early buyers, and the market eased off a little in the late trading, with May closing at 10.65.

FUNDED DEBT.

The amount of funded debt, including mortgages, real estate, and ground rents, December 31st, 1905, was $191,852,447.49, being an increase of $74,670,440.25.

The amount of Consolidated Mortgage Bonds shows a reduction of $27,414,220, due to the fact that $28,000 of the bonds maturing May 1st, 1943, were retired under the Sinking Fund provisions of the Mortgage, and that of the $27,480,020 of Bonds heretofore issued under said Mortgage and which matured June 15th and July 1st, 1905, $27,386,220 had been presented for payment up to December 31st, leaving $93,800 outstanding. The funds necessary for the payment of the Consolidated Mortgage Bonds were obtained from the proceeds of the Convertible Bonds heretofore authorized by the Shareholders.

Under the authority referred to, an issue was made of one hundred million dollars of these securities, under date of October 2d, 1905, bearing interest at 3½ per cent., maturing in ten years, and convertible at any time after December 1st, 1905, into capital stock at the rate of $75 per share. They are subject to redemption at par on December 1st, 1910, or at any subsequent interest period on ninety days' notice, but when called may be converted into stock up to thirty days prior to the date named for redemption. Of these bonds $5,500 had been so converted up to December 31, 1905, leaving outstanding $99,994,500. Conversions were also made of $212,500 of the ten-year 3½ per cent. convertible bonds issued November 1st, 1902, the amount outstanding being $20,480,000.

There also appear on the Balance Sheet as a result of the absorption of the Pittsburgh, Virginia and Charleston Railway the $8,000,000 of Bonds theretofore issued by that Company.

In consequence of the maturity of the Consolidated Mortgage Bonds already referred to, there was a reduction in the amount to be set apart out of the net income for the redemption of the outstanding bonds secured by that mortgage, to $126,450. This sum was placed to the credit of the Trustees of the Sinking Fund, for investment under the terms of the mortgage. There were $1,865,462.75 in securities and cash in the fund at the close of the year. The assets released through the payment of the bonds maturing June and July, 1905, amounting to $8,089,746.76, were turned over to your treasury, and appear on the Balance Sheet. Against the credit to Profit and Loss resulting therefrom, were charged the discount on the Convertible Bonds not taken by the Shareholders under the option given them in March last, and which were subsequently sold in the open market, viz., $2,500,000, and also the sum of $5,000,000, which was appropriated toward the cost of your terminal passenger station in New York, the balance being applied in reduction of the value of securities and outstanding accounts, and against advances made to the Western New York and Pennsylvania Railway and other subsidiary companies.

SECURITIES OF OTHER CORPORATIONS.

The entire cost of the securities of other corporations held by your Company December 31st, 1905, was $236,604,457.15, and the direct revenue received therefrom during the year was $10,018,026.32, being nearly 4¼ per cent. upon the cost thereof.

It will be noted that your holdings of Pennsylvania Company stock show an increase of $20,000,000, it having been deemed advisable to broaden the stock basis of that Company, in order to enable it to provide the betterments and improvements required by the largely increased traffic of your western system.

CAR TRUSTS.

The total number of Car Trust cars now in service is 54,903, and the Car Trust certificates outstanding December 31st, 1905, aggregate $33,100,000.

TRAFFIC.

The number of tons of freight moved on the four grand divisions east of Pittsburgh and Erie in 1905 was 157,003,767, an increase of 23,537,342, or 17.64 per cent.; the number of passengers was 55,781,809, an increase of 4,018,439, of 7.76 per cent.

The other Railroad Companies east of Pittsburgh and Erie in which your Company is interested show satisfactory results. Detailed statements of their operations will be found in their respective annual reports, as well as in the full report of your Company.

CAPITAL STOCK AND FUNDED DEBT.—LINES WEST OF PITTSBURGH.

The $50,000,000 issue of temporary collateral obligations made by the Pennsylvania Company to meet the heavy capital expenditures on the lines West of Pittsburgh was paid off at maturity, October 1st, 1905. As heretofore noted, the capital stock of the Company was increased by an additional issue of $20,000,000, the total now amounting to $80,000,000. It will be noted that after paying a dividend of five per cent. for the past year, making large contributions to its various sinking funds, and transferring $2,000,000 to an Extraordinary Expenditure fund, the Company carried a substantial balance to the credit of its Profit and Loss account.

For the purpose of retiring $5,027,000 funded indebtedness of the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute and Terre Haute and Logansport Railway Companies, constituent organizations of the Consolidated Vandalia Railroad Company, and for other corporate purposes, an issue was made by the latter Company of $7,000,000 of its fifty-year four per cent. Consolidated Mortgage bonds, maturing February 1st, 1955.

In pursuance of an agreement with the Erie and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, under date of November 1st, 1905, your Company has arranged to provide the Sinking Fund instalments required by the General Mortgage of that Company of July 1, 1890, the Erie and Pittsburgh Railroad Company agreeing to deliver from time to time its three and one-half per cent. debentures at par to the amount of such advances, and upon the final payment of the outstanding General Mortgage bonds to exchange new Mortgage Bonds to be issued in lieu thereof, par for par, for the debentures so delivered to your Company prior thereto.

In pursuance of an agreement of consolidation, duly approved by the Boards of Directors and Shareholders of the two Companies, the Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Ashtabula and the New Castle and Beaver Valley Railroad Companies have been consolidated into the Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Ashtabula Railway Company, taking effect as of January 1, 1906. This consolidation merges into one ownership the lines leading from Kenwood, Homewood, and Alliance Junction on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway to Ashtabula on Lake Erie, and ensures an economical and harmonious administration of the property.

CAPITAL EXPENDITURES.

The amount of Capital Expenditures during the year on the Lines west of Pittsburgh for construction, equipment, and real estate was $10,005,924.75.

Further large expenditures were made upon the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway in the elevation and depression of tracks to avoid grade crossings in the cities of Chicago and Allegheny, in the construction of third, fourth, and fifth tracks and of sidings at various points, and in the extension and improvement of terminal yards.

A liberal outlay was also required for double tracking, yards, docks, and other terminal facilities on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Ashtabula, and other lines in your Northwestern System. On the Southwestern System the same policy was pursued in regard to the track elevation in Chicago, the further extension of second track between Columbus and Indianapolis, the construction of other additional main tracks and sidings, and the improvement of yards at terminal points.

There was also a considerable increase in the locomotive and car equipment on both systems.

TRAFFIC.

The number of tons of freight moved on the lines west of Pittsburgh was 132,220,018, an increase of 20,603,664. The number of passengers carried was 28,341,119, an increase of 469,867.

The gross earnings of all lines east and west of Pittsburgh for the year 1905 were $266,069,597.76, operating expenses, $192,100,348.42, and net earnings, $73,969,249.34, an increase in gross earnings, compared with 1904, of $28,853,177.63, and an increase in net earnings of $8,266,289.37. There were 333,011,237 tons of freight moved, being an increase of 48,191,297 tons, and 126,084,223 passengers carried, an increase of 5,668,005.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The tonnage shows an exceptional increase both in volume and mileage over that of 1904, the traffic for the year being much the heaviest in the history of the Company, and by reason of the liberal expenditures recently made in the construction of relief lines and large terminal yards and the substantial additions made to your motive power, the movement thereof has been materially improved. The gross earnings of the lines East of Pittsburgh and Erie show a large gain, and the prosperous conditions prevailing in the country are reflected throughout the entire system.

There was a slight reduction in the average rate, and also in the net earnings per ton per mile, but owing to the volume of traffic carried, there was a large gain in the freight revenue. There was an increase in the expenses in all departments, and notably in that of Maintenance of Equipment, due to the outlays necessary to keep your motive power and equipment up to the requirements of the traffic. It will be seen, however, that after meeting all liabilities and paying the regular dividend of six per cent., the surplus income was sufficient to provide for the instalments due on the principal of the outstanding Car Trusts, $3,249,238.43, and for $8,424,881.37, the Extraordinary Expenditure for the year.

The heaviest outlay during the past year was upon the low grade freight line from York Haven to Glenloch. The work was prosecuted vigorously, and the sections between York Haven and Columbia and between Atglen and Parkesburg are now in service. Between Columbia and Atglen and between Thorndale and Glenloch, the grading is rapidly approaching completion, and the entire road will be finished in the early Spring.

Additional expenditures have also been made upon the yards operated at Enola in connection with this line, and facilities provided at Thorndale and Denholm on the Philadelphia and Middle Divisions, through which four freight trains in each direction can be coaled and watered at the same time, and the delays avoided that now result from trains having to follow each other at intervals and wait while those ahead are being served.

The yards at Harrisburg, Tyrone, Altoona, Pitcairn, and Pittsburgh have been further extended, the eastbound classification yard at Hollidaysburg enlarged, and provision made for an extensive westbound yard at the same point, for the classification of coal cars to be distributed over the Pittsburgh Division. At the Morrisville terminus of the Trenton Cut-off, liberal yard facilities are also being furnished for the accommodation of the traffic passing over the New York Division.

At Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, the express station has been rebuilt, and the widening out and lengthening of the tracks on the South side is under way.

At East Liberty, Pittsburgh, a new passenger station is being erected, which will furnish adequate accommodation for the large travel at that point. The elevated road on Duquesne Way and the car-load delivery yard have been completed, and the freight houses are under construction.

On the Pittsburgh Division, the four track system has been finally completed between Bolivar and Blairsville Intersection, and work is being pushed between Beatty and Donohoe, and on the revised line between Beatty and Southwest Junction. The second track on the Western Pennsylvania Division between Tunnelton and Saltsburg has been completed. A jumpover has also been constructed at Ehrenfeld to prevent interference by the South Fork coal traffic with the Main Line movement.

On the Middle Division, the four track system on the Canal line at Newport has been put in service, and the stone arch bridges constructed over the Juniata on the new four track line between Granville and Mayes.

On the Philadelphia Division, the elevation above high water of the tracks along the Susquehanna River between White House Road and Harrisburg has been completed.

One of the most important matters which received attention during the past year was the providing of a sufficient water supply for present and future needs. Owing to the largely increased demand arising from the growth of the traffic, the former sources of supply had become inadequate, and on the lines traversing the coal districts the quality of the water was rapidly becoming unfit for locomotive use. Arrangements have now been made, through contracts with companies organized and owned by your Company, to secure an adequate supply of good water at all points on your Main Line between Pittsburgh and New York, and also on the more important branches, and for the construction of the reservoirs and the piping of the water to your lines, whence it will be distributed along the right-of-way to the necessary points. The cost of this undertaking will be large, but it will be of incalculable value, while the difficulty in obtaining water in sufficient quantity and of good quality shows that this step could not have been longer delayed. It is proposed to obtain the funds for this outlay by an issue of special securities maturing at short periods, and as there will be a large saving both in cost of water and in boiler repairs, the principal and interest thereof can be met, without undue burden, out of your current income.

On the United Railroads of New Jersey Division, the principal items of outlay, outside of the Greenville Yard, were in the improvement of your pier and yard facilities at New York and Harsimus, the extension of the Waverly Yard, the reconstruction of the Princeton Branch, the erection of the Trenton Shops, and the elevation of your tracks in Camden.

The improvement of the Greenville Yard was further continued, and a large sum expended in filling, dredging the channel, construction of lighterage and coal piers, and furnishing other facilities.

It was found absolutely necessary also to largely increase your motive power in order to meet the exceptional demands of your traffic. Substantial additions were made to your passenger equipment, and arrangements concluded for the building of a large number of standard freight cars, to replace equipment of small capacity no longer adapted to the exigencies of your service. It was deemed wise to make these replacements at once, instead of distributing them over a period of years. And while the equipment absolutely owned by your Company will show a temporary decrease until the maturity of the Car Trusts under which the standard equipment is built, the number of cars available for service is not diminished, while the tonnage capacity is largely increased. Contracts have also been let covering the addition of twenty thousand cars to the freight equipment of your system, under the usual car trust arrangements.

The aggregate expenditures for construction, equipment, and real estate during the year upon your main line between New York and Pittsburgh, including $3,514,238.43 paid on account of the principal of Car Trusts, were $38,707,057.97, of which $27,122,938.17 was charged to Capital Account, and $11,674,119.80 against the income of the year.

The outlay upon your branch and auxiliary lines operated as a part of the four Grand Divisions East of Pittsburgh and Erie, amounted to $4,429,102.37, and the funds therefor were supplied by the respective Companies making the improvements out of surplus income or from other sources.

On the latter lines the largest expenditure was upon the Cambria and Clearfield, Cherry Tree and Dixonville, Western New York and Pennsylvania, and Allegheny Valley Railways. The main items upon the first-named road were the construction of the Barnesboro tunnel for second track, and the improvements to the line between Amsbry and Irvona to accommodate the business of the New York Central lines. The outlay on the Cherry Tree and Dixonville road was in the construction of track sidings and branches necessary to provide for the joint business handled by your own and the New York Central interests, in accordance with the existing contracts. The construction of a branch is now under way from West Brownsville Junction up the valley of the Monongahela, a distance of 4½ miles, where it will connect with the Pennsylvania, Monongahela and Southern Railroad, which is being built to further develop the Monongahela Valley.

On the Western New York and Pennsylvania Railway the principal expenditure was upon yards and shops at Olean, on the canal and dock facilities at South Buffalo, on the Ebenezer Yard, and on right of way and real estate. On the Allegheny Valley Railway, the outlay was mainly on the second track from Rimerton to Phillipston, on the Coleman, Phillipston, and Cochran yards, and on sidings, right of way, and real estate.

The expenditures for the current year will include the extension of the four-track system on the Middle and Pittsburgh Divisions, and the necessary revision of the alignment and grades connected therewith. This work, which is being pushed as rapidly as practicable, will complete the four tracks between New York and Pittsburgh with the exception of two or three track sections, one of seven miles between Spruce Creek and Tyrone Forge, and one of 3½ miles immediately east of Conemaugh. This will, however, not obviate the necessity for the construction of additional relief lines for the Pittsburgh and New York Divisions. As already stated, the low-grade freight line between York Haven and Glenloch will be placed in service in a few months, and will then furnish an entirely independent route, with maximum grades of three-tenths per cent. against the Eastbound and six-tenths per cent. against the Westbound traffic between Marysville and Morrisville, a distance of 137 miles. Another double-track relief line is in operation between the eastern end of the Allegheny Mountain tunnels and Petersburg, on the Middle Division, a distance of 47 miles. These two lines will amply provide not only for the prompt movement of the present traffic between the points named, but for a large increase; but it will be necessary to proceed at once with the construction of an additional freight line about fifty miles long, between Morrisville and Newark, and of one between Glenloch and Philadelphia about twenty miles in length, and also to relieve the Pittsburgh Division by building an independent line between Pitcairn and Blairsville, 48 miles, and between Johnstown and Altoona, 39 miles. Whether the latter lines should be for passenger or freight service is a question that is now being carefully studied; but whether for passenger or freight it is deemed best, from an operating standpoint, that the relief lines shall be entirely independent rather than that two additional tracks shall be laid alongside of an existing four-track railroad. The necessity for the prompt construction of these relief lines will be apparent when it is stated that the average daily movement of freight cars over the Allegheny Mountain summit for October, November, and December, 1905, and January, 1906, was 5669 cars, with a maximum movement in twenty-four hours of 6974 cars; that there is a daily average passenger movement of 28 trains in each direction, that freight trains require two assisting locomotives on the Eastern and one on the Western slope, and that on the Eastern slope passenger trains also must also have an assisting locomotive. The daily average number of independent train units passing over the Eastern slope during the months named, including assisting locomotives when descending without trains, but not counting them as separate units when attached to trains ascending the mountain, was 168 in each direction. In this connection it should also be noted, as indicating the provision that should be made for the future, that the increase in the tonnage of your line between New York and Pittsburgh during the last five years was 40 per cent., and in the ton-mileage, 32 per cent.

With the completion of the relief lines referred to you will have a double-track railroad between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia and New York entirely independent of your four track road, with the exception of the section on the Middle Division between Petersburg and Marysville, 96 miles, and the short section between Parkesburg and Thorndale on the Philadelphia Division. But it is believed that the first of these sections will not require relief for some years, as its very low grades admit of heavy trains and a consequent relatively small number of train units.

The construction of the tunnel line into and through the city of New York has been steadily prosecuted during the year. All the real estate required for the terminal station has been purchased and also the greater portion of that needed for the terminal yard in Long Island City. On the section between Newark and the Hudson River, the drawbridge over the Hackensack River is under contract, and the work on the Bergen Hill tunnel, which is being driven from both ends, is to be further expedited through the central shaft from which headings are driven in both directions. In the North River tunnels, the shields are at work on both sides of the stream, and it is confidently expected that they will be connected and the iron lining in place before the end of the year.

The excavation for the station site and the building of the retaining walls are steadily progressing; the powerhouse from which the terminal station will be operated is under construction, and the tunnels under the city of New York are being driven westward from the main shaft at First Avenue and also in both directions from the intermediate shafts located on Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets between Fourth and Madison Avenues.

On the East River section, the shields on the Manhattan side are in place and working towards the river; and, while the shafts on the Long Island side are not yet completed, a considerable amount of work has been done between those shafts and the eastern portal of the tunnels in Long Island City. The power house in that city is in service and is supplying the electric lines of the Long Island Railroad.

Nothing has occurred to seriously delay the progress of the work or to suggest any special difficulties in carrying out the general scheme of construction.

Large expenditures were also necessary upon the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, Northern Central, Long Island, and West Jersey and Seashore Railway systems, in the elimination of grade crossings, construction of additional tracks, erection of stations and other terminal facilities, improvement of bridges, electrification of lines, and the increase of motive power and equipment. On the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad, it has been determined to electrify the line via Newfield to Atlantic City and thus furnish increased facilities for reaching that important seaside resort.

In pursuance of the policy heretofore authorized, your Company has placed its guaranty upon a further issue of $5,691,000 of the four per cent. refunding bonds of the Long Island Railroad Company, and in conjunction with the other companies, which are co-owners with it in the line between Washington and Richmond, has guaranteed an additional $2,000,000 of the Richmond-Washington Company's four per cent. Collateral Trust Bonds.

The charges to Capital Account during the year were as follows:

In pursuance of the action taken by the Shareholders at the last Annual Meeting, the Pittsburgh, Virginia and Charleston Railway was merged into the Main Line on the first day of April, 1905, and your Balance Sheet shows the changes resulting therefrom.

Your Company having been the owner of more than two-thirds of the capital stock of the South West Pennsylvania Railway, which was built as a feeder to your system, and which, branching from your Main Line at Greensburg, extends through the coke region to Connellsville and Uniontown and to a connection with your Monongahela Division, it was deemed wise to acquire the small amount held by outside parties; and it is proposed to also consolidate this road with your Main Line, under the provisions of the Act of Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of March 22d, 1901. There will be submitted for your approval at the annual meeting the necessary resolutions to this effect; and like resolutions will also be submitted covering the absorption of the York Haven and Rowenna Railroad and the Allegheny Valley Railway.

The York Haven and Rowenna Railroad is a link about five and a half miles long in the freight line which is nearly completed from York Haven on the Northern Central Railway via Columbia to Glenloch on the Main Line, as hereinbefore fully explained. As it does not lie in one of the counties through which your road passes, and therefore could not be built under your branching powers, a separate charter had to be taken out for its construction until it could be absorbed as herein stated.

The Allegheny Valley Railway forms the connection through its river and low grade divisions between your Main Line at Pittsburg and the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad at Driftwood, and also furnishes through its line to Oil City and your Western New York and Pennsylvania Railway a direct route to Buffalo, Rochester, and other important trade centres. Its terminals at Pittsburgh are of great value, and its location along the Allegheny River makes tributary to it a territory already largely devoted to steel and other manufacturing industries, and one capable of increased development in the future.

As your Company is a guarantor upon its outstanding funded debt, and owns or controls more than three-fourths of all its stock, it is deemed to your interest to acquire the comparatively small amount held by outside parties and make the road an integral part of your Main Line.

The Board have to record with deep regret the death of Mr. Sutherland M. Prevost, Third Vice President, on September 30th, 1905. Mr. Prevost's connection with lines embraced in your system had extended over a period of forty years, and since 1871 he had been continuously in your service, filling responsible positions in the operating department until February 10, 1897, when he was elected to the position which he held at the time of his death, and became the executive head of the traffic department and a member of your Board. His exceptional ability, accurate judgment, and broad views on railway questions, made him specially helpful in your relations with connecting lines, while he was always quick to stimulate the feeling of comradeship and esprit de corps in your own service. The Board desire to express their keen sense, both personally and officially, of the loss resulting from the severance of the close relations that had existed unbroken for so many years.

To fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Prevost's death, Mr. Samuel Rea was elected Third Vice-President October 10th, 1905; also on the same date Mr. John B. Thayer was elected Fourth Vice President and Mr. Henry Tatnall appointed Fifth Vice-President.

Your Board have also to record the death on February 19th, 1906, of Mr. John C. Wilson, your former Real Estate Agent, who had been retired May 1, 1902, under the operations of the Pension Department, after thirty-nine years of honorable and efficient service.

Mr. Robert W. Downing, Comptroller, having, after thirty-three years of honorable and faithful service, been retired under the operations of the Pension Department, Mr. Max Riebenack was, on February 1st, 1905, promoted to fill the vacancy. Under an amendment of the organization, taking effect March 1st, Mr. Edward A. Stockton was appointed Assistant to Comptroller, Mr. Samuel Anderson, Auditor, and Mr. John S. Donaldson, Assistant Auditor of Miscellaneous Receipts and Accounts; Mr. Jefferson Justice, Auditor, and Mr. H. C. McKeever, Assistant Auditor of Merchandise Freight Receipts; Mr. George B. Rudduck, Assistant Auditor of Disbursements; Mr. Matthias Homer, Assistant Auditor of Passenger Receipts; and Mr. John F. Reynolds, Auditor of Empire Line, vice Mr. F. M. Bissell, assigned to other duties. Mr. E. B. Hunt was appointed Assistant Superintendent of the Voluntary Relief Department, vice Mr. Homer promoted; and Mr. Daniel C. Stewart, Superintendent of Telegraph, vice Mr. Keiser transferred.

Mr. Louis H. Barker, having been assigned to other duties, Mr. A. C. Shand was appointed Assistant Chief Engineer, taking effect April 1st, and Mr. L. R. Zollinger, Engineer of Maintenance of Way, vice Mr. Shand promoted.

Under further amendments to the organization, Mr. Robert H. Large was appointed Coal Freight Agent, taking effect February 15th, 1905; Mr. Thomas W. Hulme an additional Assistant Real Estate Agent, taking effect May 1st, and taking effect June 15th, Mr. Robert H. Groff, an additional Assistant Treasurer and Registrar of Bonds, Mr. John W. Marshall, Assistant to Treasurer and Assistant Registrar of Bonds, both located in New York; Mr. G. Blight Robinson, Assistant Registrar of Bonds, located in Philadelphia; Mr. Henry C. Lawser, Assistant Cashier; Mr. Montgomery Smith, an additional Assistant Purchasing Agent, and Mr. George H. Grone, Assistant to Purchasing Agent.

The Board desire to express to the officers and employes their acknowledgments of the efficiency and fidelity with which their duties have been performed during the past year.

By order of the Board,

A. J. CASSATT, President.

Attest: LEWIS NEILSON, Secretary.

SUPREME COURT, APPELLATE DIVISION, First Department.—In the matter of the application of the Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners for the City of New York for the appointment of three commissioners to determine and report whether a rapid transit railway or railways for the conveyance and transportation of persons and property as determined by the Board ought to be constructed and operated.—Brooklyn & Manhattan Loop Lines, Manhattan Route.

Public notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 4 of the Laws of 1891, as amended, the undersigned Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners will apply to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York for the First Judicial Department, at a term thereof to be held at the Appellate Division Court House, Madison Avenue and 25th Street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 9th day of March, 1906, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for the appointment of three commissioners in the above entitled matter to determine and report after due hearing whether a railway or railways in the said city for the transportation of persons and property ought to be constructed and operated. The papers upon which the aforesaid application will be made are the petition of the said board dated the 8th day of January, 1906, and the affidavits and papers accompanying the same, all of which were filed in the office of the Clerk of said Appellate Division on or about the 9th day of February, 1906, and in addition thereto such other papers as shall be presented to the Court by the said Board.

A description of the route and general plan of construction of the said railway or railways forms part of the papers filed as aforesaid with the said Clerk of the Appellate Division. The following is a brief and substantial synopsis of the said route in the County of New York:

In the Borough of Manhattan: From the Williamsburg Bridge the route passes underground in Delancey Street, near Norfolk, and then runs west under Delancey Street to the Bowery, and under the proposed extension of Delancey Street to the corner of Centre and Grand Streets. The line then continues southerly through Centre Street and William Street.

Provision is made for three tunnels, which may be described as the Old Slip Tunnel, the Maiden Lane Tunnel, and the Beekman Street Tunnel.

The Maiden Lane Tunnel begins at the corner of William Street and Liberty Street, and then passes under Maiden Lane.

Each of these three tunnels passes under the East River to the easterly boundary of the County of New York.

There are several spurs forming a part of this route. One spur begins at Grand and Centre Streets in Manhattan, and runs west under Grand Street and Desbrosses Street to the Desbrosses Street ferry. Another spur forms a connection, by means of a line under Canal Street, with the Manhattan end of the Manhattan Bridge. A third connects with the City Hall loop of the present subway by means of a line under Beekman Street.

The object of the aforesaid application is to obtain the appointment of commissioners who shall determine after public hearing of all parties interested whether such railway or railways ought to be constructed and operated, and shall report the evidence taken to said Appellate Division, together with a report of their determination, which report, if in favor of the construction and operation of such railway or railways, (as this Board will ask that it shall be,) shall, when confirmed by said Court, be taken in lieu of the consent of the property owners along the line of said railway or railways.

Logic vs Facts.

A skillful examiner is one who knows how to interpret correctly the records relating to your title.

If he is satisfied with the records he pronounces your title good.

Yet who can tell whether the records are true or not? Nobody—until the time of trouble comes.

It is safer to let a ten-million dollar company take the risk.

BUYS BENNETT BUILDING AND LOT IN TUNNEL ZONE

Mr. Isman of Philadelphia in Two Realty Deals.

PAYS $1,000,000 FOR BUILDING

Plot in Thirty-third Street Is Within Area to be Acquired by the McAdoo Company.

The Bennett Building, occupying the block front on the west side of Nassau Street, between Fulton and Ann Streets, was sold yesterday by the New York Life Insurance Company to Felix Isman of Philadelphia for $1,000,000. Leopold Weil was the broker in the transaction. Mr. Isman has in view no particular plans for the property, aside from making such alterations and improvements as will increase its annual income.

The Bennett Building is a ten-story iron-front structure, with frontages of 117 feet on Nassau Street, 74.6 feet on Fulton Street, and 75.6 feet on Ann Street. It was built by James Gordon Bennett. Originally only six stories high, it was bought about 1890 by John Pettit, who remodeled it and built the four additional stories.

After Pettit's mysterious disappearance in 1897 the building passed into the hands of the New York Life under foreclosure. Subsequently it was transferred to Sire Brothers, and as the result of another foreclosure, in 1904, again came back into the possession of the New York Life. The insurance company's bid for the property at this last foreclosure sale was $907,000.

Mr. Isman has engaged in several large operations in New York real estate within the last three or four years. Abount two months ago he took a long lease, with an option of purchase, on a large plot at the southeast corner of Broadway and Thirty-third Street. He also controls the old Parker House property on the north side of Thirty-ninth Street, just east of Broadway, as well as several parcels around the southeast corner of Broadway and Forty-seventh Street, bought originally by the late Kirke La Shelle as a theatre site.

One of Mr. Isman's minor projects was revealed by yesterday's recorded transfers of real estate—that is, it is a minor project so far as the size of the property is concerned, but one which may have interesting developments. The property is a fractional lot, measuring 16.8 by 30 feet on the south side of Thirty-third Street, about 100 feet west of Broadway.

It is within the area to be acquired by the McAdoo tunnel company for the terminal of its Sixth Avenue subway, and when it was reported that Isabella Loring had sold the little patch of ground, a month or so ago, everybody took it for granted that the McAdoo company was the buyer. Yesterday, however, a deed was recorded transferring the parcel to Mr. Isman.

All of the properties in the proposed terminal site were made the subject of condemnation proceedings about three months ago, but nearly all of the owners have already sold out to the tunnel company. Mr. Isman's purchase, made since the beginning of the condemnation proceedings, is taken to mean that he does not intend to turn it over to the McAdoo concern without a contest.

SHALLOW GOES TO BROOKLYN.

Schools in Bay Ridge District to be in His Charge.

City Superintendent Maxwell assigned Associate Superintendent Edward B. Shallow to District No. 5, Brooklyn, yesterday and appointed him to the Committees on School Management and on Course of Study, Libraries, Text Books, and Supplies. On the first committee Mr. Shallow succeeds Associate Superintendent Macble and on the other Associate Superintendent Higgins.

Since he was elected to succeed Mr. Higgins, retired, on Feb. 15, Mr. Shallow has been studying the conditions in Manhattan schools so far as they affected overage, precocious, and foreign-born children, for whom special classes are being organized by the Board of Superintendents.

District No. 5, to which he has been assigned, includes the Bay Ridge section, in which the schools are rapidly becoming overcrowded.

It is said that there will be no shake-up in the assignments of District Superintendents.

HOTEL CLERK'S FATAL FALL.

Edward Glavin, a hotel clerk out of a job, died in Roosevelt Hospital last night of a fractured skull, the result of a fall through the ash elevator shaft of the Cadillac Hotel, in West Forty-third Street, yesterday afternoon. The accident occurred just off Broadway, and attracted a big crowd.

Glavin's roommate, John J. Casey, and Charles Del Valliere, a carpenter who was working in the cellar of the Cadillac at the time, were arrested by Patrolman Thompson of the traffic squad, but were discharged by Magistrate Whitman in the West Side Court. According to witnesses with whom Thompson talked, Clavin and Casey, both of whom had been drinking, were quarreling in front of the hotel near the open shaft, when Glavin slipped and fell headlong into the opening.

Thompson arrested Casey because he was quarreling with Glavin on the brink of the opening when he slipped, and took Del Valliere into custody because the bars around the opening were not in place, as ordered by a city ordinance. Del Valliere protested that he had fixed the bars before going down into the cellar and that some one else must have removed them.

HAD B. L. DUKE'S CHECKS.

Man Found Helplessly Intoxicated Said He Was Daniel Quigg.

A man who gave his name as Daniel Quigg, and said he was 59 years old and lived at Smith & McNeil's Hotel, was arraigned before Magistrate Steinert in the Tombs Court yesterday, charged with intoxication. The Magistrate discharged the prisoner.

Policeman Dwyer of the Church Street Station said he had found the man helplessly intoxicated at Church and Cortlandt Streets on Thursday afternoon and had taken him to the station for safe keeping. When he was searched at the police station there were found in his possession two checks for $1,000 each made out to bearer and signed Brodie L. Duke, letters addressed to Brodie L. Duke, and five fifty-dollar bills and some change in cash.

Brodie L. Duke is a brother of James B. Duke, the tobacco magnate. During December, 1904, and January last year he was confined in a sanitarium. He was committed on application of his son, B. Lawrence Duke, after having married a woman named Alice Webb, whom he has since sued for absolute divorce. He was released from the sanitarium after habeas corpus proceedings before Justice Gaynor of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn.

A RECORD STEERAGE LIST.

The Pennsylvania Brings in 2,779 Third-Class Passengers.

With 2,779 steerage passengers on board, a record number for a single ship, the Hamburg-American liner Pennsylvania reached this port yesterday. Of the newcomers nearly 2,000 were Russian refugees, who had been held at Hamburg for medical examination by the immigration authorities before being allowed to proceed to this country. They were a fine looking set of men and women, and most of them were permitted to land by the Ellis Island officials.

The Pennsylvania, despite the stormy weather prevailing on the Atlantic, was only one day overdue in reaching port. This delay was due to a blizzard into which the liner ran on Wednesday and which caused her to slow down. During the blizzard some of the steerage passengers became a little excited, but their fears were soon quieted by the officers.

Sullivanite Made Deputy Sheriff.

Joseph J. Cullen of the Eighth Assembly District, who is one of Florrie Sullivan's political lieutenants, was appointed a Deputy Sheriff yesterday by Sheriff Nicolas Hayes The appointment was made to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Louis Leavitt, who has gone into business.

AN ESCALATOR FOR HARLEM.

An escalator is to be built for the elevated station at Eighth Avenue and 125th Street. When it is installed the weary travelers will no more have to trudge up the extra long flight of stairs that are now freely objurgated by Western Harlem.

The Interborough Company signified its approval of the scheme some time ago, but the consent of property owners had to be got. The tracks and the station already make a large light-depriving mass, and the shopkeepers are not anxious to have the sky further obscured or the sidewalks further encroached upon. George Ehret, the brewer, owns the block on the east side of Eighth Avenue, between 124th and 125th Streets, and it is said that he is ready to give his consent. He stipulates that the escalator shall not take up more of the sidewalk than is already occupied by the stairs.

E. P. Bryan, Vice President of the Interborough, announced yesterday that he was having plans for the work prepared and that a start would be made as soon as possible.

The Otis Elevator Company, which put up the escalators at Twenty-third Street and Thirty-third Street on the elevated and at Manhattan Street on the Subway, will also construct this newest one. After the order is placed it will take ninety days to make as large an escalator as will be needed. Then it takes two or three weeks to install it. The total cost of the change will probably amount to $50,000. It is estimated that from 18,000 to 20,000 persons make the climb at 125th Street every day.

CALLS INTERBOROUGH THIEF.

Magistrate Crane Discharges One of the Road's Men and Attacks It.

"If the Interborough Railway could be made to give up property not legally theirs as quickly as this man has done, it would be a great blessing to the city."

Magistrate Crane said this in the Morrisania Court yesterday in dismissing the complaint against Joseph Healey, an electrical helper employed by the Interborough, who was charged with taking copper wire worth $1.80 from the company.

Magistrate Crane, speaking to Lawyer Douglas, representing the company, said:

"Hasn't the Interborough picked up millions of dollars' worth of other people's property, and nothing has ever been done about it? I believe this man is innocent, and discharge him."

Then he spoke about making the Interborough give up, and asked Lawyer Douglas:

"Don't you think I'm right about that?"

"I don't care to discuss the matter with your Honor," said the lawyer.

Asked afterward what he referred to in saying that the Interborough obtained property illegally, Magistrate Crane said: "Why, for one thing, they stole the Ninth Avenue line, and built a third track, and never paid the city a cent."

COAL COSTS CITY $1 MORE.

Controller Metz gave out figures yesterday for the coal purchased by the city in 1905 and the prices paid for it. He had the figures prepared in view of the recent bids received for coal for the different city departments and the high prices quoted.

According to the Controller's figures, the city, in all its departments, purchased 345,700 tons of coal last year at a total cost of $1,577,400. This was an average price of $4.56 a ton, irrespective of the borough in which it was to be delivered. The lowest price obtained this year by any department in any borough was $5.53 a ton.

GRAVE DIGGERS IN BROADWAY.

The body of Ernest Staples, a veteran yachtsman and a descendant of one of the oldest and best-known Knickerbocker families, will be buried this morning in the old family vault in St. Paul's historic churchyard, Broadway and Fulton Street. Mr. Staples was the son of the late William J. Staples. He died of pneumonia at New Rochelle last Monday.

The Staples vault is among the oldest in St. Paul's Cemetery. It is in the southeast corner of the churchyard, just beside the monument of Thomas Addis Emmet, nephew of the famous Irish patriot. It is but a few feet off Broadway, and the sight of grave diggers at work on the busiest thoroughfare in the United States attracted the attention of hundreds of passersby yesterday.

It was several hours before the covering of the vault was reached, and while the work was under way hundreds of people stopped and plied the grave diggers with questions.

The first burial in the vault took place in 1809, almost a century ago. The first body placed to rest there was that of John Staples. Sexton Wallace of St. Paul's said that there were few burials in the old churchyard these days. It has been almost a year since the last one, although in Trinity Churchyard the number often runs up to nine or ten a year.

"Of course the burials are only of the bodies of members of those families who have had vaults here for generations," he explained. "There is no space for sale now in St. Paul's churchyard, and there are now no interments in single graves."

SHIPPING AGENT IN TROUBLE.

Commissioner John N. Bogart of the Department of Licenses revoked yesterday the license of Pincus Katz, a shipping agent at 24 Norfolk Street. The charge was that Katz had inserted misleading advertisements in east side newspapers and had accepted money from men under false pretenses.

According to Commissioner Bogart, Katz advertised that for $6 he would obtain for a man the privilege of working his passage from New York to Antwerp on a cattle steamer. After the man paid $6 Katz gave him a ticket to Boston. This cost the agent $2. He also gave him a recommendation to a cattle steamship line which allowed men willing to work their way across a free passage to Liverpool.

In Boston the men had to take their chances as to being taken on the cattle steamers. If they were lucky enough to be engaged they were landed in Liverpool, and had to make their way to Antwerp as best they could.

Railway Yields to Bayonne Protests.

Officials of the New Jersey Central announced yesterday that the station at Avenue A, Bayonne, will not be abolished on April 1 as proposed. This action is the result of protests by residents and employes of large factories in the vicinity of the station.

Jerome Helping Bribery Inquiry.

Judge Seabury of the City Court announced yesterday that District Attorney Jerome was doing everything he could to help his investigation into charges of bribery made against a lawyer, who was said to have "fixed" jurors in street railroad cases. Judge Seabury said he would probably have a good deal of evidence by Monday next.

LINCOLN THE WRITER.

By EDWARD CARY.

SOME dozen years ago appeared "The Complete Works of Lincoln," edited by John G. Nicolay and John Hay, and published by the Century Company. A new edition is now brought out by the Francis D. Tandy Company of this city, in which are included "nearly 20 per cent. more of Lincoln's own writings, culled from numerous public and private collections," with explanatory notes to make the significance of the text clear, and with a series of "Introductions," articles by prominent writers—Greeley, Sumner, Bancroft, Beecher, Roosevelt, Gilder, and others. Two volumes have appeared, to the first of which Mr. Gilder's article on "Lincoln as a Writer" is prefixed; to the second a part of Mr. Roosevelt's address on "Lincoln and the Race Problem." The contents of these volumes are obviously sufficient to justify the new publication; though they do not change or tend to change the estimate of Lincoln, they add to our own knowledge of him. Especially they are attractive as material for studying Lincoln's work as Mr. Gilder has studied it, and the study is constantly more attractive and repaying.

⁂

MY own impression of the style of Lincoln is that its most marked, its most marvelous, characteristic is the evidence it gives on every page, whatever the subject, of singularly complete assimilation. It is not easy to trace his use of language to its sources, though it is not wholly impossible. Now and again a word, a phrase, of Shakespeare, and with about equal frequency one from the Bible occurs in quotation, but for one instance of the kind there are relatively many where like words or phrases occur, with no mark of their origin, with, apparently, no thought of their origin. There are such uses of metaphors from "Lear" in his correspondence, and a rather biting sarcasm at the expense of Judge Douglas in one of his speeches is tipped in the same manner. The careful reader perceives whence the very earnest writer or speaker has armed himself, but he feels that he has made the weapons he uses his own. He may have discovered them; he wields them as if he had invented them. They are employed—this is the main thing—for their fitness, not on account of their origin. One of the companions of his early manhood remembers Lincoln of Summer afternoons, stretched on the ground on his back, his feet braced well up on a tree trunk, shifting about with the changing sun to keep in the shade, and spending long hours poring over a dictionary. Another tells of his reading persistently the Bible, and Shakespeare, and Bunyan over and again. I imagine both habits had something the same fascination for him, and that the joy the great classics gave him was, in some degree, the same that glued his eyes to the dictionary—it was the joy of the born craftsman in the study of the possibilities of his tools. There is an analogy between these occupations and his known fondness for geometry, the latter exercising the faculty of reasoning as the former supplied the means for stating his conclusions and the arguments by which he sustained them. Possibly he owed something to the comparative ignorance, the almost illiteracy, of the rude society in which he grew up. It was a society curiously free from even the simplest literary conventions. It offered no temptations of undue applause for "fine" speech or writing. The men with whom Lincoln lived must have cared little, because they knew so very little, about anything remotely resembling literary style. They were men to deal with in practical fashion, as they sat on juries which the young lawyer sought to convince, or made up the audiences at political meetings, or even constituted the courts before which he pleaded. Lincoln had very urgent reasons for prevailing with them, and he used the very best means he could think of for the purpose, but eloquence, in any ordinary sense, did not for that use commend itself to him. This was partly, as I have suggested, because as a rule they did not care for it. But it was not wholly that. I think it was not chiefly that. I recall an address on Henry Clay in 1852, in which he quotes a rather turgid eulogy, "because I could not in any language of my own so well express my thoughts." So he was not wholly without a mistaken appreciation of style or respect for its influence on his hearers or readers. But in this very address there are passages which for simple impressiveness make the quoted eulogy seem almost ludicrous.

IT is noteworthy that with Lincoln the loftier the purpose, and the more earnest his pursuit of it, the more nearly perfect was the shining lucidity, the compelling directness, the swift, stately march of his style. Some of the passages that may well be the envy and despair of the "trained" writers occur in his "stump" debates with Douglas, for which undoubtedly he prepared the substance with the utmost care and deliberation, but in which the form must have been practically the suggestion of the moment, the prompt use of the language of which he had practical command. Here it was that the long, eager, delightful hours with the dictionary and the great English classics bore their ripe and precious fruit.

This habit and practice of assimilation went far beyond mere language, remarkable as were the results in this direction. It extended to the basic facts of every question with which he thought it worth while to deal. "What pregnant definitions," exclaims Mr. Emerson, "what unerring common sense, what foresight!" These were the final product of extraordinary labor. His definitions were pregnant because with infinite patience and determination he had mastered their subject matter, gathered his facts, analyzed and grouped them, searched them from every side, forced them ("compulsait" is the French phrase) to yield to him their utmost meaning. His common sense was unerring because it was severely and continually trained. His foresight was the outcome of almost incredible resolution in examination. Never was the faculty of taking infinite pains more richly rewarded. To Emerson—the idealist, with a touch, at least, of genius—it brought the impression of genius.

All of which, I suppose, comes in effect to this, that the ultimate secret of Lincoln's wonderful effectiveness as a writer and a speaker was his character, his insatiable hunger for the right, while his charm, his perennial appeal to the hearts of men, lay in the boundless kindness and love with which his own great heart steadfastly beat, and in deep native reverence for all that is best in human life. I recall a story that Noah Brooks used to tell of him. The spokesman of a party of clergymen had ended an address to the President with the hope "that God is on our side." "Let us hope," was Lincoln's simple response, "that we are on the side of God." It is that hope and the lifelong effort to realize it that shine through what Lincoln said and wrote and did, and keep and will keep his memory pure and bright.

LORD RANDY

Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill's Vindication of His Father as a Statesman and Party Leader.*

JOSEPH O'CONNOR.

IN this book Winston Churchill, a young, bold, and successful English politician, tells the story of his father, Lord Randolph Churchill, who, twenty years ago, was also young, bold, and, for a time, even more successful. It may be taken for granted that the son, largely in sympathy with the father's opinions and actions, though not of the same party, has written with enthusiasm, and that he has done all that may be done to vindicate his hero's fame and make good a claim in his behalf to high rank as a statesman; yet he has not apparently falsified the record nor hesitated to speak of faults and errors; and as a result he convinces the reader of his own sincerity and integrity and of Lord Randolph Churchill's seriousness of character, scope of influence, and singular ability, if not of his disinterestedness or his greatness.

Contemporary history from 1880 to 1890, together with press comments, political censure, and the ridicule of caricaturists, left the impression on most of us that Lord Randolph was eccentric, reckless, fickle, without principle or purpose in public life to cause him a moment's anxiety, eager only to say brilliant things and take startling chances, and willing to keep the front of the stage by adopting an absurd attitude if no better means availed; but this biography tends to dissipate all such notions and lift our conception of his career and our estimate of his character. The son may not persuade the world to think as he does, but he has rendered good service to his father's memory.

Moreover, his book has a general value in so far as it treats of the politics of Great Britain during a brief period active in partisan struggles if not notable for great achievements; for it gives us an inside view of the strange way in which a nation is governed. Both volumes, save the first two chapters and the last, are devoted to the party contests of ten years; and fully one-half the space is given up to the events of 1885 and 1886.

Nearly every one that cares to think of the English politics of that era has a vivid if not definite impression of how it came to pass that Lord Randolph Churchill won sudden popularity and power; but few have any conception of how he fell from power and popularity. That has always been something of a mystery; it is the crisis and the climax of the book; and if the mystery be not altogether cleared away it challenges all the more the reviewer's attention.

Lord Randolph and the Fourth Party.

Lord Randolph Churchill became prominent partly by virtue of his own courage and enterprise and partly through his leadership of what was known in Parliament as the Fourth Party. At the general election of 1880 Gladstone came into power with a majority over all possible opponents of 54, and the membership of the House of Commons was as follows: Liberals, 353; Conservatives, 237, and Home Rulers, 62. A clash after the formation of the Government rose out of the "Bradlaugh incident," a rather disreputable appeal to religious prejudice against the claim of Charles Bradlaugh that he might as a member make affirmation instead of taking the usual oath. In the fight against him Sir Henry Wolff took a leading part, Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Gorst acted with Sir Henry, and to them was afterward joined Arthur James Balfour. The success they achieved in worrying not only the Ministry but the leader of the Conservative opposition, Sir Stafford Northcote, suggested to those brilliant gentlemen the idea of a union not on any particular policy, but merely for offensive and defensive operations, in guerrilla warfare. Each was to help any other who might be attacked.

They were called, in derision at first, but afterward in earnest, the Fourth Party; they sat in a conspicuous place; though Conservatives, they were as ready to annoy the opposition as the Government; and as they were singularly able and active men, they soon commanded public attention. They were always present; they mastered the details of difficult measures, and, while destructive criticism was their delight, they were never backward in advocating constructive legislation. They had begun merely for the excitement of the game, but in playing for fun they won a reputation. Disraeli came over from the House of Lords to look at them in action, and he approved of their policy and probably suggested some of their clever parliamentary escapades. They became the soul of the opposition to the Gladstone Government; they strove to harass Sir Stafford Northcote in his position as Conservative leader and discredit him as a possible rival of Lord Salisbury; after the death of Disraeli they founded, on the occasion of the unveiling of his statue, the Primrose League, which numbered at the close of 1884 only 957 members, and has now enrolled 1,703,708 knights, dames, and associates; and finally, they made an attempt to remodel and popularize the organization of the Conservative Party. On the last issue, which was in opposition to Salisbury as acknowledged leader, Balfour broke away from his comrades. On some issues they were right, on some wrong; they were often unscrupulous in their methods, and if they did no great service to the people they were happy in serving their own political fortunes.

His Qualities as a Leader.

In the Fourth Party Lord Randolph Churchill was recognized as the leader after a time, and he won the position fairly. It gave him a representative prestige with the people and with the Conservative leaders; and he rose to meet his responsibilities, aiming at a thorough reorganization of the party. To meet new conditions he declared the necessity of a Tory Democracy; that is, a union of the old Tory spirit with a disposition to take up modern ideas; loyalty to the Crown, confidence in the people, and the determination to work for the good of both. He declared the Whig element in the Liberal Party, under Hartington, and the radical element, under Chamberlain, unfit to meet the duties and difficulties of the hour, which only conservatism, comprehending and advancing, could cope with. He asserted that the party was willing and competent to deal with the needs of democracy and the multiplying problems of modern life, and he regarded the Constitution as a flexible authority for the guidance and security of progress. He declared that the extension of the suffrage had put it in the power of the people to sweep away at their will existent institutions, but that it was safe to trust the common sense of the nation. He eulogized the Established Church, he advocated for a season fair trade, he denied that the conservatives of the nation represented merely the landowning class. In a word, he put his policy in a paradox, to wit: that Tory democracy meant "a government who in all branches of their policy and in all features of their administration are animated by lofty and by liberal ideas."

The declaration of party policies, brilliant action in the House of Commons, and masterly strategy in electoral contests did not satisfy Lord Randolph Churchill. He resolved to revolutionize the management of the Conservative Party and enhance his own power through the reform. There were in it two organizations, the Central Committee and the National Union of Conservative Associations. The committee was formed of members of the Carlton Club, appointed to investigate the causes of the defeat of the party in 1880, and continuing in office and assuming the direction of party affairs and the control of all funds contributed for party purposes. The Union was formed on the basis of popular representation, with branches all over the country, and included in its membership many active leaders in the great towns. It had been excluded from active participation in party management and left dependent on the committee for funds. Lord Randolph Churchill demanded the transfer of party management from a self-perpetuated body to one annually elected, and the change of control over the party funds from an irresponsible to a responsible body. Lord Salisbury opposed the scheme and the contest was bitter; but the younger politician won control of the council of the National Union and finally compelled a compromise, by which the Central Committee was abolished and reforms in the National Union were carried out, but the concession was made that Lord Salisbury was to remain chief of the Conservative Party and command loyal support. The result, so Winston Churchill claims, bore the character of an 'arrangement between two equals rather than the concession of the leader of a party to his subordinate, and the outcome was a sort of divided authority, not openly acknowledged, but none the less a reality.

The Crisis of 1885.

In 1884 the Liberal Government carried the Reform bill, greatly enlarging the suffrage of the country, but in June, 1884, met with defeat on an amendment to the budget, a matter of no political significance save that it was brought about by the defection of most of the Irish members who had been supporting the Liberal Ministry. Gladstone resigned, and Salisbury was constrained to form a Government in the face of a hostile majority, and he only consented on the promise of the Liberal leader that supply bills would not be opposed. At that time Lord Randolph Churchill was at the height of his popularity. He had been prominent in the debates on the Reform bill; he had returned from a visit to India, where he made a study of the condition of the country, and he had shone on every public occasion in brilliant contrast to Northcote, the Conservative leader in the House. Lord Salisbury asked him to enter the Cabinet as Secretary for India, and he again challenged the chief of the party by refusing to join the Government as long as Sir Stafford Northcote continued to lead in the House of Commons. Salisbury hesitated, but Sir Michael Hicks-Beach made the same condition in regard to his own acceptance of office; and Northcote's failure, doubtless because of a clever scheme of his rivals, to hold his party support at an emergency, decided the matter. It was arranged to promote him to the upper House as Lord Iddesleigh, Churchill became Secretary for India, and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach leader of the Conservatives in the House of Commons, while Sir Henry Wolff was made a Privy Councillor and Mr. Gorst Solicitor General. Again Churchill had got the better of his chief, put Northcote, the most prominent Conservative leader, next to Salisbury, out of his own pathway, and secured office for his friends.

For a time the relations of the Premier and his Secretary of State for India were cordial and confidential; but a clash came over the appointment of the Duke of Connaught to a high command in India. Queen Victoria wished to have a member of the royal family there, and Salisbury was of opinion that it would be good policy, as the people of India looked to a personal sovereign, could not conceive of parliamentary government, and might learn to love the Queen or her son, though incapable of comprehending the monarchy which does not actually govern. Churchill opposed the appointment on the ground that a royal Prince in command at Bombay would be a member of the Indian Council, and so take part in political affairs, and indirectly entangle the Crown in the administration. His position was finally approved by unanimous vote of the Cabinet Oct. 9, 1885. In the course of the negotiations in regard to the appointment, the Queen sent through the Premier to the Viceroy of India, Lord Dufferin, for an opinion on consultation with Sir Donald Stewart and Lord Roberts, as to making the Duke of Connaught commander at Bombay. Dufferin answered that Roberts and Stewart favored the appointment on military grounds, and he favored it on political grounds, believing that the presence of one of the Queen's sons in India would have a great influence for good.

After the interchange of these dispatches Salisbury asked leave from the Queen to submit them to Churchill as Secretary for India, and having permission, he wrote an explanatory letter to Churchill Aug. 14, 1885. On the same day the Secretary for India made answer that he was not aware of the possibility of the transmission of such dispatches without his knowledge, that such negotiations indicated that neither the Queen nor the Premier gave him their confidence, and therefore he offered his resignation. Again he had caught Salisbury at a disadvantage, as the Premier would not dare to bring the Queen into a controversy regarding public business. Salisbury was anxious to avoid an open rupture, and explained that the Queen had a right to communicate with the Viceroy, and he had done no more than aid her so far as the use of the official cipher was concerned.

Churchill refused to be mollified, suggesting that the course taken had reversed the positions of Secretary for India and Viceroy, making the former subordinate to the latter and subverting the constitutional principle. Lord Salisbury wrote again in humble vein, promising on his own part not to communicate with the Viceroy again. Churchill withdrew his resignation, and a dispatch was sent to Dufferin warning him that the Cabinet would not be likely to concede the appointment. Again the aspiring young politician had put his chief into a difficult position and compelled him to yield.

"The Ministry of Caretakers."

The first Salisbury Government, known as the "Ministry of Caretakers," held office, after the general election at the close of 1885, until the end of January, 1886, not being at any time supported by a majority of the House. The new Parliament was composed of 335 Liberals, 249 Conservatives, and 86 Home Rulers. Gladstone had been in no hurry to make his majority felt, and, indeed, proposed to Salisbury the policy of introducing a home rule measure and making the concession unanimous rather than partisan; but his opponent would not act on the proposition or declare his purpose in regard to it, and so the "caretakers" were turned out, as a result of a movement in favor of coercion, designed to provoke defeat on what they knew would be a popular issue. Gladstone took office and brought forward the first Home Rule bill. The result was dissension in his own party, an outbreak of popular dissatisfaction in England, and final defeat.

Winston Churchill describes in detail the contest over the Home Rule bill, the various intrigues among the Conservative leaders, the petty devices to irritate Gladstone and rouse public passion, the schemes of Chamberlain and his followers hesitating between revolt from their party and the possibility of compromise, and the stern opposition of Hartington and the old-fashioned Whigs; but it is apart from the reviewer's purpose to touch upon the story beyond saying that the narrative leaves the impression that the indignation wrought up in regard to the measure had in it very little sincerity, and that the men opposed to it were playing politics as a game and seeking power without regard to the good of either Ireland or the empire. It is enough for the point under consideration, the mystery of Lord Randolph Churchill's career, to say that he gained great glory in the fight against Gladstone, and when it was won his popularity seemed not only enhanced, but assured. The measure was thrown out by a vote of 341 to 311; Parliament was dissolved June 27, 1886; in the general election, which began in July, the Conservatives and their allies were successful, and Lord Salisbury formed his second Ministry.

As Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Lord Randolph Churchill was made leader in the House of Commons and Chancellor of the Exchequer, and next to the Premier he was the most conspicuous and the most powerful man in the Government. Indeed, his son does not hesitate to say that in his correspondence with Lord Salisbury on State affairs he maintained an attitude of equality in authority. As leader of the House, he was successful under very trying circumstances. As Chancellor of the Exchequer he might have been successful if he had been content to fill his own position and share in the general responsibilities of the Government. Lord Iddesleigh had been chosen for the position of Secretary for Foreign Affairs in making up the Cabinet, and Churchill criticised his conduct sharply, seeming to follow the veteran politician from one position to another with curious animosity. He made an address outlining the Government policy, and he undertook as financial officer to exercise authority over his associates in the Ministry. He had pledged himself to "peace, retrenchment, and reform," and when he began to prepare his budget during the parliamentary recess, he insisted upon the reduction of the estimates of the Secretary for War and the First Lord of the Admiralty.

They maintained that the amounts required were necessary for the national defense, and Salisbury said that the condition in Europe was critical and the Government should not endanger the country by neglecting reasonable military precautions, that the Ministers intrusted with the maintenance of the army and the navy were responsible; and that the people would have little patience with any failure to meet an emergency. Churchill intimated to the Premier that he might have to choose between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the heads of the War and the Naval Departments. The former intimated to Churchill that he would himself retire rather than yield; and the latter begged him to wait with patience and not force the issue, as "Salisbury is getting to the position where he will be pressed no more."

Dec. 20, 1886, Churchill was summoned to Windsor and had an interview with the Queen, who showed him "most gracious favor and kept him long in conversation." Before going to bed he wrote to Lord Salisbury a letter of resignation, embodying the purpose of resigning in two sentences of a long argument on the matter at issue. Dec. 22 Salisbury answered, reiterating his original opinion and closing with an expression of regret; but nothing more definite than that. The same night Churchill answered, assuming this as an acceptance of his resignation, and then went down to The Times office and gave out the news of his resignation for publication. The next morning the Queen read in the newspaper that a member of the Cabinet had written a letter of resignation while he was her guest, and that he had authorized the publication of the resignation, not only before she had accepted it, but before she knew of it.

Superseded by Goschen.

It may be said that this incident closed the brief period of Lord Randolph Churchill's political ascendency; for it dismayed his friends, delighted his enemies, rendered those contemplating alliances with him distrustful, and shook the public confidence in the stability of his character. His biographer seeks to explain, if not justify, his action, and his theory is that his father and Salisbury stood for entirely different policies and philosophies in statecraft, and final harmony between them was out of the question; that they had acted together, but still differed on many important issues; that the former was sincere in the position he took; that he expected to prevail, and that he erred in not making due preparation before he forced the fight. It is denied that he had any ambitious scheme which he hoped to forward. Is that so unlikely? He had beaten Salisbury in a succession of contests, and to overcome him once more meant to supplant him. The Conservative Party was in power, not because of its own strength, but because of the support of certain Whigs under the leadership of Hartington and certain Liberals under the leadership of Chamberlain; and if Salisbury refused to be bullied again the resignation would bring on a Cabinet crisis in which the Premier would find the task of reconstruction difficult. To Churchill, in case of Salisbury's failure, the task might be easy. It is no secret that he intended to be Premier, and that he felt it necessary to make haste in the achievement. On his visit to Windsor we are told that he was inexplicably gay. There is a superstition that at times a man doomed to calamity is given to strange joy, and laughs at he knows not what; and that seemed like his mood. But it is more natural to suppose that he laughed in anticipation of triumph.

Salisbury succeeded in reconstructing his Cabinet by the appointment of Goschen to succeed Churchill; and it is said that no other man could have saved the situation. In the consequent changes Salisbury took the Foreign Office and Iddesleigh was left out of the Ministry and was unaware of the fact until the newspapers announced it.

He went to Downing Street to see the Premier, greatly grieved, no doubt, over the slight; was taken with heart failure in the anteroom, and died at Salisbury's feet. Churchill wrote a letter of regret and sympathy to his former chief, who said in answer that he had never before seen any one die and the sight shocked him; moreover, the dead man had been his political comrade for thirty years, and the calamity came when the surviving friend had for the first time seriously, though inadvertently, wounded the dying man's feelings. He added:

> As I looked upon the dead body stretched before me I felt that politics was a cursed profession.

For many reasons he might well say that, but, doubtless, he remembered that the writer of the letter of condolence, who confessed a full share in making Lord Iddesleigh's closing years unhappy, had driven him to do things he disliked, and the memory was so bitter as to find expression in the fierce condemnation of politics. That condemnation suggests the warning of Lord George Hamilton already quoted: "Salisbury is getting to the position where he will be pressed no more." Churchill ventured too far. Over many gateways in life there is written, as over the doors in the castle Spenser pictured: "Be bolde, be bolde, and everywhere be bolde." But there comes a chamber with the warning, "Be not too bold."

BUSINESS LETTERS.

THE old-fashioned style of letter writing, which Samuel Richardson brought to perfection, has disappeared, and the usual letter of to-day is without form and void. Mr. L. E. Ludwig, however, appreciates that, however formless the social letter may be allowed to be, the business letter of necessity should be shaped and polished. In "Scientific Business Letter Writing," (Publicity Publishing Company, New York, $1,) he sets forth certain rules for business letter writing that are both pertinent to the subject and applicable mutatis mutandis to social correspondence as well.

> Business correspondence is talking on paper. Its purpose is to create a favorable impression of the house it represents, and to secure, hold, and increase trade. That applies as well to social as to business letter writing. The letter must have individuality and sincerity; it must arouse interest and be convincing. * * * A correspondent must have a firm belief in what he says.

Coming down to forms, Mr. Ludwig urges that writers form a style—"a pleasing, natural style, breezy, optimistic, cheerful, confident, cordial but not familiar, dignified but not stiff," is his description of the ideal. He describes some good forms of letters, points out that "no phrase, clause, sentence, or paragraph can be adopted generally with success. The whole idea of scientific letter writing is to write each letter in a personal direct style"; sets forth some excellent rules for punctuation and composition, and at the end gives a chapter on British business correspondence, which differs considerably from our own in its style. His book should be valuable in the field for which it was planned; and if, in default of a better, it were used as a textbook of social correspondence, the letters of the day would not be so tedious and vapid as they are but too apt to be.

American Homes and Gardens.

American Homes and Gardens for March (Munn & Co., New York) offers the expected beautiful photographs of houses, interiors and exteriors, and discusses various topics of interest to the widening circle of country residents—the culture of the rose, a new irrigation system, the breeding of pheasants and their value on the country estate, and others. The number is excellent.

CHILDREN OF THE POOR

It is easy enough to describe a book as epoch-making, but such a description is too apt to be false, unless, like the only safe prophesies, it be made long after the event. But Mr. Spargo's book ought to be epoch-making; it ought to mark the turning of the tide in the treatment of children. It is a plain, unvarnished statement of the manner of life of the children of the poor, and of the results of such living on their health and their morals, and a carefully planned series of remedial suggestions. We can think of no one who, of full age, would not be benefited by reading the book; even the employers who now make the child life of the poor what it is might, even though but temporarily, be affected by it, and be moved toward better conditions.

Mr. Spargo's book is in five sections, dealing, respectively, with the poor baby, the school child, the working child, remedies, and the transplanting to the country of tenement children. The first of these is entitled "The Blighting of the Babies," a study of the very little children of the poor. The burden and blight of poverty fall most heavily upon the child; "experts say that the baby of the tenement is born physically equal to the baby of the mansion," but, underfed or badly fed, neglected, badly housed and improperly clad, the child of poverty is terribly handicapped at the very start. It has not an even chance to begin life with. The author continues:

> To the child as to the adult the principal evils of poverty are material ones—lack of nourishing food, of suitable clothing, and of healthy home surroundings. It is not, however, the occasional hunger, the loss of a few meals, that is of importance; it is the chronic underfeeding day after day, month after month, year after year. Poverty and Death are grim companions. Wherever there is poverty the death rate is high, and rises higher with every rise of the tide of want and misery. In London Bethnal Green's death rate is nearly double that of Belgravia; in Paris the poverty-stricken district of Ménilmontant has a death rate twice as high as that of the Elysée; in Chicago the death rate varies from about 12 per 1,000 in the wards where the well-to-do reside to 37 per 1,000 in the tenement wards.

Rickets are the ordinarily visible results of undernourishment; but they predispose their victims to measles, whooping cough, bronchitis; and if a child weathers the storms of childhood despite rickets, the consequences pursue the adult. Proper feeding is Mr. Spargo's suggested remedy—proper milk. One year at Randall's Island, in this city, 524 babies out of 1,181 died; the next year Pasteurized milk was used, and only 255 babies died! There, says Mr. Spargo, in effect, is the indicated cure—"clean milk," and enough of it.

On the subject of the care of children, Mr. Spargo says:

> These "little mothers" have been much praised and idealized, until we have become prone to forget that their very existence is a great social menace and crime. * * * Thirty-five years ago Paris was besieged by Germany's vast army. Industry was paralyzed and factories were closed down, with the result that there was the most frightful poverty due to unemployment. But because the mothers were forced to stay at home, and were thus enabled to give their children their personal care instead of trusting them to the "little mothers," the mortality of infants decreased by 40 per cent.

Mr. Spargo's chapter on "The School Child" is practically a continuation of his first chapter; it discusses the subject of starvation among the school children, and declares that "not less than 2,000,000 school children of the United States are the victims of poverty which denies them common necessities, particularly adequate nourishment." Shocking are the facts collected by the author. We expect the babies to die, there is nothing new in learning that, but that the children in the schools are starving in greater or less degree—that at least 10 per cent. of them in this city go hungry daily and nightly—that is something to startle one. In Norway and in Vercelli, Italy, every school child is fed, whatever the parents' means, and in such procedure Mr. Spargo sees the only hope of reducing the tremendous factor of starvation among the poor. Good food makes stronger children, it also helps them to learn, it makes better pupils in every way.

Chapter III. of the book deals with "The Working Child." It is probably the most awful in the book. "Children have always worked," says the author; "but it is only since the reign of the machine that their work has been synonymous with slavery." The policy of laissez faire was responsible for the "inferno of child torture" of nineteenth century England, says Mr. Spargo, and that policy has its advocates in the United States to-day.

When the cry of laissez faire is raised, despite the fact that children of 4 years of age are found at work in the canning factories of New York State, and little girls of 5 and 6 years are found working at night in Southern cotton mills, it is not too much to assume that only a vigilant and constantly protesting public conscience protects us from conditions as revolting as any experienced in the black night of England's orgy of greed. Capital has neither morals nor ideals; its interests are always and everywhere expressible in terms of cash profits. Capital in the United States in the twentieth century calls for children as loudly as it called in England a century ago.

If all the people of this great Republic could see little Annetta Fachini, 4 years old, working with her mother making artificial flowers, as I saw her in her squalid tenement home at 11 o'clock at night, I think the impression upon their hearts and minds would be far deeper and more lasting than any that whole pages of figures could make. The frail little thing was winding green paper around wires to make stems for artificial flowers to decorate ladies' hats. Every few minutes her head would droop and her weary eyelids close, but her little fingers still kept moving—uselessly, helplessly, mechanically moving. Then the mother would shake her gently, saying: "Sleep not, Annetta! Only a few more—only a few more." And the little eyes would open slowly, and the tired fingers once more move with intelligent direction and purpose.

The mill children, the glass factory boys, the mine boys, are studied by Mr. Spargo. One comes across unexpected facts in his book; for instance, he measured the distance run—not walked—each night by a "carrying-in boy" in a glass furnace; it was twenty-two miles! It was a glass factory owner who said to Mr. Spargo that while he knew machinery was as good as boys he did not care to "bother with machines so long as he could get boys."

"The manufacturers of America to-day would have no difficulty about securing machinery, much of it already invented, if the employment of children should be forbidden. But, generally speaking, they will not of themselves make the change." Mr. Spargo alludes in passing to "the State of Pennsylvania alone—the State which enslaves more children than any other," and one wonders if there is any relationship between that fact and Pennsylvania's position as the eldest child of Republican protection, if indeed there is any connection between the child slavery described in this book and the operation of the tariff. Is it too much to say that there is? It is the protected manufacturers who most loudly demand that their industries shall be exempted from such child labor laws as there are—who in New York demanded the right to employ children of four years of age, in the South have had the laws repealed which forbade the employment of six-year-old children at night, that sheeting might be made for the Chinese Army.

Mr. Spargo's remedies are many. As regards the babies, they include State or Federal supervision of infant food manufacture; meals for school children, medical inspection of schools, a minimum standard for working children established by Federal law, permitting each State to raise the standard, with special laws for large cities where the ordinary country-made laws are inadequate. These are good suggestions. Even in part adopted, they would abolish much of the wrong and ignorance from which the children of the poor suffer, and would enfranchise millions whose inarticulate cry is repeated in this book.

Economics.

ESSAYS ON ECONOMICS. By H. Stanley Jevons. New York: The Macmillan Company.

Novelty of treatment rather than of matter is the attraction of this book. The author assumes that nothing is known regarding utility, labor, exchange and capital, rent, and production, and endeavors to arrive at the laws regulating them by reason, rather than by experience or authority. Especially novel is the attempt to treat these topics by the diagrammatic method, like Euclidian problems. Such methods have their attraction for the few rather than for the many. The taste for diagrams and demonstrations in the manner of mathematics is not general. Moreover, the method has faults of its own in this connection. The diagrams necessarily are illustratory merely, since propositions incapable of mathematical demonstration from their very nature can only be stated in this form and cannot be proved. The book is of high quality, and deserves a success at least of curiosity as to this manner of treatment. But it cannot be candidly said that Mr. Jevons has repeated his father's success in this line, nor that he has woven into his text the human interest which makes Henry George's or Sidney Reeve's volumes interesting even to those who dissent from their doctrines.

An All-Essay Magazine.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Mr. Munsey has just put a new magazine upon the news stands, and it is reported that Mr. McClure is about to do the same. To any other magazine publishers who are looking for a new idea in magazine publishing I should like to suggest, through the medium of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, an All-Essay Magazine. Such a magazine as I contemplate would eschew com- "timely" articles, book reviews, and notes on current events. It would contain nothing except essays, preferably on literary subjects, but also on historical, sociological, scientific, and miscellaneous subjects, and others just rambling and delightful on any subject or none at all. We have magazines devoted exclusively to the short story, magazines devoted exclusively to timely articles, magazines devoted exclusively to current events, magazines that are devoted almost exclusively to illustrations, and magazines that are devoted exclusively to book reviews, besides many that give their readers all of these things mixed in various proportions, but we have no magazine devoted exclusively to the essay and very few magazines that publish essays that do not partake more or less of the nature of the timely article. I believe that there are enough people in this country who would appreciate a magazine of this kind to make it a paying venture. I should be pletely short stories, illustrations, and glad to know the opinion of other readers of THE REVIEW on this subject.

MARCH

JURGIS RUDKUS AND "THE JUNGLE."

A Dispassionate Examination of Upton Sinclair's Application of Zola's Methods to a Chicago Environment.*

INASMUCH as Mr. Upton Sinclair's co-workers in the field of Socialistic propaganda have acclaimed his book as "a great work," as a power that must make itself felt, "so simple, so true, so tragic, and so human," it becomes the plain duty of the reviewer to examine "The Jungle" with a candid and open mind, in order that its quality as literature and its efficiency as polemic may be fairly appraised. These young gentlemen who have so bravely come forward to assist in upsetting the established social order as a preparation for the Socialistic millenium on earth are all interesting. They burn with the zeal, the enthusiasm, and the full confidence of youth. Maturity has not moderated their buoyant trust in themselves; they are not plagued by the doubts that come with years nor by those habits of inquiry and prudent examination that experience inculcates. They have unbounded confidence in each other. They work in union and in harmony, without petty jealousies, unstintedly praising each other's productions, all for the advancement of the common cause.

MR. SINCLAIR in "The Jungle" has given to the world a close, a strikin, and, we may say, in many ways a brilliant study of the great industries of Chicago beginning with the stockyards, [illegible] the characters of his story as sub[illegible] on which to demonstrate the effect upon human beings of the fierce struggle for work, for wages, and for life in those vast establishments. The "hero" or principal subject is Jurgis Rudkus, a Lithuanian immigrant, who with a group of neighbors and his kinsfolk has come across the seas to seek work and the living chance in the great Republic. He gets his first job in the "killing beds" of the great packing house of the Beef Trust. He is big, broad-shouldered, good-natured, full of energy, and with a tremendous capacity for work. He earns something more than a living wage, and he and his relatives lay by a little something every week until he feels able to marry the girl of his heart, who has come from Lithuania with her family. Their wedding feast cost them a hundred dollars—about one-third of his year's earnings. He and his Lithuanian friends are cheated right and left—by their own countrymen as well as by the natives. They buy a little house on the installment plan, paying over to the smooth-tongued agent nearly every cent of their savings. This all goes, of course, when Jurgis loses his job and they fall behind in the payments. Things go from bad to worse. Jurgis gets and loses one job after another, sometimes by the shutting down of work, sometimes through a disabling accident, until finally he is "blacklisted" for an assault upon a foreman who had misused his wife, Ona. Then things go very badly indeed with Jurgis. His wife dies. He begins to drink heavily, becomes sulky and sour-tempered, haunts the saloons, becomes engaged in frequent brawls, and finally, when his little boy dies, he loses hope and takes to the road as a tramp.

The progress of this victim of industrial oppression, as Mr. Sinclair depicts it, is rapidly and steadily downward. First the packing house, then the fertilizer works, then the harvester works, then the steel works; afterward he is a tramp, then a tunnel digger, then a thief, then a highwayman, later on a beggar, and after a brief and exciting experience as a "scab" workingman and an agent of the Beef Trust in oppressing organized labor, he enters Republican politics in the City of Chicago. This is evidently Mr. Upton Sinclair's idea of the progressive downward course. His pictures of the successive environments in which Jurgis is placed are vivid, full of local color, and often painted with much skill. They are without exception hideous. The language Mr. Sinclair employs is appropriate to the scene, the action, and the characters of his drama. For the gross words Dante occasionally employs in the "Inferno" the commentators make the excuse that as the action passes in Hell and the personages are many of them devils, uniform elegance and propriety of speech is not to be expected. The language of the stockyards, as employed by Mr. Sinclair, is often quite unquotable. The experienced reader will at once perceive that Mr. Sinclair has taken Zola for his model. The likeness is more than striking—it fairly forces itself upon the attention of the reader. The method is the same, and, although Mr. Sinclair writes no preface, it is evident that he expects his story to be taken as a scientific study of industrial conditions and his characters as "human documents." Zola with great solemnity and insistence forced upon his readers the scientific aspect of his work. Naturalism was the true method, the scientific spirit the only one in which to approach the study of social facts. He asked the world to accept him as a savant, as an investigator, a demonstrator. Now, between Mr. Upton Sinclair and Zola there is a wide interval. Zola was in his way a man of genius, while Mr. Sinclair, for the present at least, must be content to be set down as merely clever. But the shallowness of the scientific pretensions of both is equally evident. Zola forgot that his work was not done in the laboratory, but in the realm of the imagination; that his materials were not exhibited subject to the operation of natural law, but behaving as it occurred to his fertile invention to make them behave. As a presentation of industrial facts and social conditions Mr. Sinclair's work is open to that objection. Like Zola, he studies but one aspect, and that the meanest, the most hideous, and the most vicious and painful of the phases of human life and conduct that pass under his examination. Virtue, generosity, good impulses, morality, and honesty have their place and exert their influence in the stockyard population, no doubt. They do not attract the attention or engage the pen of Mr. Sinclair.

SO the impression left upon the reader's mind by the descriptive part of his book is unsatisfactory. His pictures are not convincing. His work becomes mechanical in the carrying out, largely, no doubt, because of his attempt to make the naturalistic methods of Zola serve the purpose of demonstrating facts and conditions which he believed to exist and which he was determined that his public should believe to exist. The concluding chapters of "The Jungle," in which the saving grace of Socialism is made to do its beneficent work upon Jurgis, are sufficient to put the reader quite out of the mood of belief and assent. If a biologist should exhibit to his class a robust and adult frog in his normal condition, and then, after having to some extent skinned and dissected the animal so as to lay bare his vital organs, exhibiting the ranuncular reflexes by applications of electricity, of divers chemicals, of heat, and of cold—if he should then apply to the frog some elixir of life of which he was the appointed "press agent," and present him to view once more sound and whole as an efficient and contented frog, the class would have to have a very unquestioning faith in the Professor if it did not at once suspect some hocus pocus that would altogether remove the experiment from the domain of science.

JURGIS is Mr. Upton Sinclair's frog. The frightful experiences through which he is made to pass as a workingman, ground down, oppressed, and brutally treated; as a drunkard, as a tramp, as a highway robber, and as a beggar, would not only have crushed his spirit, but would have put him beyond hope of regeneration. These cruelties would have beaten out and these poisons would have eaten out the whole soul of the man. Yet one day, as was his wont, having taken refuge from bitter cold and snow in a hall where a meeting was in progress for which no admission fee was charged, and having, as he had done upon previous occasions, fallen into an alcoholic drowse, he was aroused by the voice of a beautiful young woman, who implored him to sit up and listen. He listened. What he heard was a discourse by a Socialist, depicting the wretchedness of humanity as society is now organized, and setting forth the beauties and the beneficence of the Socialistic régime. Mr. Sinclair gives up several pages of his book to the Socialist's speech. Jurgis had hardly heard the word Socialism before, but that speech made him think. It was the dawn of hope in a bosom long occupied by black despair. The Socialists took him up. He learned to read and they supplied him with tracts. He attended many other meetings. The angel of the new faith guided his steps somehow to a Socialist who kept a hotel and who gladly employed Jurgis as a porter. Coming to a fuller knowledge of the doctrine and learning to talk, he became a Socialist speaker himself. Then, at the end of the book, comes a scene where an unbelieving Eastern magazine editor, a religious zealot named Lucas, with the beautiful young woman who had roused Jurgis from his stupor, and Dr. Schliemann, a great apostle of Socialism, had a symposium upon the subject.

HERE Jurgis heard the gaunt Swede, Schliemann, expound the doctrines of the Socialists. He listened to a discourse upon the wastes of competition, the losses of industrial warfare, the vices of the frivolous rich, and the sufferings of the helpless poor; upon "the plotting and lying and babbling, the blustering and bragging, the screaming egotism of the hurrying and worrying." In the "co-operative commonwealth" all these wrongs and evils disappear. There would be "little free communities" where wage slavery would be abolished:

> Society would break up into independent, self-governing communities of mutually congenial persons; examples of which at present were clubs, churches, and political parties. After the revolution all the intellectual, artistic, and spiritual activities of men would be cared for by such "free associations"; romantic novelists would be supported by those who liked to read romantic novels, and impressionist painters would be supported by those who liked to look at impressionist pictures—and the same with preachers and scientists, editors and actors and musicians. If any one wanted to work or paint or pray, and could find no one to maintain him, he could support himself by working part of the time. That was the case at present, the only difference being that the competitive wage system compelled a man to work all the time to live, while, after the abolition of privilege and exploitation, any one would be able to support himself by an hour's work a day.

War being abolished, and "the ferocious barbarities of capitalism" suppressed, the toil of every man would produce utilities and the boundless resources of science would be availed of for labor-saving. The dishes would be washed, the cows milked, the potatoes dug by electricity. The foundation principle of the co-operative Commonwealth is ease and pleasant living. Of course "long skirts" would go, "the scientific breeding of men and women" would begin—also, "the establishing of divorce by mutual consent." Free love seems to be inseparable from Socialism.

Until Jules Verne and H. G. Wells have been shown up by serious men of science an inquiry into the co-operative Commonwealth of Mr. Upton Sinclair would be premature and profitless. Why assume a carping attitude toward a beautiful dream? Mr. Sinclair, or the other Socialists who have dreamed the dream before him, have created an elysium of laziness. One hour a day! We feel sure, however, that in that ideal system two personages would be forced to work overtime—the devil and the barkeeper.

Satan will find mischief still
For idle hands to do.

The greatest defect in the reasoning—or the dreaming—of all Socialists is that they put most of their carts before their horses. They assume that the unequal distribution of wealth is the cause of the inequality of condition, quite overlooking the fact that inequality of capacity is a somewhat important factor in bringing about the disparity in earthly possessions. They assume, too, that men and women need only to be emancipated from wage slavery and the barbarities of capitalism to become all at once high-minded, virtuous, generous, forbearing, honest, enamored of the Ten Commandments, and eager to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them. Jurgis is an example of this regeneration.

Mr. Sinclair's little homogeneous communities would all contain within themselves the germs of their own destruction. If his Socialistic dream should come true, if the régime of one hour's work and twenty-three hours' loafing should be successfully established, human progress would stop and the race would begin to slip down the steep rather faster than it has climbed up. He makes Schliemann talk of "a magazine for the purpose of interpreting and popularizing the gospel of Friedrich Nietzsche," which is altogether funny, since Nietzsche's "gospel" teaches his sectaries to despise the lowly and exalt the mighty, that modern morality is a morality for slaves, that supermanhood can be attained only by freeing the fittest from the trammels of a social system that has been organized by very common people for very common people.

WE lay aside "The Jungle" with a conviction that it is not, after all, a great and epoch-making work. We are afraid Mr. Sinclair has not been divinely appointed to be a deliverer of Labor lying prostrate. Somehow, in his tones the ear continuously catches the false note. There are spurious coins in every handful of his mintage. We cannot help being skeptical about his sincerity. His art is too obvious, his devices too trite, and he has too much joy in them. His delight is not so much in the thing he says as in the way he says it, which is often astonishingly clever. There is nothing spontaneous in the book save his imaginative descriptions of human disappointment and misery. In that he is at his best. He has been at pains to "get up" his facts thoroughly, and his realism is often striking. But he seems to write not from the heart but from the head, with that facile glitter of contrast and exaggeration that is characteristic of the school of young writers that have set out to deliver us from the evils of capitalism. Mr. Upton Sinclair does not remind the reader of John Knox or of Martin Luther, or of the leaders in the Abolition movement. He has not written a second "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Moreover, when we contemplate the youthful figure of the author of "The Jungle" upon his enormous scaffolding, where he has set himself a work in which his forces must be measured against the giant forces and unchanging laws of the universe, we are moved to compare his presumptions with those of the American school-ma'am, let us say from the State of Indiana, who, equipped by the study of the works of our great thinkers, like Gen. Lew Wallace and the late E. P. Roe, and clad in her neat gingham gown, goes out to Japan to convert to her own religious faith a people of high intellectual capacity, whose faith antedates hers by several thousand years. Like her, Mr. Upton Sinclair seems to lack the sense of the relation and of the sufficiency of means to the end.

"The Man Talk Bird."

Philip Verrill Mighels, in his newest book, to be published by the Harpers on March 8, has gone beyond the field which he exploited in "Bruvver Jim's Baby" and written an animal story. The title is "Chatwit: the Man Talk Bird," and the hero is a magpie—a magpie who was an ambitious bird and longed for human speech. The story shows how Chatwit's ambition was realized and pictures the terror and disapproval which his unnatural accomplishment inspired among the others of the feathered tribe. The scene, by the way, is Nevada, and the book is furnished with illustrations in the shape of drawings by the author's own hand. It seems he was a maker of pictures before he began to make books.

THE LAND UP NORTH.

Eleventh Volume of "The History of North America" Treats of Canada and Britain's Possessions Near the Arctic.*

IT is the misfortune of Canada to have been so overshadowed by her great southern neighbor that her history has been generally neglected, especially her history in the nineteenth century. Many historians have had considerable to say about Canada under France, but with Wolfe's victory over Montcalm general interest in the country somehow seems to have waned. No Parkman has arisen to fascinate us with the story of British Canada. A hundred know of Champlain and La Salle to one who has heard of Mackenzie or Lord Durham. Dr. Munro's narration of later Canadian history is therefore particularly valuable, because to most readers the subject is so unknown.

Prof. Guy Carleton Lee, the editor of this history, justly emphasizes Canada's history in saying, "It is as much a part of the history of North America as is that of the United States." The author does not claim originality. The sources have been worked over carefully by scholars, and upon the results of their labors he has based his work. It was much more important to acquaint us with the salient points in Canadian history than to attempt any extensive investigations.

THE history of the country that was New France and is now the Dominion of Canada may be conveniently divided into two parts—the old régime, down to 1760, and the period from that date to the present. After a chapter on "Discovery and Exploration," dealing with events familiar in a general way to most readers of history, Dr. Munro shows that government of the French Colony by a commercial company was the leading feature of the years 1627-63. As in the case of the English chartered colonies, such government was found unsatisfactory, and in 1663 Canada became a Crown colony. The period from 1663 to 1760 was marked by the great duel between France and England. Paternalism was the dominant note in the policy of the mother country. "Rarely, if ever, has a sovereign had the interests of a colony so much at heart as had Louis Quatorze. According to his light, he strove earnestly to advance the welfare of New France. But his light was too often so faint as to mislead rather than guide. His paternalism was of the sort that serves to stunt rather than to develop; to starve rather than to nourish." So the author writes the epitaph of New France.

Directly after the conquest by Great Britain and before the conclusion of the seven years' war, Canada was under military administration. As soon as possible after peace this gave place to civil government. In 1774 the Quebec act, which formed the Constitution of the province for the next seventeen years, was passed by Parliament. Apart from the clause which included in Quebec what was later the Northwest Territory of the United States, and gave great offense to the southern colonies now on the eve of revolution, the act showed political sagacity, and conciliated the French Canadians.

The next great constitutional landmark was the Canada act of 1791, providing for the division of the provinces into Lower and Upper Canada. By vesting legislative power in the hands of elective and appointive Houses and making them coequal, the act contained the germ of its own overthrow. Dr. Munro gives the history of Canada under this act in considerable detail. In both provinces great friction developed between Executive and Legislature. Reform parties were led in Lower and Upper Canada by Papineau and Mackenzie, respectively. Agitation led to the unsuccessful revolt of 1837, which gave the coup de grace to the act of 1791.

IN 1838, one of the greatest personalities in Canadian history appeared. Lord Durham was sent out as Governor General in the provinces with special powers to inquire into and adjust difficulties. Coming into conflict with the home authorities, he soon resigned. His fame is due mainly to the remarkable insight he gained into the affairs of the provinces. The elaborate report on colonial conditions which he made is a great state paper. He described the discontent and suggested plans for its removal. He dwelt upon the racial problem in Lower Canada, and maintained that the separation of the provinces in 1791 had been a grave error. After outlining the feud between Executive and Legislature the report said that irresponsibility of Ministers was the great source of evil. It proposed direct ministerial responsiblity and a federation of the provinces. The report was considered in Parliament, and in 1840 an act was passed providing for a union of the provinces. Under this Canada was governed till 1867, and the responsibility of Ministers was recognized. As to Durham's part in the political regeneration Dr. Munro says: "A confederated dominion reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific is one enduring monument to his political sagacity, for to him the beginnings of union were unquestionably due."

The present Dominion dates from the British North American act passed by Parliament in 1867. The Maritime Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were confederated with the Canadas. The Federal Executive was placed in the hands of a Governor General appointed by the Crown, assisted by a Privy Council, as in England. Legislative power was committed to a Parliament consisting of a Senate, chosen by the Crown; an elective House of Commons. Each of the provinces was to have its local administration, and the respective powers of the federal and provincial authorities were defined by the act.

⁂

SUCH were the great landmarks in Canada's political history. The author, believing that history is not alone "past politics," gives us a narrative of the social and economic development of the people as well. "The hopes of contemporary Canada," he says, "are centred in her great Territories of the Northwest. And with good reason, for this vast expanse possesses almost boundless possibilities. It is there more than in any other part of the world that Britain is today 'making empire' in its truest sense."

TOWARD THE LIGHT.

THEY were rich Americans in London, climbing the social ladder. "Were you," asked the pretty Chicago widow, addressing her plain but ambitious step-daughter, "ever kissed?" With some embarrassment the younger woman admitted that she never had been. "It's being done a good deal, you know," replied the step-mamma, "and you're very keen on good form." The saying is a sort of keynote to the decidedly clever little satire, by Harrison Garfield Rhodes, called "The Lady and the Ladder," (Doubleday, Page & Co.) It is a satire of appreciation, by the way, not of depreciation; and the theme is the infinite adaptability of a certain kind of American woman—her capacity for doing in England as the English do, for soaking up an ancient civilization and an insular accent, and leaving behind utterly the manners, the "r's," and the minor moral attitudes of the republican West. The story itself is trifling enough, and the author's manner is frivolous; but it is a very true story—there's no doubt about that—and Mrs. Whiting of Chicago, though lightly sketched, is a very real American woman.

The business of the book is to trace her evolution—by a series of flashlights, as it were—from a comfy, if conventional, little nest in a Chicago suburb to a mansion in Curzon Street, London. The evolution is gradual, of course, and its track leads through several entirely respectable matrimonial ventures, the South of France, and the houses of needy aristocrats. The attraction of the book lies in the flashlights—a tea at Cannes, an adventure with toothpicks aboard a yacht, a conversation with a fortune hunter or an old friend from America, a cakewalk in the presence of a Very Important Personage, in the author's knack for hitting off a situation in a few words of dialogue, in the good humor of the whole thing, in the utterly unexpected nature of the ending, and in a certain lovable quality with which the scheming widow is invested. Her schemes, to tell the truth, are mere instructive reachings after the soft and silken in life.

A PICTURE OUT OF FOCUS

IT depends largely on skill in focusing," said the photographer, speaking of his art to an amateur. "To be sure, interesting effects are sometimes gained by slight purposed divergences from the rule, but if these are too great, the image will be blurred and hopeless."

Joaquin Miller's last book, "The Building of the City Beautiful," ought by virtue of its title to appeal to every one. But whoever tries to read it is beset by a feeling of disappointment. The image is wavering; the would-be picture is out of focus.

To dream of a day when cities "founded on mud and malaria" shall be no more, when trees shall be planted and tended and loved, when man shall have time to meditate and to love his neighbor as himself, and when the medium of the world shall be honor, not gold, is all very pleasant. The present exposition, however, part verse, part tract, part story, while perhaps not intended to convince anybody that the millennium is at hand, yet reads as strangely.

This seems to be little more than a dream, and one at that which gives but few hints concerning how we may advance the actual city beautiful. In truth the contents do not live up to the title of the little volume.

FORCES THE EGYPTIANS KNEW.

By STEPHEN CHALMERS.

WE have not heard from Maarten Maartens for some time, so that one takes up his new novel, "The Healers," with a sense of curiosity mingled with the expectancy born of one's education to his reputation.

As the title of his latest work would imply—although few works live up to their colors—it is a book about doctors. One may rest assured at the outset, nevertheless, that it is not a book written to satisfy any particular class. If this were the case Mr. Maartens's book would still have a vast circulation at that, for there is not a conceivable form of healer and healing that he does not cleverly introduce into his story. There are hypnotists, bacteriologists, quacks, sawbones, clairvoyants, psychologists, sympathists, Bhuddists, and patent-food men. One has a suspicion that a few of the minor characters are Christian Scientists in disguise.

As for the story itself—well, bless us! the story is the whole thing, as the whole thing is always the story. But the plot, or rather—gone are the days when there was no doubt about there being a plot, a horrid, real, thrilling, wicked, soul-wringing plot—the situation, let us say, is a very simple one.

A son of Baron Lisse, a famous bacteriologist, performs an operation on Sir James Graye, a 16-year-old idiot whose brain is enfolded in his skull like scissors in a sheath. The operation is an amazing success, entailing as it did trepanning, manipulation, and the expansion of the head with a plate. The development of Sir James from an idiot to a youth with sense enough to know that he ought to commit suicide for the sake of the uncle, who would be Sir Kenneth Graye if he had not such regard for honor and duty, is immensely interesting.

THIS uncle, by the way, is the one weakness in the characterization. He gets the notion that there is madness in the family, and when he thinks he has verified the suspicion he goes mad—or gets the notion that he is mad—himself. A supersensitive soul such as we often meet in life, but strangely out of balance with the young man who earlier in the story has a terrific mental struggle before he will give his consent to the operation on his nephew—an operation with the chances all on the wrong side. Any man who refused to consent to such a thing would be called self-sacrificing by the world, but there would still be a few left to say "Great!" when he consented.

Kenneth consents. But later in the story he accuses himself of the murder of another man who, through the uncle's fault, it is supposed, missed a train, lost a fortune by it, and blew his brains out. Any man who would nurse such an idea and bring forward madness as an excuse for his "crime" has a bad conscience, and any man who has a bad conscience, whether he has a right to it or not, is capable of the act that causes it, whether he does it or not.

That is Kenneth Graye, the uncle of the idiot. One sees clearly what Maarten Maartens intended him to be, so that he is not lost upon the average reader, but many will agree in the opinion that the author lost his grip on Kenneth.

One cannot blame the author overmuch, however, when one, just for the amusement of the thing, jots down a list of the principal characters in "The Healers," and with each a word that almost cries out his or her type. It is then one realizes how Maarten Maartens may possibly have run just a little short of creative material over Kenneth, while failing to realize where he got the material for the rest. The list:

Baron Lisse—microbes.
Baroness Lisse—epic.
Col. Lisse—King, kirk, country.
Edward Lisse—psychiatry.
Thomasine Lisse—sympathy.
Laura Baleyne—trances.
Maria McClachlin—S. P. C. A.
Sir James Graye—Nothing, (splendidly drawn.)
Kenneth Graye—(?)

MR. MAARTENS has often been given credit for his subtle humor, but there should be an abundance of praise still in reserve that well may be poured upon the fun of "The Healers." It is a deep study of those unknown sciences which come under Hamlet's remark to Horatio and are quite beyond our philosophy, even to-day, but the story, in its blindest groping moments, is lightened with laughter.

There is Baron Lisse with his semicolon bacillus, the only cure, if it could be introduced without first killing the patient; Laura, with her table-turning, spirit-writing, second-sight, general Mahatma arts—the only cure, if she could tell anybody else how to do it; Maria McClachlin, head of the "Mercy for the Sheep" Society and editor of The Cry of the Cow—the only cure for the world's suffering if everybody else would agree; Thomasine, with her sympathy, the sure cure, if everybody knew how to dispense the prescription; Col. Lisse, with his alliterations, "Francis Fighting Fell," "Prince, Parson, Police," &c., the only cures to save his King, Kirk, and Country from "going to the dogs," and the Baroness, genius wedded to genius, with that balm for all ills, the muse, in her case upheld in an epic in thirteen cantos, entitled "Balaam," the first line of the first canto being:

Sing, Muse, the Seer, the Angel, and the Ass!

THE characters in "The Healers" are real people battling with real forces, no two agreeing, but all working toward the end of all such ambitions—unity and understanding in "mysteries of which the earliest Egyptians, to our everlasting humiliation, seem to have known much more than we." Maarten Maartens is not a serious singer, but he sings of serious things.

"THE SACRED CUP."

THE work of the lesser British novelists is not infrequently marked by a good many unassuming virtues such as repose, gentility, and much integrity of purpose. A not unpleasing example of these qualities is a story by Vincent Brown which he calls "The Sacred Cup." (Putnam.) It is the old tale of a man's momentary passion and its tragic and eternal outcome; his cowardice and the consequent suffering he brings upon himself and the woman he ultimately marries. The man's regeneration is wholly unconvincing. His suffering and his awakening alike are forced upon him by circumstances outside himself, and in no one of his many and conflicting moods does he rise to the dignity of a Character. The same criticism must be recorded against nearly all the personages of the book—save the gentle Mr. Jerred, rector of Lamberfield, and his worldly minded Bishop with "the smile of unique cynicism which is born of the attempt to make a Christian an amalgam of the House of Lords and the House of God."

The Rev. Mr. James Jerred is alive—except at rare intervals—and remains alive, and even beautiful, after the covers of the book are closed. It is because he suffers, in a spiritual sense, for the sin of the unawakened man that the man is forced at last to recognize a moral right and wrong. It is because he awaits in absolute faith and patience the uncovering of the truth that the truth inevitably is put into his hands.

The book derives its title from the fact that this same gentle and tender little Mr. Jerred has the courage to abide by a literal interpretation of the rubric, and quietly, after due warning, withal, refuses the sacred cup to the communicant whose sin is unconfessed and unatoned.

Mr. Brown's story lacks sustained power both in character building and in literary form. It may be occasionally dull, but it is never cheap; while in conception it is tender, and even noble, and it yields passages of real delicacy and sensitiveness to spiritual beauty.

STRANGE STORIES.

THE MOUNTAIN OF FEARS. By Henry C. Rowland. Illustrated. One volume. Pp. 301. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.50.

"THE Mountain of Fears" gives the title to a volume of eight stories by Mr. Henry C. Rowland that are of a style and calibre to remind one very strongly of the work of Joseph Conrad and H. G. Wells, for, though they fall perceptibly short of the very close approach to technical perfection of both those writers, they carry one into the same realm of strange experiences which those two delight to explore, and recount some of the occurrences therein with a reality almost too intense to be altogether pleasant. As for the nature of Mr. Rowland's tales, imagine a doctor of science and a doctor of medicine swapping stories to relieve the tedium of a voyage down through the Spanish Main, with the former, so far as we are concerned, doing all the talking and the latter all the listening, though sufficiently comprehending and appreciating the narrator's points to lead him to make good ones.

The Dr. Leyden who tells the author's stories for him earned his living by supplying museums and professors with specimens from the animal, vegetable, and mineral world. His wanderings in pursuit of rarities had taken him into many queer corners of the earth, and, as he was possessed of the German habit of examining, classifying, and remembering all stray facts that came his way, he had an inexhaustible fund of anecdotes with which to illustrate his conversation. Naturally his mind was attracted by abnormalities, and these eight stories are mostly of the creepy kind and make one furtively thankful that Papua, Borneo, and Venezuela, though they may be good places for specimen hunters, are a long way from here. However, pleasant or unpleasant, they are stories out of the ordinary both as regards matter and manner, and we are inclined to suspect that the author's dedication is seriously meant that his "Dr. Leyden" is a person of flesh and blood of his own acquaintance.

Excellence is so fairly distributed among Mr. Rowland's eight appeals to his readers' interest that one wishes for space to speak a good word for each. They certainly exhibit variety of subject, which virtue does not always reside in volumes of short stories, and the science in them is of a reliable sort. By using it as his title the author has perhaps shown his particular approval of "The Mountain of Fears," a gruesome tale of the dangers to mind and body that lie in wait for strangers who eat of unknown fruits in strange lands. We like better "The Shears of Atropos," a story of a head-hunting expedition into Borneo in which the natural wit and perfectly limitless nerve of a New York tourist are pitted against brute force in several ferocious forms, with victory to the American every time; "Two Gentlemen," one of whom was a dog; "Bamboula," an illustration of how not only dogs but men and women may feel the "call of the wild." "Into the Dark" is on quite different lines—a pathetic account of how it fared with one man who went blind and was persuaded not to commit suicide.

Byron's Complete Poems.

The text of the poems followed in the seven-volume edition of Byron's works, edited by Ernest Hartley Coleridge and published during 1898-1904 by Mr. John Murray, has been republished in a single volume, and is imported by Charles Scribner's Sons for sale in this country. It contains many poems not included in any other "complete edition" than that published by Murray; and has also many of Byron's own notes, together with others by Mr. Coleridge. An excellent introductory memoir by the editor precedes the poems; it is more than a memoir; it is a study of the poet's life and works, brief and yet full. The letters included in the larger edition have enabled the preparation of the memoir, and lend much interest to it. The author's eccentric spelling has been corrected where possible; the volume bears the author's cipher, and in every way is an excellent addition to one's book shelves.

A NOVEL WITH A PURPOSE

SOMETHING that approaches integrity of purpose animates a novel called "The Vision at the Savoy," by Winifred Graham, (Fleming H. Revell Company.) Some courage manifestly is needed to portray the efforts of a young man whose object in life is to save the souls of those "too rich to be saved." It is a mission the difficulty of which only the rich themselves, perhaps, can know—though the knowledge, generally speaking, is mercifully, if unethically, hidden from them. At all events the writer's purpose is to be commended unconditionally, and her plea that morality and religion be made vital and interesting enough to win the attention and hold the reverence of those who now almost inevitably look elsewhere for the savor of life is eloquent in its inherent justice even though its outward expression is rather lamentably inadequate. It is one of the greatest pities in life that so many of the best-intentioned people should be the poorest artists.

This is not to say that there is no literary merit in Winifred Graham's book. As novels go, it has moments of considerable charm and interest. Yet the theme is one which if cast at all into a novel should have been cast supremely well, and the failure so to present it reacts upon the theme itself. If the book should sow good seed in barren minds it would justify itself as an influence, but as an influence masquerading in an art form it cannot truthfully be called admirable.

"PATRIOTISM, LIMITED."

"THE FINANCIER" (Dillingham) is another novelization of the late Cecil Rhodes by Harris Burland, a practitioner of the cheaper fiction, who is already responsible for "The Black Motor Car" and "The Princess Thora." Profoundly ignorant of finance, of politics, of war, of polite usage, of human nature, of most things, in fact, and sublimely indifferent to this handicap, Mr. Burland has yet the story-telling gift. His "Financier," like his other stories, is readable in spite of the glaring inexpertness of the diction, the wretched quality of the puppets, and the exposed condition of the wires that pull them about to do the showman's will. To be sure, the after effect is comparable to that of certain soda fountain "dope" concoctions—but, as in one case, having put your lips to the glass you drink the stuff down, so, in the other, having opened the book, you turn the pages more or less consecutively to the end. If, that is, nothing better occurs.

The present effort is particularly interesting to the reflective, because it combines so many unpardonable sins of ignorance and carelessness, and because redeeming qualities discoverable to the critical eye are lacking. Yet the critical eye reads it. Briefly set down, the plot involves an African region, a promoter who is also an unscrupulous British patriot, a contest with Germany, a little war with heaps of slain, an impossible young actress, an equally impossible young civil-engineer, a peer or two, a panic, gold mines, and members of the Kaiser's secret service—especially a lady spy, picturesquely named Mrs. Wooddevil. Mr. Burland has, by the way, a curious taste in names.

At Bonaventure's.

E. F. Bonaventure has issued an attractive catalogue of sixty-two pages containing his principal items in rare and sumptuously bound Aldines, Elzevirs, and Americana, in the last of which are to be found some scarce Franklin specimens. Among the privately printed books are several extra illustrated volumes by William Loring Andrews. The Aldines, some of which are bound by Bozerian and Taffin, are worthy representatives of the famous Venetian house. The Elzevirs also include some good specimens set forth in excellent examples of the French binder's art. Among the English items is a finely preserved first edition of Fielding's "Tom Jones," and some first editions of Swinburne, Tennyson, and Shelley. A copy of the catalogue may be had on application.

First Volume of "Novelettes."

"Their Husband's Wives," the first volume of the series of collected American "novelettes" which have been undertaken by W. D. Howells and Henry M. Alden for the Harpers, is promised for March 8. As has been noted in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS before, the compilers are culling these shorter stories from various periodicals with a view to giving them a more or less permanent place in literature.

Some Appleton Plans.

It is reported that Trumbull White, now editor of The Red Book of Chicago, will succeed James Barnes as editor of Appleton's Booklovers' Magazine. This periodical, by the way, has made an arrangement with Dr. Henry C. Rowland which, it is expected, will give the readers of the magazine information about the true state of affairs in the Panama Canal belt. The information will be conveyed in a series of articles beginning with April under the title, "The Truth About Panama." All the articles will be illustrated with photographs taken by the author amid the scenes he describes.

Joseph Hamblen Sears, President of the Appleton Company and author of "The Governments of the World To-day," "Fur and Feather Tales," "None But the Brave," and "A Box of Matches," sailed this week for London, where he purposes to add to his firm's list a few of the best literary wares displayed in the English market.

Histories of the Old World.

The author considers side by side the course of the histories of Old World countries and the development of their political institutions from ancient times to the beginning of the present century, paying special attention to the origins of the political organizations of the countries of Europe. A bibliography is included in the volume.

NEW YORK, MARCH 3, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

WITH the appearance in London of the second part of Thomas Hardy's formidable and amazing work, "The Dynasts," a distinctly new note is recognizable in the tone and temper of the chorus of comment upon it. The majesty, the profundity of the strange production is beginning to tell. Reviewers of the first part were hampered by their bewilderment, by the seeming lack of form in the composition, by its multiplicity of themes, (for this is something more than a dramatic poem with Napoleon for protagonist,) by the seeming confusion of mortals and immortals. Certain passages, particularly the scenes among the south coast peasants, full of the fear of a French invasion, were admitted to be inimitable. But the frequent harshness, the lack of beautiful finish, in Hardy's verse, annoyed many cultivated ears. There is a disposition now to look into the matter more closely and more reverently. As its huge proportions are slowly developed, this drama of the making of history takes on grandeur in the reviewers' eyes. They are no longer troubled to identify, reasonably, the Spirits Sinister, the Chorus of the Pities, the Ancient Spirit of the Years, the Recording Angels. These are but personifications of human and normal influences after all. Mr. W. J. Courtney goes so far as to find in Mr. Hardy's scheme something that corresponds with the attitude of the scientific historian. But what the best of the critics say of this work, before it is completed, should be taken with reserve by all persons who wish to be forehanded in appraising works of art. The next generation may, as likely as not, proclaim "The Dynasts" a mighty masterwork.

MR. JOSEPH O'CONNOR'S masterly review of Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill's biography of his father, Lord Randolph Churchill, which we publish this week, is in itself a coherent historical sketch of an important epoch in English politics. There is no doubt that Lord "Randy," as he was affectionately called, looms largely in perspective. He appears now as a stronger and wiser man than he seemed to be at close range, in the troublous eighties, when Gladstone and Disraeli were both alive. Of course the action of Lord Randolph in resigning so abruptly from the Cabinet in December, 1886, is still one that requires a great deal of explanation. Mr. Winston Churchill's explanation of it will not satisfy many persons who made up their minds long ago. Obviously, it does not satisfy Mr. O'Connor, who reviews it clearly and fairly in his article on the book. It was not the act of a great statesman, actuated at all times by pure motives. But for a time Lord Randolph was an able leader of his party—an interesting politician, as a recent English reviewer of the biography, Mr. Clement Shorter, says. Mr. Shorter, by the way, recalls that Lord "Randy" had no taste whatever for literature. The Duke of Marlborough once said of him: "My brother Randolph never reads a book." He read the blue books, however, to some purpose. Sir Henry Irving, just after his famous production of "Hamlet," was surprised to find, in a talk with young Churchill, that that Eton and Oxford man had the haziest ideas of Shakespeare. But many men know much about Shakespeare and are always willing to tell what they know. Lord Randolph devoted nearly all his short life to the study and practice of politics.

IN the lists of the literary anniversaries of the year 1906 the centenary of the birth of Elizabeth Barrett Browning has been generally overlooked. There is reason enough for this, as John H. Ingram, in his "Memoir" of Mrs. Browning, gives the date of her birth as March 4, 1809, while Anne Thackeray, (Mrs. Richmond Ritchie,) in her sketch of the poetess in the Dictionary of National Biography, (accepted as an almost impeccable authority,) states that Elizabeth was born at Burns Hall, Durham, March 6, 1809. Ingram gives London as the place of birth. As a matter of fact, Elizabeth Moulton Barrett was born March 6, 1806, at Coxhoe Hall, Durham, and baptized in Killoe Church, (the register of which has the true record of birth and baptism,) Feb. 10, 1808. Robert Browning corrected Ingram's errors in a prefatory note to a collected edition of his wife's poetry as long ago as 1887. The date in the Dictionary of National Biography, therefore, is either a typographical error or a plain case of heterophemy, either of which is rare in this well-edited book of reference. There will be some sort of celebration of this Browning centenary in London next Tuesday, but no very elaborate preparations have been made. A movement is on foot, however, to place a national memorial in Westminster Abbey later on. The time has passed when weak-minded and obtuse persons, taking their cue from a peevish utterance of Edward FitzGerald for which he was afterward very sorry, thought it evidence of fine literary taste to sneer at Mrs. Browning. The author of "Casa Guidi Windows" and "Sonnets from the Portuguese" ranks high among the English poets of the nineteenth century. The mere sentimentality of "Aurora Leigh" is happily forgotten, but some of the enthusiasm of spirit and love for the beautiful that distinguish it still leaven the monotony of life.

TO mark the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Irish novelist, Charles Lever, Mr. Edmund Downey, who has published many books under the pen name of F. M. Allen, has written a new biography of the author of "Harry Lorrequer" and "Charles O'Malley." Mr. Downey is himself an Irish novelist who in his stories has followed in the footsteps of Lever. The only extant biography of Lever is that written by W. J. Fitzgerald and published in 1879. George Saintsbury has written an exceedingly able and lucid, but not particularly sympathetic, analysis of Lever's work. There is no gainsaying his great skill as a story teller or the spontaneous humor of the works which made his fame. There is ample ground, however, for dispute about his literary quality and the verity of his sketches of Irish character.

HOW long does it take to make a good dictionary? Dr. J. A. H. Murray's "New English Dictionary" was begun in the middle eighties and the letter "A" was finished before the beginning of the tenth decade of the last century. This work has now reached the letter "P" and may be finished in the lifetime of the present generation. But the "new" dictionary of the French Academy will require more years to finish than one of the mediaeval cathedrals. It was begun in 1877, and the letter "C" is not yet finished. It is gravely estimated that at the present rate of progress the work will be complete within 200 years. Yet six editions of this work were complete in the 200 years succeeding 1635, and only 42 years were required for the seventh, which is the one now in use.

ONE of our readers courteously complains that we inaccurately spoke last week of Christ Church at Oxford as "Christ Church College." We admit the inaccuracy, but must continue to so speak of the venerable institution in order to indicate its scope and purpose to many thousands of American readers. It is equally "inaccurate" to call a famous English newspaper The London Times instead of The Times, to speak of the Century Club instead of the Century Association, to call the club in Gramercy Park the Players Club instead of by its incorporate title, the Players. It is necessary in writing for newspapers to convey facts to the readers' minds as succinctly as possible. Of course many, but not quite all, readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW know that Christ Church is one of the famous old colleges of Oxford University.

WE have no doubt that if Mr. Henry Holt had signed the first editions of his two novels with a purpose, "Calmire" and "Sturmsee," instead of putting them on the world anonymously, the books would have attracted more attention and exerted a larger influence. But new editions of the novels are to be brought out now by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., who have taken them over from The Macmillans, and they will surely find and interest a host of new readers. Probably nobody who was not in the secret ever guessed that Mr. Holt was the author. Yet it is quite the thing to say now that the secret of the authorship ought to have been guessed. The books treat of subjects in which Mr. Holt has long been interested, and the views of life in them are very much his own.

DR. GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, the famous Johnsonian scholar, who edited Boswell and the profound Samuel's letters and wrote a number of readable books about Johnson and his times, left in manuscript a new edition of Johnson's "Lives of the Poets," which has just been published in London, more than two years after Dr. Hill's death, and hailed as a masterly achievement. Dr. Birkbeck Hill was a scholar of restless activity; he had many friends in America, wrote a book about Harvard from the Oxford point of view, and received the degree of LL. D. from Williams College. In his earlier days Dr. Hill was known among his friends as a voracious reader of novels. He used to explain that his knowledge of fiction was obtained as a reviewer of novels for The London Saturday Review. We quote his own words as they are recalled in The London Academy:

> To read a novel became so inseparably connected in my mind with three pounds ten shillings, the usual payment for a Saturday Review article, that without the one I could not undertake the other. All in vain have friends urged me to read the works of Black, Blackmore, Hardy, Howells, Henry James, Stevenson, and Kipling. Not a single story of any one of these writers have I ever read, or am I ever likely to read.

THE post of Professor of Poetry in Oxford University has fallen to Dr. John William Mackail, whose translation of the Odyssey in the metre of FitzGerald's Omar Khayyam we reviewed a fortnight since. Dr. Mackail is Senior Examiner in the British Education Department. He is a Baliol College man, and at Oxford won the Newdigate Prize for poetry. He has made many translations from the classics, written one or two religious books, and published some original poems and a life of William Morris. The Oxford Professorship of Poetry was founded nearly two centuries ago, and for a century and a half the post was filled by clergymen. Among these were Milman and Keble. Matthew Arnold was one of Mackail's later predecessors. The professor is elected for five years and may be re-elected for another five.

AFTER THE SIEGE.

THE Japanese won a second victory at Port Arthur, of which the world has heard little. It was a victory against disease, the fight against which was made after the white flag had been raised on the fortress and the Mikado's army was in full possession of the works they had so long besieged. How serious was the peril the victors faced within the fortress, and how hard was the struggle against the conditions which Russian corruption and Russian mismanagement had made, forms a chapter which is not the least interesting in "The Real Triumph of Japan," (Appleton,) the book written by Dr. Louis Livingston Seaman, from his experiences in the Japanese military hospitals, which was noticed at length in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday. Dr. Seaman visited Port Arthur last year by special permission of the Japanese Minister of War. At that time not even Japanese Army officers were allowed within the fortress except on official business. Dr. Seaman was one of the few, outside of those concerned in the work, who saw the job of cleaning up in progress.

The shattered hulks of warships in the harbor, the battle-scarred walls and ruined dwellings, the corpse-strewn trenches all around the pits—these have been described by other writers. Dr. Seaman takes another theme. The incoming army found 6,050 wounded and 11,105 sick under Russian medical care. Three-fourths of the sick and wounded were down with scurvy. They were housed in hovels, shanties, wrecked stores, and abandoned public buildings all over the old and new towns, and many of them were in a deplorable condition. Sanitary conditions were frightful. There was not a thoroughfare or a building that did not invite epidemic and contagion. Thousands of men and animals lay dead and unburied on the mountain sides around. There was an actual Russian medical staff of some 350, but it did little or nothing to change conditions.

The Japanese assembled a medical staff of more than 1,000 to do the housecleaning. They were needed. It was soon discovered that the worst enemy they had to contend with was the corruption in the force supposed to aid them. Nominally the Russian medical staff consisted of 2,790 persons. The odd 2,400 was made up of surgeons' and nurses' families, and it was the cheerful Russian custom for the staff to appropriate for themselves whatever they desired from the hospital supplies. The patients got what was left. The supply in greatest demand was beer.

Orders were not obeyed. The Russian surgeons agreed only in indulging in petty bickerings and jealousies. Presently the Japanese overseers found themselves in disgrace at home for extravagance in the matter of supplies. After that the Russians were overruled or disregarded, and the real work went on smoothly in Japanese hands. Of the 17,110 patients left in their hands, only 810 died. And when the last Russian was sent away in May he left behind him a clean sanitary town for the first time since his countrymen seized Port Arthur.

Dr. Seaman tells of an interesting dinner he ate one evening in the town so recently the scene of this historic siege. Gen. Ijichi, Nogi's chief of staff, was the host, the food was served on the plate of the vanquished Russians, and while the great searchlight on Golden Hill flashed intermittently over the porch, he heard tales of the siege. He heard also from Ijichi this manly tribute to his foes:

> I think the Russian private soldier was even braver than the Japanese private. I also believe that history will justify Gen. Stoessel in his surrender of Port Arthur. Further conflict would only have resulted in the unnecessary killing of thousands more. Stoessel was right.

The March Bibelot.

The Bibelot for March (T. B. Mosher, Portland, Me.,) is made up of selections from the poems of Margaret L. Woods—an English poetess but little known to Americans. The poems reprinted show her strength and delicacy, and indicate the range of her powers with some distinctness. A note indicates that Mrs. Woods's poems were first printed for private use at Dr. Daniel's press in Oxford—a proof that her standing as a poet is high, even if the world does not acclaim her great.

Farming for March.

The March number of Doubleday, Page & Co.'s new magazine Farming maintains the standard set at the beginning of its career. The rule generally followed was that "anything was good enough for the farmer," and his periodicals were hideous in appearance, however good their contents may have been. The new magazine changes all that, its articles are helpful to farmer and amateur. Its pictures are works of art.

HOUSE OF THE GREAT PROTECTOR

The History and Traditions of the Big Building on the Strand and the Embankment in London.

MOST of us have a taste for "sermons in stones," whether those stones be in "deserts inaccessible" or in cities pent.

The stones of Somerset House in London can point a moral and adorn more than one tale. Since they speak in a tongue that is not so easy as Esperanto, Raymond Needham and Alexander Webster have undertaken to translate the tales for us. Their book is called "Somerset House, Past and Present," and is published here by Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co.

Those stones, which made the palace of Somerset and which were obtained by destroying Catholic churches and even despoiling a graveyard, took part—such is the romantic irony of fate—in the fortunes of the last Catholic Kings and Queens and did, indeed, for their association with them come near to being pulled down by the Puritan reformers in their zealous rage against Charles I.

Oddly enough Somerset, the Protestant Protector, despite his popularity with the people, came to his end by "having his head cut off on Tower Hill" and Charles paid for his Catholic taste with his head. This house, begun by the Protestant Prince, reached its zenith of splendor only under the Catholic royal family.

A side light, by the bye, on Charles's character, and one not commonly taken note of, is given in the description of the collection he made in this palace of paintings and other objects of art. It is interesting to be reminded who was the first great English collector, and the fate of his treasures, sold at auction and scattered over the Continent, is as suggestive as is the fate of the house itself.

Full of vicissitudes the story certainly is, for was not Cromwell's funeral ceremony, held as it was in the huge Presence Chamber, almost as impressive as many a "pageant," and on the return of the Stuarts in the person of Charles II. were not the masques and dances, the frivolities and extravagances, so prevalent in the days of Anne of Denmark, that Oriana of Ben Jonson, and the days of Henrietta Maria, resumed with threefold zest?

By the time of the "Good Queen Anne" the building which, according to an ancient rhyme, "Queen-Mothers was designed to hold," degenerated into a "mere lodging pen." If pen it was, at least it was the place for the lodging of persons high in Court favor, and the gardens and terrace became a favorite fashionable resort.

Of its appearance at that time Pope tells us how

> Grove nods to grove, each alley has a brother,

In this spot we may picture Addison and Will Honeycomb and many an old-time coffee-house wit taking their promenades, and in some of the more stately of the rooms, if we may believe the gossipy Mrs. Montagua, fashionable entertainments were still occasionally given. With the demolition of the old building under George III. and with Somerset House the present there was less of interest for the stones to tell. However, there were the events connected with the meetings of the Royal Academy held there, those of the Royal Society, and of the Society of Antiquaries. There was also the building of Kings College on the spot which Anne of Denmark once leased for a garden to famous old John Gerrard the Herbarist. Very likely those art exhibits of old were similar to the art exhibits of to-day, and many a personage attended them chiefly because it was the approved thing to do, and this in spite of the worthy motto over the doorway, "Let none enter here but such as love the Muses." Nevertheless, it is good to picture Sir Joshua Reynolds there delivering his discourses in that wonderful voice of his that made Burke rise to declare it like unto Milton's angel's voice.

Aside from a few such personal touches, however, the latter part of the volume is given over to less popular and rather dry discussions, to controversies as to whether or not Sir William Chambers made an architectural success of his rebuilding of the house, and to unavoidable recounting of the official uses to which it has come down. Fortunately, this is the least bulky part of the matter, and whether Somerset House be a monument to be proud of or not, at least it is one of the monuments of London and—London is London. Granting which, we would far better be grateful than critical of every such collection of facts and anecdotes, for every such set of reproductions of valuable drawings and interesting views, both past and present, as are succinctly given to us here.

March International Studio.

This number opens with a plea for the preservation of the Allegheny County Court House at Pittsburg, designed by H. H. Richardson, which is a revival of the Romanesque. The article is by John Theodore Comes, the well-known Pittsburg architect. Other contributions are: The exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, described by David Lloyd; American ceramics, by Mrs. Clara Ruge; Alfred Drury's sculptural work, by A. L. Baldry; "Independent British Art," by E. G. Halton; designs for interiors by Otto Prutscher of Vienna, by A. S. Levetus; the work of the German painter Ludwig, by A. S. Covey, and there are some others, as well as the usual color inserts and other illustrations.

The Poor and Religion.

The Macmillan Company will shortly publish "Christianity and the Working Classes," edited by George Haw, editor of "The Religious Doubts of Democracy." The book gives the opinions of ten well-known Englishmen on the effect of Christianity on the poor people, and tells the reasons for their turning from it. In his introduction Mr. Haw quotes the beliefs of certain working men and women who have written to him on the subject. The other writers in the book are: The Rev. Dr. Kitchin, Dean of Durham; Will Crooks, M. P.; Dr. R. F. Horton, A. Henderson, M. P.; Canon Barnett, the Rev. Silas Hocking, George Lansbury, the Rev. Ensor Walters, T. E. Harvey, L. C. C.; Bramwell Booth of the Salvation Army, and the Rev. J. G. Adderley.

ALONG STEEL RAILS.

A NUMBER of Cy Warman's familiar railway yarns are here collected into a volume under the title "The Last Spike and Other Railroad Stories," (Scribner's.) Many of them are good of their kind, and all of them have a certain stamp of mechanic strength. "The Last Spike" proper combines with a private romance the great public work of the building of the first Pacific Railway, taking advantage of some splendid pathfinding and roadmaking opportunities to exploit the grit and ability of a young man whose ladylove's stern father set him a task to do, to prove his worthiness. The young man was partly roasted by Indians, but he won out at the end. "The Belle of Athabasca" concerns itself not with iron rails, locomotives, or trains of cars, but with the love of an Indian maid for a surveyor person called Silent Smith; "The Curé's Christmas Gift" involves some high points of philosophy and comparative religion, and "The Mysterious Signal" returns weirdly to the steel-banded way. There's a man in it who has a mania for stopping trains and foresight (in some cases) of dangers ahead. "Chasing the White Mail" is a story of a daring engine driver; "Oppressing the Oppressor" touches upon the politics of the common carrying business; "The Iron Horse and the Trolley" employs steam and electricity in a matter of high finance with international complications. The next story introduces love, robbery, and a hocus-pocus of knock-out drops, with one of the scenes aboard an express car. And so on. The public is pretty well acquainted with Mr. Warman's story-telling methods, and no more need be said.

NEW USE FOR A BROOCH

ANOTHER of the murder puzzle pieces of Fergus Hume, maker of many of the brand, is called "The Opal Serpent," (Dillingham.) It relates to an old pawnbroker, with a beautiful daughter, and an impecunious, disinherited young gentleman in a literary way, who is in love with the girl. The old fellow is found strangling in his shop, his lips cruelly pinned together with a brooch of quaint Oriental workmanship, (the design a serpent set with opals,) a loop of copper wire around his neck, the ends thereof leading through holes in the floor into a cellar. At the moment of discovery the watchers in the cellar are bearing just heavily enough upon the wire and dragging out the agony of the victim's last moments. The business of Mr. Hume, of his Scotland Yard man, of his hero, his heroine, and all the other virtuous characters is to discover the identity of the stranglers. The detective process reveals, of course, many complications, a case of bigamy, a rival claimant for the dead man's ample fortune, a sharper, a seafaring man, a native of the British East Indian Empire, some faithful servants, two lawyers, a variety actress, a silly young Lord, and a vicious young gutter snipe. In the end everything turns out quite surprisingly as it should. The matter is the matter of such yarns from the beginning, the manner is the manner of Fergus Hume, which is fair to middlin'—of its kind.

The Popular Science Monthly.

The current number contains articles by Prof. J. F. Kemp on "The Physiography of the Adirondacks," by Dr. C. A. White on "The Black Locust Tree and Its Despoliation," Prof. Wilhelm Ostwald on "A Contribution to the Theory of Science," Frank T. Carlton on "Urban and Rural Life," Prof. Edwin G. The Jewish Home.

This is the new title of the periodical for boys and girls which has heretofore been known as "Helpful Thoughts." It is now under new editorial and business management. The magazine will have the old departments—puzzles, biographies, anecdotes, &c. Articles have been promised for forthcoming numbers by Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, Dr. M. H. Harris, Dr. Davidson, B. G. Richards, Miss I. R. Hess, and others. The juvenile fiction will include, it is announced, stories of adventure, sentiment, description, &c., as well as tales of the life of the Jewish people. The religious department will also be continued.

MARY WHITING was left a widow in Chicago with an ambitious step-daughter. She was a lady of wonderful tact and social grace. Mr. Harrison Garfield Rhodes tells the story of the lady's triumph in London society, and gives a picture of the peculiarities of the English social customs which, besides being interesting and amusing, is wonderfully clever. In appearance, The Lady and the Ladder, the book which tells this history, is most charming and dainty. It is destined to attract and entertain many thousands. Illustrated by Anderson. $1.50.

THE JUNGLE.

Mr. Sinclair's novel of Packingtown, just published, has had both violent abuse and what may possibly be called extravagant praise. This powerful book has a reason for existence: it tells the American people of conditions which affect practically the entire food supply as it relates to the use of meat. The publishers did not undertake the responsibility of issuing it without the most careful investigation, and found that the facts justify the statements. ($1.50.)

The Philosophical Theories and the Beliefs of John Fiske.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

IN his review of a friendly biography of John Fiske Mr. Montgomery Schuyler remarks:

"The best equipped for literary work, and perhaps for teaching work, of all the undergraduates of Harvard in those years was John Fiske, whose habit, which we may all be glad he never broke himself of, of telling the truth as he saw it, branded him even in that comparatively latitudinarian and distinctly Unitarian seat of learning with the stigma of atheist. It seems that he was really debarred from what would have been his appropriate career by reason of the stigma."

This explanation no doubt occurred to more than one observer of the fact that with his genial temperament and his distinguished abilities as scholar and author Mr. Fiske rose no higher at Harvard than Assistant Librarian. Notwithstanding the squeamish tolerance which insists that nobody shall be called by an unpleasant name, however unpleasant views he may avow, it was not so strange as might be that Mr. Fiske was thought an atheist, even in latitudinarian Harvard; neither can it be with justice called a habit of telling the truth as he saw it, of which he never broke himself, which led him to avow the views in question; since he later refuted and abandoned their underlying atheistic principle, thus admitting that it was not true; but neglecting to admit the contradiction, and professing still to hold fast to the philosophy of which it was the distinguishing feature.

Either during his undergraduate days or soon afterward Mr. Fiske became acquainted with Mr. Spencer's philosophy, and, finding it so much in line with his previous views, at once adopted it as a basis of historical study, in which he tells us he was already interested. This so-called philosophy assumes as its basis the persistence of force—the law of physical cause and effect—the correlation and conservation of energy—the transformation of antecedent into consequent motion—of cause into effect: its purpose—"to deal with evolution at large inorganic, organic, and superorganic, in terms of matter and motion"—to interpret the phenomena of life and mind and society in terms of matter, motion, and force. As to the mode of procedure involved, we accordingly read:

"Given the persistence of force, and given the various derivative laws of force, and there has to be shown not only how the actual existences of the inorganic world necessarily exhibit the traits they do, but how there necessarily result, the more numerous and involved traits exhibited by organic and superorganic existences—how an organism is evolved? what is the genesis of human intelligence? whence social progress arises?" and as to the conclusion of the argument:

"Any hesitation to admit that between the physical forces and the sensations, there exists a correlation like that between the physical forces themselves, must disappear on remembering that one correlation, like the other, is not qualitative only, but quantitative." And again:

"The materialist, seeing it to be a necessary deduction from the law of correlation, that what exists in consciousness under the form of feeling is transformable into an equivalent of mechanical motion, and by consequence into equivalents of all the other forces which matter exhibits, may consider it therefore demonstrated that the phenomena of consciousness are material phenomena."

We have here asserted as the basis of Mr. Spencer's philosophy the transformability of psychical and physical activities, either into the other—as of feeling into motion or of motion into feeling. This is also the basis of material atheism, and in adopting Mr. Spencer's philosophy Mr. Fiske assumed responsibility for its principles, and was justly entitled to the name, whether pleasant or not, of atheist; and the fact is not mitigated by Mr. Spencer's affected protests against the charge of materialism, nor by his empty pretense of having repeatedly denied and rebutted the charge. With the argument of "First Principles" before him, with his avowal of its literal meaning, and the concluding section of that work, in twenty-four sentences seventeen times asserting or implying the mechanical interpretability of the phenomena of life and mind and society with which material atheism begins and ends, any attempted denial or rebuttal would have been an act of lunacy. That section is no more than an attempt to extort a denial of the patent fact from his opponents, its only approach to a denial being the foolishly impossible assertion that the implications of a grossly materialistic argument are no more materialistic than spiritualistic, and no more spiritualistic than materialistic; not a denial but a confession of materialism, with an absurd pretense of offering a theory of the world equally favorable to two antagonistic conceptions either of which excludes the other. This of an argument which concludes in behalf of materialism that the phenomena of consciousness are material phenomena, of which, let it suffice to say that in Mr. Spencer's final recasting of his argument, the sixth edition of "First Principles," it is with ill-concealed shame admitted that the facts do not prove the transformation of feeling into motion, which he had for forty years taught as a scientific truth, and the sole ground of the pretense that the phenomena of consciousness are material phenomena; and that the world of mind can be interpreted in terms of mechanical cause and effect.

Either while writing his "Cosmic Philosophy" or before Mr. Fiske detected the fallacy of this main position of the philosophy he was expounding for the benefit of the uninitiated, and knew, as did Mr. Spencer, that the facts which do not prove transformation of feeling into motion disprove that contradiction of the antithesis of subject and object, inasmuch as no motions can be found which have not the requisite complement of mechanical causes and effects irrespective of feeling; and that the pretense of any other than a direct quantitative correlation as a refuge from the difficulty, he also knew, as did Mr. Spencer, who was a mathematician, was a verbal fiction and a sham. He accordingly wrote his chapter on "Matter and Spirit" to expose the error, though carefully refraining while so doing from any recognition of the contradictions. Not only so; there is throughout this chapter a studied effort to make the false impression that the charge of materialism against Mr. Spencer's philosophy had no better foundation than the misconstruction of a passage in the second edition of the "Psychology"—a passage which had not been suspected of materialism before and could not have been suspected now except as a ruse by which to divert attention from the numerous passages of "First Principles," which plainly assert that error, which, says Mr. Fiske in a later production, are perhaps chiefly responsible for the charge of materialism that has so often and so wrongly been brought up against the doctrine of evolution. Why, then, leave them out of account in this attempt to explain the matter, unless with the intention to deceive?

These shining examples do not by far exhaust the proofs that the habit of truth-telling, of which Mr. Fiske never broke himself, went at times no further than a zealous championship of supposed truths, which fell in with some favorite preconception; and that he incurred the stigma of atheism by rashly espousing a manifest error, which he later pronounced untrue and in fact nonsense, and which Mr. Spencer admitted to him in 1874 having adopted without sufficiently thinking the matter out, and that it was a mistake and would have to be abandoned. That the synthetic philosophy was not frankly abandoned by either master or disciple remains to be reconciled with their own words, and with the habit of uncompromising truthfulness with which both have been credited.

John Burroughs and Dogs.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

That your correspondent who is devoted to dogs and their power of reasoning may no longer labor under the delusion that our naturalist Burroughs fails to do them justice allow me these few quotations. In the collection of his essays known as "Riverby" we have his anecdote of the dog who attempted to steal butter—according to a carefully arranged plan—concluding with these words: "This was a clear case of reasoning on the part of the dog, and afterward a clear case of sense of guilt from wrongdoing. The dog will probably be a man before any other animal." Again in "Pepacton" we have his account of Cuff and the woodchucks, in which he traces for us, step by step as it were, the reasoning power of the dog, and shows us the strategy employed in catching the victim. He speaks of the hound as a "Quaker among dogs" and refers to one in particular as having "an ancient, wrinkled, human, far-away look that reminds one of the bust of Homer among the Elgin marbles." Finally, in "Winter Sunshine," in speaking of the dog as the true pedestrian, he says: "Is just that happy, excursive vagabond that touches one at so many points and whose human prototype in a companion robs miles and leagues of half their power to fatigue." These are but three instances of his kindly consideration of and for the dog, and while we have no far-fetched emotional appeal we have a careful record of the observation of a scientist and nature lover—the result of many years of careful, painstaking study.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I should like to ask your correspondent J. B. Adams upon what he bases his statement that "Burroughs knows more about the working of dogs' minds than the reader"? Also his deduction that "careful observation and investigation" have not been given by those who may not agree with Burroughs? Mrs. Wright, who knows dogs well, called attention to one remark of Burroughs which would seem to prove lack of that "careful observation" on his part, as it is by no means rare for a dog to "wash its face like a cat," without any lessons from a cat. That slip alone would make me doubt that he had had that close friendship with dogs—not one dog—which those have had who believe in their higher powers.

American Spelling Demanded.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I beg to call attention to the fact that an American publishing house has gone with vim out of its way to adopt English spelling for the title of a book of Mr. S. R. Crockett, "The Cherry Ribband," having American issue. Why not American spelling for such books? Why not spell the word "ribbon," in the American fashion? I can understand that, when electrotype plates are sent over from England, and the actual printing is done here, the words in the body of the book would be spelled according to English usage, but why, in this case, the title which had American birth?

Mrs. Wharton and her American publishers adopt English spelling in "The House of Mirth," as witness "waggon," "honour," and similar words, and the use of "chemists," for instance, for the American "druggists." Why this concession to English prejudice and usage in the case of a book which, to hazard a guess, sells 200,000 or 300,000 copies in America and, say, 10,000 in England? I should like some explanation of this. I know one author whose books are published by a firm in America (that has a branch in England) who had the courage to have American spelling throughout, and I applaud him. I am no recently arrived Fenian with a grievance, but from Scotch and English ancestors who came here Nov. 20, 1649, but I hate the English with my whole heart and believe in American spelling for Americans. I object to such examples as I have cited.

A Southern Author.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The death of Dr. John Williamson Palmer, the distinguished Southern poet, editor, and novelist, at his home, in Baltimore, on the 26th instant, recalls the fact that he was the pioneer in writing stories of old California life, in which Bret Harte afterward won a world-wide fame. Dr. Palmer went to the Pacific Coast in 1849, and was the city physician of San Francisco in 1850, a position which gave him a splendid opportunity to study the strange and romantic scenes and characters which made the stories so picturesque and realistic that he contributed to Putnam's Monthly, after his return from California in 1853. Before returning to the Atlantic Coast, however, he visited India and China and wrote a book, "The New and the Old." One of his greatest literary feats was translating Michelet's "Femme" in forty-eight hours. This was done under an agreement that he was to forfeit $10 for every hour after the expiration of the forty-eight. He accomplished the task within the specified time, and was well rewarded for the work.

Having won his literary spurs, Dr. Palmer became a welcome contributor to The Atlantic Monthly, The Century, and other American magazines, his work always displaying a warm, glowing, Oriental style, caught during his travels in the East. His graceful pen was kept busy until the Civil War broke out, when he espoused the Southern cause, and became a Confederate soldier. It was just before the battle of Antietam that Dr. Palmer wrote "Stonewall Jackson's Way," a copy of which was found on the dead body of a Confederate soldier after the battle. When the song was published in a newspaper of the time, it attracted wide attention, especially in the South, depicting, as it did, the traits of the most popular hero of the Lost Cause.

Henry Giles.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Amid all the criticism and comment on the scores of authors, dead and alive, which I find in your columns, there is one fine author, now dead—whose writings I accidentally became acquainted with by a quotation from him in the dictionary—whose name I never find once mentioned in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS; and yet this man, Henry Giles, seems to be one of nature's most gifted sons, a man of true insight and genius, with rare powers of expression, ripe culture, and large experience.

I have read most of the British and American essayists, especially the essays of Macaulay, Matthew Arnold, Carlyle, and Emerson, and yet I do not hesitate to affirm that Henry Giles's small book of essays, "Illustrations of Genius," published away back in the middle of the last century by Ticknor & Fields, contains as much food for thought, as fine illustration of genius, of life, literature, and character, expressed in elegant and polished language, as are to be found in any of the essays of these celebrated authors, and I am sure that his work is far superior to nine-tenths of the essays now published and so extravagantly praised. Are not any of your readers and writers familiar with the writings of this literary master, Henry Giles?

ROBERT WATERS.

Robert Burns.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Your comment on Robert Burns in reply to a question as to the authorship of a certain collection of so-called "Merry Musings," is so unjust to the memory of the world's greatest lyrical poet that I take the liberty to protest against the statements that Burns wrote "ribald poems" or that "his muse was of the farm and often dirty." In moral sensibility and fine perception of the beautiful and true Burns measures up to Shakespeare. His subjects were such as came to him from his environment. He looked at the panorama of nature in its beauty and solitude. The purple glory of the mountains, the flash of loch and stream, the simple, honest social life of the honest men and bonnie lasses were his themes. The romantic history of Scotland was inspiration to him—every valley with its story and every hillside with its song. His crowning work was the moral regeneration of the songs of his native land. Songs that were almost as senseless as the insipid doggerel sung in the music halls of our own day were passed through the crucible of his marvelous mind and changed into pure gold. It is part of the glory of his work that he held hypocrisy up to scorn, and in this he exhibited the finest dramatic instinct, putting any approach to coarse words into the foul mouths of pretentious reprobates whom the gifted poet so scathingly satirizes.

As to the collection of indecent nonsense called the "Merry Musings," Dr. Chambers and other eminent authorities examined into the matter, and not one particle of proof exists that Burns wrote a single line of the senseless rubbish.

"The House of Mirth."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I am not a literary man, much less a literary critic, but I look forward each week to the appearance of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW with renewed interest and read the various criticisms of your readers as to the merits of "The House of Mirth," which in almost every instance meets their approval as a literary production of unusual merit. The writer, however, an octogenarian, born and bred in New York City, member of one of its oldest families and presumably familiar with its society, can but look upon "The House of Mirth" as a gross libel upon that society, and as an insult to a class as pure, as refined, and as intellectual as may be found the world over; in a word, the book in question seems but a paraphrase of the worst pages of the weekly print recently brought into prominence through legal proceedings against its editor. Indeed, the book seems an entirely improper one to be placed in the hands of the young or to have a place on the family library table.

That such a condition as is therein described does exist in the lower strata of New York society which may be termed swelldom, composed largely of "new-rich" who swarm from other parts of the country to exploit their newly acquired wealth in showy equipages, wondrous wardrobes, and loud manners to the disgust of refined people, cannot be denied; but why a lady who has the entrée into the best society should elect to open the sewers of its lowest strata and allow its foetid airs to escape through the medium of her pen is beyond the ken of your contributor.

"Hear Hero Term Me Claudio."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Owing to the loss of my regular copy of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS for Feb. 3, I have but just now seen the question raised by Mr. Gottlieb concerning this passage in "Much Ado," II., 2. All the early editions read "Claudio," and Theobald was the first to substitute "Borachio." He was followed by Pope and some other editors of that period, but Malone saw that they were wrong, and all the recent editors, including Knight, the Cambridge editors, Grant White, Hudson, and Furness, defend the original reading. If the reader is interested in the discussion of the subject he will find two odd pages of fine print upon it in Furness's monumental "New Variorum." As Knight remarks, the very form of the expression really settled the question: "Term me Claudio." This evidently "assumes that Margaret, by contrivance, would call him by the name of Claudio." As Hudson suggests, she would naturally do this "in order to deceive her attendants should any be in hearing."

Another correspondent, ("Berkshire,") in the same number of THE SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, criticises the rule I laid down concerning the treatment of certain unaccented syllables in iambic verse as virtually accented; but it is clear that this is followed by Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Tennyson, and other English poets, and often in their most rhythmical lines. Otherwise, words of four or more syllables could never be used in either iambic or trochaic metre, nor trisyllables unless accented on the penult. The practice is so common and the results so satisfying to the ear that writers on metre have either not observed it or not thought it needed comment or explanation—at least, I have seen no reference to it in any treatise on English versification.

Hybridization of Plants.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Reading a discussion in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW on the "Hybridization of Plants" recalled to my mind the Longworth rose. Something over fifty years ago Mr. Longworth of Cincinnati, who was a great lover of plants and who had a beautiful garden, produced a green rose. This is no myth, for I saw it myself. It was in an experimental stage at that time, and was in size about the circumference of a fifty-cent piece. The petals were green, and it resembled in shape the sweetbriar rose.

Bernard Hart and Bret Harte.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Your correction of the inaccuracy of Mr. Clement Shorter's statement concerning the origin of Bret Harte can be amplified. He was married in 1806, and had ten children, four daughters and six sons. All but one of his sons married; of his daughters only one married. None of his sons or daughters are now living.

SIXTY YEARS AGO.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

AMONG the many engravings showing groups of distinguished Americans that were once so popular and that may still be purchased at the picture shops none has more interest for the bookman than the reproductions of Thomas Hicks's painting, "Authors of the United States," a copy of which in a Thirty-fourth Street window recently attracted some attention. The original picture dates from the middle of the last century, and the authors deemed of sufficient note to merit inclusion number no less than forty-four. Story writers aside, one may hazard the conjecture that to group an equal number to-day the artist would have to be even more catholic than was Mr. Hicks, comparatively few of whose celebrities were mainly or solely writers of fiction. Yet the picture affords a striking illustration of the evanescent nature of some literary fame and the fallibility of contemporary judgment.

The centre of the group is appropriately given to the veterans of those days—James Fenimore Cooper in the post of honor, with Bryant on his right and Irving on his left, while just behind are Fitz-Greene Halleck and R. H. Dana père, whose "Buccaneer" crusty Christopher North had hailed as "by far the most powerful and original of American poetical compositions." Longfellow and Emerson, Holmes and Whittier are in the print, of course, not in the guise of sedate old men, as the present generation is accustomed to seeing them depicted, but as stalwarts in the full strength of middle life. The dreamy-eyed Hawthorne is here, and a bushy-bearded young Lowell, and a Poe in theatrical posture. Here, too, are the historians Prescott, Bancroft, and Motley, Bayard Taylor and George William Curtis, N. P. Willis and J. G. Saxe, and—among those who but a few years ago were of the living—Parke Godwin and R. H. Stoddard.

So far so good. No one will question the right of these to a place among the authors of the United States, nor perhaps that of Beecher, of the Southern novelist William G. Simms, of the poet and diplomatist George H. Boker, of Channing, of Henry T. Tuckerman, connoisseur of art and literature, or even possibly of George P. Morris, for Father Time, the woodman, will spare for another generation or two that slender tree. But how many now read the fiction of John Pendleton Kennedy, Secretary of the Navy under Fillmore, or the humorous "Sparrowgrass Papers" of Frederick S. Cozzens? How many remember those New Englanders, who became Southern editors—George D. Prentice of The Louisville Journal, author of witticisms, and George W. Kendall of The New Orleans Picayune, historian of the Mexican war? Perhaps the name of Charles Fenno Hoffman of New York, lawyer, editor, and song writer, founder of the Knickerbocker Magazine and author of "Greyslaer," a novel, who lost a leg in early life and later became deranged, may be familiar to a wider circle; but certainly for the poems of P. Pendleton Cooke of Virginia, dead since 1850, and of William D. Gallagher, who died in Kentucky a few years ago in his nineties, one would ask at the department store book counter in vain.

Not the least interesting feature of the picture is the galaxy of nine "authoresses" who, much beskirted and beringleted, add to the awkwardness of masculine posing their touch of grace. Margaret Fuller and Harriet Beecher Stowe are certainly not forgotten, nor, by the children at any rate, is Alice Cary, whose sister, Phoebe, strange to say, is not included in the group. Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney of "Pocahontas" fame, and Mrs. Anna Cora Mowatt-Ritchie, actress and dramatist, are more than names to many; but it is to be feared that Catherine M. Sedgwick's improving tales and Caroline M. Stansbury's sketches of early Michigan are to most of us as unknown as the poems that Amelia B. Welby contributed under her Christian name to The Louisville Journal. The manifold works of the ninth lady, though she rests from her labors, still flourish mightily, for she is the popular Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, whom to name is to carry the mind to first things, as the alphabet, the primeval garden of Genesis, and budding intellects.

Sole survivor to-day of that band of forty-four—"although the last not least"—is Donald G. Mitchell, the Ik Marvel still dear to the hearts of romantic youth of both sexes, who at 84 is passing his last days at his Edgewood farm in his native Connecticut. Poe has been in his grave fifty-seven years; it is only one year less since Margaret Fuller met her tragic end, and others of the group have been dead for half a century. Mr. Mitchell, if he ever looks upon the picture, must feel indeed—

"like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed."

A Poem on Ernest Dowson.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Having read Helen Gray Cone's exquisite poem on Keats and Tennyson in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, I inclose a few lines on Ernest Dowson, which express, however inadequately, one reader's appreciation of some of the most beautiful of modern poetry.

ERNEST DOWSON: AN APPRECIATION.

Sad singer of the sorrows of the soul!
Thy moon-mad music would have power to wake
Some pale cold dryad of an earlier age
From dreamful sleep in some old beechen grove,
From dreamful sleep, so sweet to wake is pain;
To come forth thrusting back her braided hair,
Her soft dark hair that seems a living thing,
From her white brows, her whole soul warmed to hear
Thy flowerlike verse—so sweetly beautiful
The pale lost lilies of thy heart's desires!
Thinking she heard the great god Pan himself,
The goat-god, playing in a mournful strain,
Of Aphrodite of the sun-dyed hair
Whom mortals seeing once must worship ever
Their lives well lost for one bright goddess smile;
Of the moon maidens of pale Artemis
Whose kiss brings love—ever unsatisfied
And ever seeking.

What Is Poetry?

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In a recent issue of The Literary Digest I read a so-called poem by Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, entitled "There's No Place Like the Old Place," and a well-known poet, Mr. Bliss Carman, refers to these lines as being not only "significant," but "fine." The piece referred to may be both—it would be presumptuous in a backwoodsman to doubt the inspirations of a bard—but what I am really interested in learning is whether this new version of "Home, Sweet Home," is technically (that is, constructively,) poetry or prose.

I do not ask that my letter be published, (though I should much like to have some of your correspondents ventilate their views as to the poetic value of Whitman's panoramic programmes, for instance,) but merely wish that some competent authority would give me some simple rule of thumb, not by which I could distinguish what is "significant" and "fine" from what is insignificant and fustian, (that would be impossible,) but which would enable me to decide whether a certain composition should be classed as prose or poetry.

My impression was that any composition that ignored altogether the laws of rhyme or of rhythm was necessarily prose, never mind how poetic in its conception; but I am beginning to suspect that I was wrong and that a capital letter at the beginning of each line at once converts very poor prose into very fine poetry sometimes.

Proserpine, &c.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The only proper pronunciation of the Anglicized "Proserpine" is with the long vowel in the final (third) syllable. Such forms are common in Shakespeare, though he does not use this particular one. He has, however, "Desdemon," (five times in the folio;) "Cressid," (often;) "Helicane," for "Helicanus," (three times;) "Prosper" for "Prospero," (three;) "Pandar" for "Panderus," (three;) "Helen" for "Helena" in "Midsummer Night's Dream"; "Philostrate" for "Philostratus," (same play;) "Enobarbe" for "Enobarbus," and sundry other such contracted forms of classical proper names. Some of them are often incorrectly divided and accented by readers. For instance, I have heard a college professor of English in a Boston Shakespeare club read "Philostrate" as a quadrisyllable with the accent on the second syllable instead of making it a trisyllable with the accent on the first syllable, in the line, "Go, Philostrate, stir up the Athenian youth," &c. Milton has "Brute" (a common English form of the name of the mythical "Brutus the Trojan") in "Comus." W. J. R.

Mr. Morrissey's Book.

Mr. James W. Morrissey, author of the stories "Noted Men and Women" which recently appeared simultaneously in a large number of newspapers, East and West, has received offers for the publication of his work in book form from two New York publishers, but has refrained from accepting them for the reason that on his recent tour as manager of Mme. Modjeska Mr. Morrissey personally received many orders for copies of the book to be delivered when issued, thus enhancing the pecuniary value of the publication. Hence Mr. Morrissey thinks he is justified in desiring better terms than those generally offered. The book is made up of personal sketches of distinguished men and women Mr. Morrissey has been associated with in his career as manager, beginning with the second American tour of Charles Dickens.

Macmillan's Preparations.

The Macmillan Company has in active preparation for early issue the "Memoir of Archbishop Temple," by "Seven Friends," which E. G. Sandford, Archdeacon of Exeter, is editing. The book will contain chapters on Temple's "Earlier Years," by Canon Wilson of Worcester; "Education Office," by H. J. Roby; "Rugby," by F. E. Kitchener; "Exeter," by Archdeacon Sandford; "London," by Archdeacon Bevan; "The Primacy," by the Bishop of Bristol; "Canterbury," by Archdeacon Spooner, and a supplement by the editor. The work will be in two volumes and include a number of illustrations.

The Genius

A novel of stirring plot, by Margaret Potter, and yet a striking presentation of the artistic temperament in its most interesting phases. The story is based upon the life of a famous Russian composer—the sensitive, gifted son of a powerful, iron-handed government official. His career is a strange and deeply moving tale of shifting fortunes, dramatic episodes and final artistic triumphs.

Miss Primrose

The freshness and tender simplicity of Roy Rolfe Gilson's books have won for him a large circle of readers. Mr. Gilson interprets child life with rare insight, and his portrayal of little Bertram has the same simplicity and charm that have made his former books so popular. The pictures of village life are exquisitely shaded, and Miss Primrose's romance adds a touch of sentiment and humor to a story of delightful originality.

MARK TWAIN'S Library of Humor

The initial volume, Men and Things, is a veritable encyclopædia of humor, containing the best work of such prominent humorists as George Ade, John Kendrick Bangs, "Mr. Dooley," Artemus Ward, Eugene Field, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Bill Nye, etc., etc., and Mark Twain himself. That the great editor knows what is best in humor and how to select it goes without saying. Men and Things is the perfection of fun. BIELSCHOWSKY'S LIFE OF GOETHE.

DR. J. PERRY WORDEN,
Professor of Modern Languages, Kalamazoo College.

HALF a dozen biographies of Goethe have appeared in German during the last fifteen years, but none have the Germans received with such welcome as that of Bielschowsky, an invalid Silesian schoolmaster, whose first volume, now making its way into English, was published in 1895 under the title "Goethe, sein Leben und seine Werke." Its success, in part, was from the first assured. Bielschowsky gave ear to Goethe in his remark to Meyer, "All the officious considerations of biographers are of little value when compared with the naïve details of a great life," and following this guide it was comparatively easy to give us the clearest understanding of Goethe as a type of the ideal man.

The work offers little that has not been known of the parentage and boyhood of the great poet, but we are brought into close touch with his stern, tutoring father, and his kind mother, with her stories and readings from the Bible, which so affected Goethe's moral and literary development. We learn also something new of Goethe's early propensity to making love. Bielschowsky's enthusiasm runs away with him in claiming of the lad that, "whenever he tried to think of something that he would like to have, which would bring him happiness in life, the fancy picture that preserved the greatest charm for him was the wreath of laurel woven to decorate the poet." Goethe showed unusual precocity at the age of 7, but his declaration in "Wilhelm Meister," "From my youth on it was my dimly conscious purpose and desire to develop myself just as I am," is an afterwriting and perhaps an afterthought. Young Goethe's letter seven years later, by which he sought admission to a "virtue league," proves his facility in composition, self-analysis, and dominating humor, and reminds one of the lad Schiller's humble letter to his kidnapping sovereign: "One of my chief failings is that I am somewhat impetuous; I am used to laying down the law, yet when I have nothing to say I can hold my tongue." Here the question arises, What was the color of the boy Goethe's eyes? His mother speaks of them as "big, black eyes"; Wieland, Gleim, and others also refer to his black eyes, but Bielschowsky, ignoring even the clever mother's testimony, says that, "as a matter of fact, they were brown, as is shown by several good observers, but, above all, by the oil paintings. His pupils were of such extraordinary size and heavy splendor that the narrow, brown iris was lost sight of."

PASSING over the Leipsic period as unproductive of any important results to Goethe by his contact with the university, Bielschowsky agrees with Goedeke, Düntzer, and Wolff in finding a more attractive picture in the youth at Strasburg. He visited mines, and was stimulated with a scientific spirit which he continued to display all the rest of his life. He studied medicine, and overcame his disgust at diseased flesh or dead bodies. He climbed out on the spire of the Strasburg Cathedral and cured himself of dizziness. He walked among drummers and became proof against noise. He visited churches and graveyards in the small hours of the night and lost all fear of darkness and ghosts. And he raved over Gothic architecture, probably because he had never before seen a work of such greatness, sublimity, and beauty as the Strasburg Minster, and became an apostle of the Sturm und Drang when "outwardly the State and society put shackles upon their hands and feet, put wigs upon their heads, daubed their faces with paint or dusted them with powder," when "a young generation with the consciousness of power had need of action, stormy action," and when it believed that "not the well-ordered flow of speech, but only an impassioned stammering, an ecstatic babbling, was capable of uttering the inner Storm and Stress."

Bielschowsky points out an error of months in Goethe's statement as to his visit to the parsonage in Sesenheim, which seems plausible, for Lewes showed the poet's mistake in declaring that he was but two days with Friederike, and that he withheld from Herder all knowledge of writing Götz. While materially abbreviating the accepted story of the dancing master's daughters, Bielschowsky rejects the suggestion that it is artistic fiction.

FINISHING his work at the university with the astounding thesis, "Law is the most glorious of all studies," Goethe returned to Frankfort to practice at the bar, as his father thought. The Storm and Stress, however, still pulsated in his veins; "for days he lived on the roads like a messenger, he roamed about through Frankfort, came in at one gate, ate his dinner at one of the large hotels, and then walked out of the city at another gate." Among those with whom he then came in contact was Merck, in whom Herman Grimm, looking through Goethe's spectacles, sees only a nullity, while Bielschowsky, taking the same spectacles, finds in him a man of "acute understanding, poetic talent, and fine taste, and a good student of English." The world knows Merck as the prototype of Mephistopheles.

An amusing story is told incident to Goethe's first visit to Weimar. Capt. von Knebel, having read "Werther," sought Goethe out in Frankfort, and arranged for him to meet Karl August, then passing through the city. Goethe was invited to Weimar; it was agreed that he should be picked up by Chamberlain von Kalb, who would follow with a new carriage, and he took formal leave of his friends. Two weeks went by, however, and no carriage came; and Goethe, goaded by his father's reminder that he had often said that it was "not well to eat cherries with great lords," set off for Italy, but he got no further than Heidelberg; he was recalled by a messenger from the Duke's Chamberlain, and none too soon, for he was fast getting entangled in another love affair.

ARRIVED in Weimar, Goethe and the Duke entered on the gay, unrestrained life for which the poet has always been so roundly blamed. Bielschowsky, however, frankly comes to his defense, asserting that it was necessary that Goethe should prove his physical prowess, his love of sport, and his endurance of fatigue in order to win the respect of the Duke and his courtiers, and later to exercise the influence for good that he did, and that only by accompanying the Duke on his wild jaunts could he be present to restrain him from harm. The Duke receives at Bielschowsky's hands the most favorable delineation found in any of Goethe's biographies, nor is the presentation of the noble Duchess Anna Amalia less than we would desire. "Next to Frederick II.," he says, "Karl August was without any question the greatest Prince in Germany." He was born a great man, was delicately responsive to art and poetry, as shown by letter and diary, and faithful to friends, as is seen in his letter of May 10, "an imperishable monument which the Duke erected to his own and Goethe's honor" when President von Fritsch protested against Goethe's elevation to the ministry and threatened to resign. The protest brought Anna Amalia also to Goethe's rescue with a burning epistle, in which she declared of the poet that "his religion is that of a good, true Christian and teaches him to love his neighbor and to seek to make him happy."

⁂

IN bold lines Goethe stands forth in the Departments of State, Finance, and War, improving the duchy and shaping outward affairs, keeping a tight rein on the Duke, and so restricting his expenditures that Stein was forced to return to his own table to eat, a fact that seriously interfered with Goethe's freedom in visiting Frau von Stein. To Goethe, according to Bielschowsky, belongs much credit for early working for a federation of the German States; "he, the poet, was the only man at the time who seized an auspicious moment with quick energy, and attempted to cure the sickly German Empire." "I look neither to the right nor to the left," says Goethe, "and my old motto is always copied above a new office—Hic est aut nunquam, quod quaerimus," a sentiment, by the way, which he changed in Wilhelm Meister's Lehrjahre to "Here or nowhere is America." The question of Goethe's posing as an aristocrat Bielschowsky disposes of by quoting the poet on seeing the humble miners and their families at Ilmenau. "How this journey has taught me to love the class of men which is called the lower, which, however, in the eyes of God is certainly the highest. Here one finds all virtues united—self-restraint, contentment, straightforwardness, fidelity, joy over the most humble possessions, innocence, patience." Finally we have a familiar and pleasing narrative of Goethe's journey to Italy at the end of his long and faithful public service. "It is refreshing to hear him laugh in the popular theatres of Venice and Naples, refreshing to see with what delight he eats his figs on Lago di Garda, or his grapes in the market place of Vicenza. With the same degree of sensuous pleasure he listens to the soft melodies of the night, and revels in the charms of the happiness of love." One of his love adventures there was with Maddalena Riggi, who nearly captured his heart, and still another was with Faustina, a beauty of coarser sentiments, who, Bielschowsky thinks, is the chief figure, and not Christiane Vulpius, as is commonly held, in the Romische Elegieen.

⁂

GOETHE'S love affairs naturally come in for considerable attention at the hands of a biographer of detail, and portrait after portrait in Goethe's gallery of fair women is sketched and tinted. Herman Grimm and Boyesen think that Goethe may have overdrawn the picture of Friederike, thereby doing himself injustice, and Grimm even questions whether it is sober truth or dreamy fiction. But Bielschowsky accepts as probable Goethe's narrative, and, in response to the question, Why did Goethe leave Friederike? finds the solution in Goethe's story, "Die neue Melusine," written about that time, in which the hero falls in love with a gentle creature of the dwarf kingdom, with whom he can remain only on condition that he become as small as she is: "the giant had no desire to lead the life of a dwarf." Toward Frau von Stein, also, he turns a sympathetic heart. "Goethe's relation to Charlotte von Stein was the most remarkable, most important, most enduring that he ever had with any woman. Not a beautiful, charming maiden; not a lovely rosebud; not even a full-blown rose, such as often reaches its full splendor at the noontime of life, but a suffering, married woman, almost faded, agreeable in appearance, but not what would be called beautiful, the mother of seven children, and herself seven years older than Goethe"—such was the woman who aroused in him passionate love and sentimental adoration, who "triumphed over all the lovely girls that he met on his journey through life," and all because of her ability to understand his soul as no one else ever understood it. Notwithstanding this apparent fickleness, however, Goethe was capable of constant filial affection.

⁂

DEALING with Goethe's contemporaries in the literary world, Bielschowsky points out that Gottsched "was a superannuated authority who had outlived his reputation when Goethe came to Leipsic," and who "was even unable to assert his social standing," and that while Gellert "stood extraordinarily high," "within his narrow field of vision there grew no fruits that Goethe could enjoy." Although Goethe makes no mention of Lessing's "Dramaturgie" as having influenced him in his Leipsic period, Bielschowsky believes that Goethe was familiar with it; he finds it alluded to in two different preliminary outlines of "Dichtung und Wahrheit," while Lessing, he believes, was silently under the spell of Goethe's genius, "although he gave little outward sign of it." The story of how Goethe first met Herder, was attracted to and repelled by him, is again told with charming touches. "Herder spared nothing. Now it was Goethe's name, now his false taste, now his innocent peculiarities or hobbies, now his lack of acuteness, upon which the sage poured out his sharp acidity; but nothing could induce Goethe to forsake the man. He wrestled with him, as Jacob with the angel of the Lord, and held him fast until he received a blessing." Herder wrote "Goethe is really a good fellow—only somewhat fickle and sparrowlike," and Lewes observed: "It is curious that although Herder took a great liking to his young friend he seems to have had little suspicion of his genius." Bielschowsky, however, says: "The aristocratic indifference with which he here speaks of Goethe was for the most part feigned." Klopstock, the author of the "Messias," only partially fulfilled Goethe's expectations, as may be inferred from a poem Goethe wrote on his return from conversing with him, "in which he says he would rather drive, young and intoxicated, at top speed to hell than grow gray at a slow trot;" in all the time that Goethe was with him Klopstock talked on riding and skating, and not a word about poetry and literature.

BIELSCHOWSKY has been very successful in overhauling the mass of data bearing on Goethe's literary works and happy in their analysis. His acceptance of other reductions, however, than those commonly referred to results in the omission from this first volume of several works that one would naturally expect to find treated here. He finds conclusive proof that "Clavigo" sprang from Goethe's remorse over his relation to Friederike; Werther, "next to Hamlet the most peculiar figure in the literary world," was due not alone to the story of Jerusalem, but to Goethe's own repeated contemplation of suicide; Stella is another outgrowth from Goethe's own life, and Bielschowsky places little importance in the suggestion that he drew the theme from Swift's bigamous marriage.

Throughout the volume Bielschowsky displays considerable originality of style, as when in describing the German Supreme Court at Wetzlar he refers to it as a "dust-covered, antiquated mechanism, whose rusty wheels, which slowly ploughed through the sand of 16,000 undecided cases, gave forth a frightful creak at every turn." Goethe's waves of melancholy in the Werther period are described as "sporadic—only dark veins running through the white marble of his soul, not rampant weeds which fasten their roots in the smallest crevices and gradually overrun the marble and crumble it to pieces"; when he awakened to a new and healthier life, "he dragged one mighty subject after another into his poetic workshop and played with the great blocks of marble as if they were pebbles; he did not finish 'Prometheus' not merely because in his poetic forest the trees grew so close to one another that one took away light and air from the other; it was hard for the poet to find a solution to satisfy himself." Two things seem defective in the volume: Bielschowsky has been no more successful than his predecessors in getting at the details incident to Goethe's administration of public office at Weimar, and less even than others has he appreciated the dramatic significance of Goethe's first touch with Schiller when Goethe visited the military school in Würtemberg, which he disposes of in two lines. The volume is well printed, but most inadequately illustrated. Tischbein's celebrated portrait of Goethe at least might have been added to the long chapter on the journey to Italy.

*THE LIFE OF GOETHE. By Albert Bielschowsky, Ph. D. Authorized Translation from the German by William A. Cooper, A. M. Vol. I., 1749-1788. 8vo. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50.

HISTORIC FOOT NOTES.

THIS JOHN RUSSELL, forgotten though he undoubtedly has been these thrice fifty years and historically insignificant as he is anyhow, has done antiquarians and lovers of history generally no little service in preserving the bundle of letters which make up the present volume, for the writers of the letters include a great many men who have not been forgotten—not a few especially of the Captains of the King's navy in the days of the unfortunate Admiral Byng. Admiral Byng himself is, in fact, one of them, for Russell's son was purser aboard his ship.

Of John Russell's origin there seems to be no clear record. He used the Bedford arms, and the author thinks it likely that he was a distant kinsman of the ducal house. His occupation was that of agent for greater men, his especial patron and very good friend (as many letters show) being Charles, second Duke of Richmond and Lennox, grandson of the Merry Monarch, though, to be sure, the royal blood in his veins had no legal business there. We find Russell, first, appointed "his Majesty's Consul General at Tetuan, in the dominions of the Emperor of Morocco," and having anything but a pleasant time in Barbary with the mad and sottish Muley Hamet, who sat at that time upon the Moorish throne. All this has already been related by Capt. Braithwaite's "History of the Revolutions in Morocco," (published 1729,) and is only here rehearsed to give the letters a background. This is an incidental bit from that narrative: "Yesterday the Emperor ordered the boy that looked after his pipes and tobacco to be flung down a precipice for stopping his pipe too hard, of which he died; to-day he killed two of his cooks because his dinner did not please him."

RUSSELL presently returned to England and became Clerk of the Cheque at Woolwich, later he was a Commissioner of the Victualing Office, and still later Consul at Lisbon and Minister to the Court of Portugal. He died in January, 1752.

The letters printed here include communications on all sorts of subjects, from many kinds of people. John, fourth Duke of Bedford, writes to Mr. Russell about impressed seamen. He writes to him also to decline a present of goats, as "mischievous in barking trees," also to "return many thanks for your offer of a Tiger, but I do not care to concern myself with any of those sort of animals." Then he writes inviting Mr. Russell and Mrs. Russell to Woburn. The letters from the Duke of Richmond are very numerous. His Grace usually addresses Mr. Russell as "Dear Bumbo," and requires his help about a thousand things, elections, wines, the name of a horse. He frequently invites him to Goodwood, and seems to rely upon him infinitely and prize him highly. Here is a part of a note which reads rather curiously:

> Dear Bumbo: The Dutchess of Richmond has now bathed nine times in her new house, and finds it very convenient. She thinks it has done her good, though I own I think she did not much want it. She intends to continue bathing a month longer.

The Duke winds up another letter thus: "My wife and I join in our services to Bumbessa, Bumbinettos, and Bumbinettas," meaning Mrs. Russell, and the little boy and girl Russells.

⁂

ALL this is curious merely, but many of the letters from Captains of frigates at sea, from Admirals of fleets, from sea Jack serving on the Captain man-of-war, give accounts of stirring and historical matters. William Campbell, purser of H. M. S. Bedford, for instance, writes an account of the expedition of Admiral Vernon against Porto Bello, while he and others describe the Panama fiasco following. Capt. Hardy, Capt. Vanbrugh, and many others tell of sea fights, cruises, and prizes of French and Spanish ships.

⁂

MANY of the letters deal with orders and gifts of Hyson tea, pipes of wine, and casks of rum. One sea Captain sends home a shipload of shells, at that time much in demand for constructing grottoes. All of them appear to count Mr. Russell among the closest of their friends, many have kind messages for his family. Some letters refer to the marriages of his two daughters, others to the rather fantastic behavior of his younger son Wager, named after Admiral Sir Charles Wager, the great naval hero of his day.

To give the book its value in a word, it is full of foot notes to history.

BOSTON NOTES.

Beauties of the "Manuscript Edition" of Thoreau—The "Golden Greyhound" and Other Novels.

ONE would suppose that the superbly inlaid written folio leaf which is the mark of the "Manuscript Thoreau" was sufficient novelty, even for a limited edition bound in dull forest tints of Levant and marbled paper, as if for a faun's library, but the frontispieces, flower photographs, taken on the very book leaf present an entirely new species of illustrations. The blossoms chosen are those especially dear to Thoreau, such as the harebell and the pond lily, and the pictures are extraordinary in the strength of their shadows and the brilliancy of their lights.

⁂

Mr. Charles Clark Munn's "The Girl from Tim's Place," published next week, is of the same stuff as his former books, in spite of its introduction of a little colony of degenerate creatures in whose portrayal he takes no pleasure, finding his delight in describing good and gentle ladies of nature's own making. To some of these, taken from his earlier books, he gives the training of the "Girl" who escapes from the colony and, thanks to them, outgrows all its evil influences. Old Cy Walker, kinsman of John Norton, and more remotely of Leather Stocking, reappears in this story, and the women, the heroine excepted, are also taken from former stories, but the plot is quite independent of any earlier book. The publishers are the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company.

⁂

The novel reader who prefers to do his own detecting rather than to read how superbly it was done by a fictitious person will find his opportunity in Dwight Tilton's "The Golden Greyhound," and no previous reading of its plural authors' works will prepare him for the story. It centres about a criminal project of a size possible only under modern conditions and carried on by the perversion of the very newest scientific appliances, and after the very late moment at which the solution of its mystery appears, the reader finds a puzzle almost as formidable in the question, "How can the fate of a hero, a heroine, $50,000,000 in gold, a whole company of villains, and an ocean steamer, be arranged in a few pages?" Arranged it is, for somewhere, somehow, the rather verbose Dwight Tilton of earlier novels has acquired the art of brevity and of connecting the entire machinery of his plot with a tiny mainspring. The publishers have made arrangements with Messrs. S. Dean & Son to issue an English edition, and a large order has been received from Australia.

⁂

English and Australian editions are also the destiny of Miss A. B. Ward's "The Sage Brush Parson," now going into its sixth American edition. "On the Firing Line" was liked so well in England and the colonies that a similar pleasant fate awaits Miss Anna Chapin Ray's "Hearts and Creeds." The subject of the book, the marriage of an English Protestant Canadian and a Catholic French Canadian, has already been announced, but any fear that it might add to the difficulties encountered at every turn in Canadian society and politics was misplaced. Miss Ray avoids the logical discussion, and confines herself to the daily small vexations, the little foxes that gnaw the vines in the field of those unequally yoked, and many a story of marriage between two believers in slightly varying forms of evangelical Protestantism is more disputatious.

⁂

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. are preparing a third edition of "All by Wire" for Summer reading, setting a lowered price upon it, but not otherwise changing it. They have made arrangements with Mr. George Barr McCutcheon, Mr. W. D. Nesbit, and Mr. Nixon Waterman to prepare the humorous matter for the second year of "The Foolish Almanac" to be issued next September. Mr. Archibald Eyre, the author of "The Girl in Waiting," will be remembered by some novel readers as the author of "The Guardian" and "The Trifler," both of which were praised by The Quarterly Review. The publishers' opinion of the story was not in the least influenced by any of these things; for by one of those chances only too common in these days when lierary agents and not the paternally careful auther sent out manuscripts, the name did not accompany the story sent to them, and they accepted it because they themselves liked it.

⁂

The possible abuses of new inventions for which no counter invention has yet been made, the theme which attracted Mr. G. Sidney Paternoster when he wrote "The Motor Pirate," still fascinates him, and he resuscitates its dead villain for use in "The Cruise of the Conqueror," and transforms him from a comparatively harmless highwayman into a pirate by giving him an incomparable motor boat. Also he makes him even more diabolically unscrupulous, so that at one time one is prepared to hear of his destroying a goodly fraction of the British Navy, and his devices are so cunning that one loses faith in the honesty of everything that floats. At the end of the story he disappears, probably to return with an airship or perhaps some yet uninvented burrowing machine. This book is published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co., and will probably appear before Mr. Rupert Sargent Holland's "The Count at Harvard," which is delayed because its author, a member of the Philadelphia City Reform Party, preferred to give his time and attention to Philadelphia politics rather than to come to Boston for a necessary interview with his publisher.

⁂

An amusing little story by Miss Alice Brown is to be published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. under the title "The Court of Love." It presents Miss Brown in the guise of a humorist, a part which she plays very sympathetically and apparently with greater pleasure than she finds in her more serious aspects. The book is to be published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

FOUNDERS OF GEOLOGY.

SIR ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F. R. S., the well-known English lecturer and writer on geological topics, has lengthened the six lectures he delivered at Johns Hopkins University in 1896, on "The Founders of Geology," which were published in book form in 1897. The expanision is now about to be issued by the Macmillan Company in a large octavo of nearly 500 pages and under the original title. In this extension, the author writes, he has adhered to his original plan of tracing the origin and slow development of geological science, rather in an account of the careers of a few of the chief leaders by whom the progress has been mainly effected, than in an attempt to summarize also the work of their less illustrious contemporaries.

Among those mentioned in the book are the early observers in Italy—Leonardo da Vinci, Steno, Moro, &c.; the English cosmogonists—Burnett, Woodward, and others; Descartes, Leibnitz, Buffon, and De Maillet, Knorr, Beringer and Walch, Palissy in France, and Guettard, Demarest, and the foundation of volcanic geology, Pallas and De Saussure, Hutton and Playfair, Lamarck, Cuvier and Brongniart, Thomas Webster and W. H. Fitton, Louis Agassiz, William Nicol and Henry Clifton Sorby, and many others. Reference is made not only to the work of these men, but also to their writings on the subject and their relations with others of their time. The author says in his concluding chapter:

> In the account which has been presented in this volume of the work of some of the more notable men who have created the science of geology, one or two leading facts stand out prominently before us. In the first place, even in the list of selected names which we have considered, it is remarkable how varied have been the ordinary avocations of these pioneers. The majority have been men engaged in other pursuits. * * * In the second place, the history of geological science presents some conspicuous examples of the length of time that may elapse before a fecund idea comes to germinate and bear fruit. * * * In the third and last place, it seems to me that one important lesson to be learned from a review of the successive stages in the foundation and development of geology is the absolute necessity of avoiding dogmatism.

The Bible Student and Teacher.

The March number of this magazine (New York: The Bible House) is a strong and interesting number. In a satirical paper, entitled "Beware the Evangelist," the Rev. Dr. David James Burrell calls attention to the work of Christ the Evangelist and the result of His propaganda. Other articles on Biblical subjects are: "Varieties of Unbelief as to the Bible," by the Rev. Cornelius Walker, D. D.; "The Bible in the Light of Modern Thought," by the Rev. William H. Bates, D. D.; "The Pastor's Opportunity as a Bible Teacher," by the Rev. W. E. Scofield; there is a report of the address given by Prof. G. Frederick Wright of Oberlin on his recent return from a tour in Egypt, entitled "The Credibility of the Early Bible History in the Light of Recent Explorations." The editor, Dr. D. S. Gregory, contributes an excellent outline view of the Sermon on the Mount and continues his Daily Bible Study and Readings, which are proving a source of help and satisfaction to a large number of readers. Altogether the number is of a high, scholarly order.

Burke's "Peerage."

Besides the genealogical accounts of the families of the peers and Baronets of Great Britain, with their collateral branches, in "Burke's Peerage and Baronetage," which the Putnams are just bringing out here, the book contains an account of the Knightage.

BARBARA WINSLOW, REBEL

By ELIZABETH ELLIS

"A romance in gray and rose, daintily old-fashioned and full of the good old glamour of brave deeds and young love.

"The cover, which is an exquisite piece of decorative bookmaking, is so perfectly indicative of the story, that one may unhesitatingly use it as a guide to the reading or the non-reading of the book." —Life.

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

B. H. C., Wenham, Mass.—W. H. F., Flatbush, inquires for a song entitled "A Fine Old Irish Gentleman." On Page 142 of "Good Old Songs We Used to Sing," published about 1887 by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, he will find a song with that title, written by J. Brougham, and set to the same music as "The Fine Old English Gentleman," which may be what he is looking for. There are six stanzas of rather irregular metre, the last line of each being, with slight variations:

Other friends locate the song in "The Treasury of Song for the Home Circle," (1882;) in "almost any collection of college and patriotic songs," and ascribe it variously to Brougham and to an anonymous writer. It is sung to the air of "A Fine Old English Gentleman."

F. N. T. H., Goldsboro, N. C.—Can you direct me to some of the literature of Socialism in Russia, or where I can find at least some of the names of books or pamphlets on the subject? My special need is some specially comprehensive book.

The literature in English on the subject is scanty. Stepniak's "King Stork and King Log," (Scribner's;) Joubert's "Truth About the Czar and the Present State of Russia," (Lippincott;) Milyoukov "Russia and Its Crisis," (University of Chicago Press,) are recent books. Two magazine articles are "The Russian Awakening," Living Age, July 26, 1902, and "The Social Movement in Russia," Review of Reviews, December, 1904.

M. C. L., Plainfield, N. J.—In Appeals of Feb. 17 E. R. D. evidently refers to the notice, not a review, in THE SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS of Feb. 10, of the prospective issue in book form of the Hulsean lectures of Dr. Stubbs, Dean of Ely, upon "The Christ of English Poetry." The four representative periods chosen for witness to the subject were named as those of Cynewulf, Langland, Shakespeare, and Browning. In the "Recollections" of Mr. A. I. Shand the writer speaks of a dinner where, besides himself, Sir Edward Hamley and Herbert Spencer were the only diners, and describes how the philosopher, prompted by the American ducks on the menu and the fact that Hamley had once served in Canada, "went in for high jinks and drolleries." "He donned the dress of a Noel Guisard" * * * and "discussed transatlantic manners, red Indian customs, and the very habits of amorous Indian dogs with the profundity of omniscience and the rollicking fun of a Toole." Who were Noel Guisard and Toole? Were they real or literary characters?

Toole is John Lawrence Toole, a famous English low comedian, who has been on the stage since 1852; Noël Guisard is a Christmas mummer, the French equivalent for the English "Waits."

D. T. Lawrence, Utica, N. Y.—In my young days I used to read and sing a song entitled "Mrs. Lofty and I." It ran like this:

"Mrs. Lofty keeps her carriage. So do I.
She has dapple grays to draw it. Nane have I."

Can the poetry be found now? If so, where?

"Mrs. Lofty and I" is anonymous. It may be found in many collections, among others in Cumnock's School Speaker, (McClurg,) and Harper's School Speaker, Vol. III., (American Book Company.)

MAY EELIE.—Can you tell me anything about a poem called "The Legend of the Organ Builder"? It tells of a wonderful organ made to play of itself.

THE ÉTERNAL SPRING

By NEITH BOYCE
(Mrs. Hutchins Hapgood.)

"There is a fine literary quality in the novel throughout. One may look quite a way without finding one to match it in felicity and distinction of phrase. It is a high-bred book—never bald, aggressive, or commonplace."
—Miss Elia W. Peattie, in Chicago Tribune.

W. FISK.—Can you tell me where I can find these lines:

"Shule, shule, shule agra,
Dreams of joy are vanished now."?

This is anonymous, and may be found in the Popular English Ballads, Vol. IV., in a version by A. P. Graves.

H. S. D., Brooklyn.—In the old schoolbooks was a poem, only two lines of which I can call to mind:

"Here the sword and sceptre rust,
Earth to earth and dust to dust."

Could you kindly tell me the author, or where the poem could be found?

This is the Rev. George Croly's "Dirge," printed in Schaff and Gilman's "Library of Religious Poetry" under the title "Death and Resurrection"; it is also in Croly's collected poems.

S. A. BOYLE, Philadelphia.—A. C. S., Ocean Grove, N. J., asks for the poem of Oscar Wilde in which occurs the line:

"Each man kills the thing he loves."

It is in the seventh stanza of the "Ballad of Reading Gaol."

Many other friends have sent the same answer.

C. E., Washington.—Has "Bedtime" or "Message" ever been suggested as a solution to the charade by Bishop Wilberforce, given in your paper of the 17th?

H. S. HACKER, New York City.—In answer to T. S. Nedham's request for a solution to Wilberforce's charade, I forward the following: "Life-Time."

A. J. BROWN, Somers, N. Y.—I had a copy of the poem to "Ireland," addressed to "Rosaleen." Can you tell me anything of the author and the circumstances under which this remarkable poem was written? Has it been printed lately where I should be likely to get it? I wish it for a scrapbook.

"Rosaleen" was by James Clarence Mangan, (1803-1849.) You will find it in Chambers's Cyclopaedia of English Literature, Vol. III., Page 359, and in McCarthy's Irish Literature, Vol. VI., Page 2,363. It is an adaptation from the Irish, published in the Irish Penny Journal. See the life of Mangan, by D. J. O'Donoghue, 1897.

L. S. S.—Can you inform me as to the institution or order alluded to in Lowell's rhymed letter to Bartlett: "Fit for an Abbot of Theleme"?

Thélème, in Rabelais's famous satire, was the abbey given by Grangousier to Friar John because of the aid he had rendered to him. It was stored with all manner of good things and inhabited by all manner of merry people, and its only rule was "Do what you wish." Lowell makes the word rhyme with "dream."

SCHOLASTICA.—Can you tell me where I can get a copy of Grant Duff's "History of the Marathas"? Is there any place in or near New York where I can consult a file of the Allahabad (India) Pioneer from the years 1884 to 1888?

The eighty-year-old history of the Marathas is not catalogued in this city. There seems to be no file of the Allahabad Pioneer in this city.

J. H. KEENE, Baltimore—Please tell me where the phrase is to be found, "When night dogs run all sorts of deer are chased." It sounds Shakespearean.

It is in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," Act V., Scene V., Line 252, about seven lines from the end of the play.

H. E. M.—Permit me to draw your notice to an error in your answer to Rossetta R.'s question regarding the artist Sichel's work. You state that he does not paint Madonnas. He has painted two; one a particularly lovely Mother and Child, of which I send you prints.

W. H. SHELTON.—For the information of Seumas O'Sheel (Review, Feb. 24) I send you a list of some of the coronation books in the library of the Salmagundi Club: 1. Coronation of George IV. Elephant folio. Colored plates. London. 1839. 2. Coronation of James II. Entire procession. London. 1687. 3. Coronation of George III. and Queen Charlotte. London. 1820. Ten volumes on the coronation of King Edward VII. Also a great folio reproducing the procession at the completion of the Cologne Cathedral, in old costumes, and the German guilds.

BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY, Indianapolis.—We note a request for the name of the author of the following lines:

"Your flag and my flag, and how it flies today
In your land and my land and half the world away."

They are from Mr. Wilbur D. Nesbit's poem entitled "A Song for Flag Day," included in his volume entitled "The Trail to Boyland," which we published a little over a year ago.

T. S. NEDHAM, New York—"Notes and Queries," 10th S., Vol. V., Page 76, says that the epigram,

"There is so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,
That it ill becomes any of us
To talk about the rest of us," is by R. L. Stevenson.

P. W. McI., Portland, Me.—Samuel T. Pickard is in error in saying that F. Nicholls Crouch died in Baltimore. Prof. Crouch died in Portland, Me., in August, 1896, at the home of Mr. George Thomas on Danforth Street. He had passed the Summer at the Thomas house, and though in feeble health, received and entertained company almost to the last day of his life. His eighty-eighth birthday was celebrated by his Portlandt friends July 31, a few days before his death.

H. I. KANTOR, New York—The person inquiring as to the whereabouts of an article entitled "The Average Young Man and His Library" can find it in The Cosmopolitan for April, 1905.

W. B. W., New York.—Where are found the best accounts of Napoleon's battles? Of Marlborough's? Of any other wars?

Sir Edward Creasy's "Decisive Battles of the World" should meet your wants. Marlborough's life and campaigns, in three volumes, is published in the Bohn series. For Napoleon get Ropes's "Napoleon" and "The Campaign of Waterloo" and Gardner's "Quatre Bras," "Ligny and Waterloo." Get the histories of the other wars.

G. P. S., Waynesville, N. C.—Kindly name the author of the "Gadfly" and tell a little of her life; also the literary and ethical values of the book.

The author is Ethel Lilian Voynich, the wife of Wilfrid Voynich, a Lithuanian refugee living in England. She was born (Boole) in 1864, and married Mr. Voynich early in the nineties. The book is considered to be well written, but its ethical value is not considered great.

S. S. A., Newark.—Is there not a fourth act to the play "Man and Superman," as written by G. B. Shaw? I have heard that there is and after seeing the play I purchased the book, but find only three acts in it. If there is another act I hould like to read it.

There is a tremendously long third act, which is omitted in acting. You will find it in Brentano's edition of the play.

Appeals to Readers.

H. C. B., Carbondale, Penn.—Who is the author and from what poem are the following lines taken:

"Deposited upon the silent shore
Of memory, images and precious thoughts
That shall not die, and cannot be destroyed"?

W. FISK, Derby, Conn.—Where can I find these lines:

"I go not forth in pride of might
As warriors have gone"?

"There hangs high over Switzerland
A spirit great and strong"?

J. L. C., New York City.—Who is the author of these lines and where may they be found:

"Then what is life if not of love,
And what has earth of happiness
If love no longer there abide?
Then put all meaner things aside,
And leap to meet the rising tide.
And on that boundless, restless sea
There shall be none to come between,
Or keep your warm embrace from me,
And fairer isles than eye hath seen
Shall on our raptured vision rise,
The blissful isles of Paradise"?

F. C., New York—Some fifteen years ago I heard a poem read from the pulpit, of which I remember only the last line. It deals with a man whose desire to be near heaven and his God is so great that he climbs upward till finally he finds himself at the top of a high steeple. Seeing himself no nearer heaven than before he calls out, "Where art Thou, Lord?" receiving the answer, from far beneath him, "Down here among my people." This is the last line, I think. I should very much like the whole poem.

MINNA E. L., New York—I have asked at several places for a juvenile entitled "My Own Dolly." I had it when I was a child, but have been unable to find it anywhere. It is the story of a little girl who gets a doll, told in rhyme. The only part of it I remember is this: "Aren't you my Angelina Seraphina? Aren't you my own dear dolly?"

H. P. MAIN.—Can you give me any information regarding Mr. S. M. Grannis, a song-writer, who composed the music to "Do They Miss Me at Home," about 1850; "Your Mission," 1864, and several other popular songs of the time; also regarding the Rev. Knowles Shaw, author of the hymn "Bringing in the Sheaves"?

JENNIE ASCOUGH, Newark.—Can you tell me the name and in what book I can procure a poem, written by a woman, the story of which is of a girl who marries and moves North from her home, either in Tennessee or Virginia, and when the Confederates are being pursued during Morgan's raid she lends her horse to a young Confederate soldier who has been wounded, to help him get across the Southern line?

M. B. H.—I should like to get a hymn beginning: "O Palestine, O Palestine." It is not Faber's "O Paradise, O Paradise."

Father Gapon's Story.

The story of Father Gapon's life has been told piecemeal throughout the world since this priest was first made known out of Russia but little more than a year ago. It now appears in a single volume, "The Story of My Life," (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.,) with illustrations. As it stands the book is of little importance, though of some interest. The story of Gapon's life is told without dates, or without more than the vaguest reference to time; it is only since August, 1904, that the chronicler makes use of dates. This deficiency greatly diminishes the value of the book as a history of the coming Revolution or Reform in Russia; all that the volume tells is that since August, 1904, Father Gapon has been a revolutionist. So far as the story goes, he sprang, full-grown, into the field.

This is not to say that the book lacks interest; it does not. There are many good parts in the story of Gapon's boyhood, the description of the massacre of January, 1905, the account of his escape, are good. So are the pictures, which, though few in number, give interesting glimpses of Russian life in town and country. Time may be passed much more idly than by spending it in reading the story of the man who was once hailed as the leader of a revolution in Russia, but has shown himself rather a Peter the Hermit than a Moses.

They Knew It All the Time.

From The Bookman, (N. Y.)

There is something very amusing in the gravity with which the announcement is made that at last there is cleared up the mystery of the authorship of "The Garden of a Commuter's Wife." Mrs. Mabel Osgood Wright's anonymity was at best only half-anonymity. Almost everybody in touch with literary and publishing circles were quite aware of the writer's identity from the first. Mrs. Wright's reason for not having her name on the title page was that she had grown heartily tired of having each new work from her pen greeted with the monotonous verdict of "Another one of Mrs. Wright's charming nature books."

THE PUBLISHERS.

MRS. EDITH WHARTON'S works are to appear shortly in a uniform edition with the imprint of Charles Scribner's Sons. The volumes—seven in all, including "The Descent of Man," "Sanctuary," "The Greater Inclination," "Crucial Instances," "The Touchstones," "The Valley of Decision," (in one volume,) and "The House of Mirth" will all be issued in a form similar to that of this well-known author's latest novel.

From Dodd, Mead & Co. comes this week, after a preparation of several years, the important new work by James Phinney Baxter, M. A., "Jacques Cartier, Sieur de Limoilou," which includes a memoir of Cartier, the account of his voyage to the St. Lawrence, a bibliography, a fac simile of the manuscript of 1534, numerous notes, and a large number of illustrations.

The next volume in the Pilgrimage Series, "The Blackmore Country," by F. J. Snell, which the Macmillan Company will issue immediately, will, it is said, serve also as a "life" of R. D. Blackmore, for the late well-known author of "Lorna Doone," "The Maid of Sker," and "Perlycross" left instructions that no biography of him should be written. Besides describing the scenes of the stories, the author has also supplied his book with fifty illustrations from photographs. The same publishers announce that Owen Wister's new novel, "Lady Baltimore," will be brought out April 4 in a special large paper edition of 100 copies. About the same time they will also publish "Studies in Roman History," the new title of E. G. Hardy's "Christianity and the Roman Government," which has been expanded.

Prof. John C. Van Dyke's new book, "The Opal Sea," is out to-day, together with Frances Powell's "Prisoner of Ornith Farm." "The Opal Sea" deals with the ocean from the painter's point of view. It describes ocean plains, sea depths, currents, whirlpools, shoals, beaches, winds, wave forms, sea gardens, birds and fish, &c. Miss Powell's story deals with a disappearance. The scenes are laid near Long Island Sound.

This week's output from the Appletons includes Clara E. Laughlin's "The Complete Hostess," S. R. Crockett's "Fishers of Men," the adventures of whose boy hero have been compared with those of David Copperfield and Oliver Twist. For next week this house has down Seth Cook Comstock's story of a female Robin Hood who wars with the Duke of Burgundy, "Marcelle, the Mad."

With the report that "Nedra," George Barr McCutcheon's recently published novel about Chicagoans, is selling well, the publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co., announce that his new short story, "Cowardice Court," will be issued March 24, with illustrations by Harrison Fisher, and that a long novel may be expected from his pen in the Autumn.

Here are two brief items from the Macmillan Company: "The New Earth," by W. S. Harwood, author of "New Creations in Plant Life," which will appear this Spring, and "The Way of the Gods," John Luther Long's new novel, set down for the same time.

Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish in three weeks Beatrice Harraden's novel, "The Scholar's Daughter," which will appear also in Holland. Arrangements have been made for the publication of the story in other countries.

The well-known Danish publishing house of Milo's in Odense will publish in the near future a Danish translation of "As Others Saw Him," by Mr. Joseph Jacobs. This little sketch of the career of Jesus, seen with Jewish eyes, and recorded as if in the words of one of his trial Judges of the priestly Sanhedrin, has already been translated into German and Dutch. It appeared first in England in 1894, and has gone through several editions in England as well as here, the copyright for this country belonging to the Funk & Wagnalls Company. The translator into Danish is Mr. Frank Cramer, a Dane by birth but an American by choice, who for several years has been a member of the editorial staff of the Funk & Wagnalls Company. Mr. Cramer has contributed articles of historic interest to various American magazines, such as The Literary Digest, The New Era, The Four-Track News, &c.

Early in May, Fox, Duffield & Co. will publish the "Reminiscences of My Childhood and Youth," by the well-known Danish critic, Georg Brandes, translated into English by G. M. Fox-Davies. The book will appear simultaneously in London through William Heinemann and in Copenhagen in the original Danish.

Goya, the celebrated Spanish painter, is the subject of the new addition to the Langham Series of Art Monographs, published in this country by Charles Scribner's Sons. The book is from the pen of Richard Muther, author of volumes on Velasquez, Millet, and others. There are one photogravure and sixteen full-page half-tone illustrations in the book, which is bound in limp red leather. The introductory chapter is a brief survey of the period during which Francisco de Goya painted, between 1750 and 1820, with special reference to the history of Spain. Then come chapters on Goya and the Rococo, Goya in the Revolution, as engraver, in the reaction, &c. There is a catalogue of Goya's principal works. "Goya," writes Mr. Muther, "next to Velasquez, is to be accounted as the man whom the impressionists of our time have to thank for their most definite stimulus, their most immediate inspiration."

A new book by John M. Robertson, the well-known English author of ultra-radical studies in literary criticism, philosophy, and religion, is announced for publication this month by G. P. Putnam's Sons. It is a "Short History of Freethought, Ancient and Modern." Mr. Robertson endeavors to show that the reaction against traditional religious doctrines determines the progress of race. He writes in narrative style and enlivens his thesis with humor. A stalwart radical in all things, Mr. Robertson is a genial and sincere man.

Fox, Duffield & Co. will publish this Spring the long-awaited work, "Book of Tea," an interpretation of Japanese life by Okakura-Kakuzo. The delay was caused by the author's going to Japan in answer to a summons from the Mikado and his acceptance of the curatorship of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

A new volume is shortly to come from the pen of Martin Hume, author of books on Mary Stuart, Queen Elizabeth, Henry VIII.'s wives, &c. It will deal with the romances of some of the early Queens of Spain. Among the subjects to be discussed will be Isabella's share in the expedition of Columbus, Elizabeth of Valois's relations with her stepson Carlos, the action of Elizabeth of Bourbon in the overthrow of Olivares, and the vagaries of Louisa Isabel of Orleans. McClure, Phillips & Co. will probably publish the book.

A new Louisa May Alcott is said to have been found in Miss Mary Rodney, "just out of her 'teens," whose first book, "Four Girls," the C. M. Clark Publishing Company of Boston announces for early Spring issue. This is the story of the struggles, romances, courtships, and marriages of four girls just out of college.

Doubleday, Page & Co. announce for immediate issue "Lays of School Days," by J. W. Foley. This is a volume of poems which have already appeared in magazines and newspapers. The tragic and romantic episodes in the life of "hennery beamus" are here set forth.

Fox, Duffield & Co. announce for publication March 31 "The Ghosts of Their Ancestors," a story of old New York, by Weymer Jay Mills, for which John Rae has made several colored pictures. The author will be remembered through his recent first book, "Caroline of Courtlandt Street."

The Duttons will publish in this country very shortly "Bembo: A Tale of Italy," by Bernard Capes. The book is appearing in England with the title, "A Jay of Italy." It is a story of Italy in the fifteenth century.

Volume II. of the four-volume edition of "The Writings of Samuel Adams" will soon be brought out by the Putnams. The writings are edited by Henry A. Cushing, Ph. D., Professor of American History at Columbia University.

John W. Luce & Co. of Boston have made arrangements with McCutcheon, Nixon Waterman, Nesbit, and Virginia Van de Water for contributions to the 1907 Foolish Almanac, which will be issued in September. They also announce the publication this month of "Whistler," by Haldane Macfall, a son of Sarah Grand, in the "Spirit of the Age Series," brought out in London by T. N. Foulis. It will be followed shortly by "Robert Louis Stevenson," by Eve B. Simpson. This house has also received the manuscript of "Foolish Etiquette," the new book of humor by Charles Wayland Towne, (Gideon Wurdz,) who was recently married to Miss E. H. Jellner of Newark, N. J. This book will make its appearance at the end of the month.

"Cotton" will be treated of in the first volume of The Farm Library, to be published by Doubleday, Page & Co. early next month. It is by Charles E. Burkett, and will include chapters on the "history" of cotton, acreage, improvement, culture, harvest, diseases, manufacturing, cotton seed and oil, statistics, &c. The library will include books on farm annuals, equipment, farming as a business, fruits, and vegetables.

"Jiu-Jitsu and Other Methods of Self-Defense" is the title of a brochure of nearly 110 pages compiled by Percy Longhurst, the well-known English lightweight wrestler, which the Scribners are bringing out here. It is profusely illustrated. Several "tricks" suitable to women are described.

PAGES IN WAITING.

TWO plays are appearing this week with the imprint of the Macmillan Company—"The Title Mart," a three-act comedy by the well-known American novelist, Winston Churchill, and "Nero," the latest achievement of Stephen Phillips. The following extract from the latter, signifying the dramatic moment in Nero's career when the murder of Agrippina is suggested to him, gives an idea of the poet's style:

The New Play by Stephen Phillips.

TIGELLINUS.

There's the danger, that she lives.
While she hath life, it is no matter where,
While she hath breath, no other dares to breathe,
Not Caesar, even!

NERO.

This breath to her I owe.

TIGELLINUS,

Caesar, there is a region of exile
Whence none hath yet returned—your pardon, Sir—

NERO.

(Starts and turns away.)

N[illegible] no! I remember very clear
H[illegible]tly she would wake me long ago.

BURRUS.

Then be thy mother's son still and surrender
This toy of Rome to her; she bought it you:
Now, wearied, give it back!

NERO.

Ah, patience, Sir!
I cannot in one moment gird myself
To murder all these kisses, and she hath
A vastness in this narrow world so rare,
A sweep majestical about the earth—
True, that she hath no ear for verse—

Watteau to Prud'hon. Many well-known private collections, including those of the British and German monarchs, are represented in the work on "French Art from Watteau to Prud'hon," which the John Lane Company is about to issue in three quarto volumes. The most characteristic work of the painters of France from the end of the reign of Louis XV. to the beginning of the French Revolution are given. Among the celebrated names are Watteau, Largillière, Pater, Chardin, La Tour, Greuze, Fragonard, Mme. Le Brun, Mallet, Robert, Nattier, Prud'hon, &c. The three volumes form No. V. in the Dickinson Art Library, edited by J. J. Foster. They have been compiled under the general editorship of Mr. Foster, and among the contributors of biographies and critical articles and studies are Mr. Foster, M. Robert de la Sizeranne, Henri Carré, Henri Frantz, Rémy Salvator, Eugene Langevin, Frederick Wedmore, Oliver M. Hueffer, Mrs. Beardsley Wright, and others.

Vol. I. deals with the closing years of the reign of the "Grand Monarch"; Vol. II. is devoted to the painters of the reign of Louis XV., and the third volume takes up the times of Louis XVI., ending with the Revolution. Prominence has been given to genre and domestic subjects—the life of the people outside the Court. The entire work will present some 150 examples of the art of the masters treated of, all reproduced in photogravure. An édition de luxe of fifty copies is being prepared for American consumption. This will contain 165 plates, of which 30 will be in colors. The paper is pure rag, hand-made, and the volumes, each of which will be signed and numbered, will be bound in three-quarters vellum, with a paper label on which the title has been stamped in gold. The édition de luxe will include, also, fifteen colored drawings by the greatest painters mentioned.

Hands Across the Sea. The Appletons will issue in this country March 9 the reminiscences of "an American's life in England and the United States," entitled "With John Bull and Jonathan," by John Morgan Richards, the "doyen of the American colony in London" and father of the well-known novelist John Oliver Hobbes, (Mrs. Craigie.) Some idea of the book can be had from the author's "forewords":

> In putting on record my reminiscences of life on both sides of the Atlantic I do so from a British-American point of view. I have not attempted to give advice to "pilgrims" about to visit England or the United States. There are no descriptions of climate and scenery, * * * nor statistics, * * * nor do politics enter into any of my observations. My narrative concerns my own personal experiences in both countries. * * * My wish has been to give, in pleasant outlines, sketches of those with whom I have had social or business relations, how we fared together and apart. The contrasts that are made as to methods of life, both social and commercial, are not to be regarded other than as my own personal views and have no further authoritative importance.

Beginning with his birth, in 1841, Mr. Richards tells of his life in the United States until 1867, in which year he sailed to England, where he has lived ever since. He writes of his friends in the United States and in England, chief among those in the latter country being Dr. Joseph Parker, who was very fond of Pearl Richards, (Mrs. Craigie.) Descriptions are also given of visits to this country, and some space is devoted to a short account of the sojourn here of the Prince of Wales in 1860. The book is illustrated with photographs and views. Among the former are pictures of the New York merchants—Demas Barnes, P. H. Drake, Brent Good, and W. F. Ward; Dr. Parker, Cyrus W. Field, D. D. Field, Mrs. Craigie when she was eight years old, and others. The views include photographs of places in this country visited by Mr. Richards.

Introductions to Shakespeare. The volume of "Famous Introductions to Shakespeare's Plays," which Dr. Beverley Warner has edited, with a critical introduction and biographical and explanatory notes, is to be published within the fortnight by Dodd, Mead & Co. All the famous introductory essays by the editors of the Avon bard during the eighteenth century have here been collected with the editor's hope "that he has performed a real service for students." It has been a "labor of love" to compile and illustrate the present volume, he says. The notes have been made brief, but Dr. Warner has tried to make them clear and accurate. The ten photographs are from old engravings gathered from many sources. The editor's introductory essay is "an attempt to estimate the critical value of these famous prefaces and to indicate the special contribution of their several authors to Shakespearean interpretation."

The introductions presented are by John Heminge and Henrie Condell, Nicholas Rowe, Alexander Pope, Lewis Theobald, Sir Thomas Hamner, William Warburton, Samuel Johnson, George Steevens, Edward Capell, Isaac Reed, and Edmund Malone. Besides the preface proper, the biographical sketch by each former editor has also been included. Dr. Warner writes, in closing his introduction to the book:

> The reader has but to follow the raging clamor of the famous editors of the eighteenth century as set forth in these pages, the scorns and sarcasms, the accusations of ignorance and malevolence, to realize how little the great "Cham" of literature could prophesy what was to be, or judiciously reflect upon what was going on within sound of his ears. For the echoes of Pope, Theobald, and Warburton's "innocent discussions" still fill the air. * * * Every critic or editor whose preface, advertisement, or introduction is included in these pages improves our knowledge both of the text and the spirit of Shakespeare. To each one the empire of letters owes a distinct debt.

English Gothic Churches. The work by Francis Bond on "Gothic Architecture in England" comes finally from Charles Scribner's Sons. It begins with the plans of the edifices of mediaeval England and goes on to the abutment, vaulting, lighting, and other details. The volume is made up largely of analyses of the different sections of the buildings, studied in detail and development, regardless of particular "periods." There are discussions and illustrations of the "eastern limb" of cathedrals, monasteries, and collegiate churches, the development of vaulting, &c. There are two special chapters on the drainage of roofs and of walls. Indices have been provided for illustrations, of which there are 1,254 places mentioned, and the text in general.

As for the illustrations, much pains have been taken to make them attractive as well as valuable not only to the student but also to any other reader interested in the subject. Especially good are the views of vaulting at Oxford, Ely, and Gloucester, as well as the views of East Anglian timber roofs. Many of these pictures are from photographs. There are, however, in addition, twenty-eight sheets of moldings from the middle of the twelfth to the sixteenth century, all drawn on the same scale, a dozen sheets of plans and fifteen sheets of diagrams.

Altogether, the volume is very elaborate. It not only presents the history of the beginning and development of mediaeval church architecture in England from the Norman Conquest to the destruction of the monasteries, but also provides an analysis and description of this architecture in all its forms.

Biography of Rashi.

The Jewish Publication Society of America (Philadelphia) announces for publication this Spring a biography of Rashi, the Jewish commentator on the Bible and the Talmud. The first chapter deals with the Jews in France in the eleventh century, the final chapters discussing the development of Talmud and Bible studies among the Jews down to to-day. The book was written in French by M. Maurice Liber of Paris, and turned into English by Miss Adele Szold.

History of All Nations.

Vols. XIV. and XV. of "A History of All Nations" are being sent out by Lea Brothers & Co. They are, respectively, "The Age of the European Balance of Power," by Prof. Martin Philippson and "The Age of Frederick the Great," by the same author. Both volumes are fully illustrated.

The Weight of the Crown
By Fred M. White
Has the combined interest of the clever Detective Story and a Society Novel of dual identity. Those who enjoyed "The Masquerader" will find this tale of juggling with a throne similar in one respect. Two persons, identical in appearance, change places for a few hours for diplomatic reasons in which a certain dissolute king is involved against RUSSIAN aggrandizement. In this instance those who change places are girls—one is the niece of a titled English diplomat and the other (of gentle birth) by force of circumstances is employed by a fashionable milliner. The scene is laid in London and the action occupies practically forty-eight hours, but enough adventure happens to fill a dozen years and several books. The plot is intricate and the characters are numerous, but the author has skilfully unravelled his knotted skein of adventure consistently and satisfactorily. It is a tale of surprises and ever-recurring mystery that compels the interest of the reader to the very last word.—E. O. Chapman in The Bookseller. 12mo, cloth. Illustrated in colors, $1.50.

This fakir is a religious mendicant who spends his days in the fulfillment of more or less ascetic vows. That cloth spread out on the ground and anchored with stones, lies there ready to receive such offerings of money or food as the charitable may be disposed to offer. He has cannily chosen for his self-mortification a spot passed by hosts of whorshippers on their way to the temples. The photographer, who watched him dispose his gaunt frame on this extraordinary bed, says he took a good deal of pains to lie down cautiously, and to distribute his weight so that there would be a minimum of risk to his skin.

O LORD, I pray Thee, hear my dollies' prayer,
  And teach them how to ask for what is right;
But if it's going to give You extra care,
  Then You might skip my blessings for to-night.
Please make them all more loving and polite;
  I pray Thee not to let their covers tear,
But keep their sawdust stuffings out of sight,
  And please help Anne to grow a head of hair.

I wish poor Bella's knees were made to bend,
  I truly am as sorry as can be.
I hope that You won't mind, and that You'll send
  The blessings that each dolly asks of Thee.
And, Lord, I pray that You will just pertend
  This is my dollies talking, 'stead of me.

WHITE

THE CAR FOR SERVICE

FIRST, LAST, AND ALL THE TIME.

The first endurance run in this country was held September 9th-13th, 1901, from New York to Rochester, under the auspices of the Automobile Club of America. Eighty cars, American and foreign, started and but twenty earned first-class certificates. Among the starters were four Whites, all of which earned first-class certificates.

The latest endurance run in this country was held January 25th-26th, 1906, from Los Angeles to San Diego, under the auspices of the Coronado Country Club. Thirty representative cars strrted and but two gained a perfect score. One of these was a White and the other a gasoline car of 40 per cent. greater cost. As the White had used three gallons of gasoline less than its adversary, it was declared the winner and awarded the John D. Spreckels' cup.

All reliability and endurance competitions held in the interval between the two above described contests have, with practically unbroken monotony, resulted in White victories.

IX. THE BEARS SEEING CHICAGO

The bears did nothing for several days
But enjoy the hotel and its modern ways,
They rang for bell-boys, just for fun,
To give them a quarter and see them run.
They ordered dinners, the waiters say,
At 2 A. M. and at break of day.
In the afternoon at half-past three
They always rang for a pot of tea.
They changed their clothes every little while

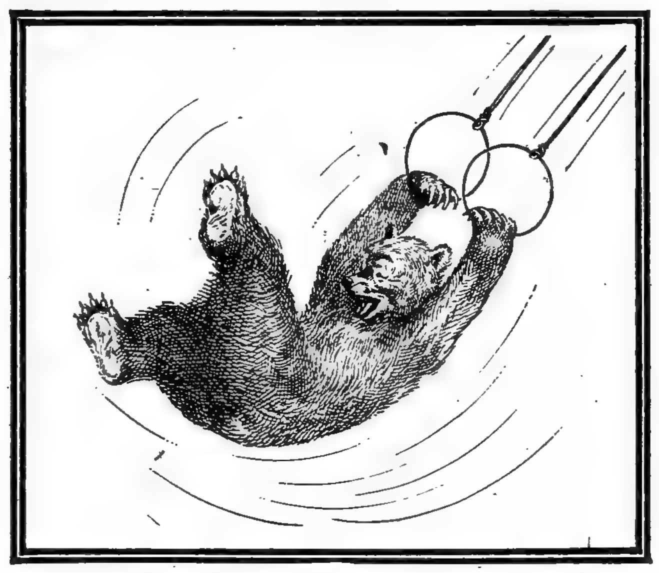
They were there a week when TEDDY—B
Said he'd like a drive the town to see.
"I should like it too," said TEDDY—G,
"I'll order a carriage for you and me
With two men in front who'll sit up straight
And drive us round at a lively rate."
The carriage was ordered and off they went
A happy pair on pleasure bent.

The coachman made the horses fly;
The crowd hurrah'd as the bears drove by.
They saw the stores and buildings tall,
Post-office square and city hall,
And churches high and driveways wide,
And a thousand other things beside.
They drove for hours through street and park
From early morn till nearly dark.
They made a call at a candy store,
And bought a hundred pounds or more
Done up in boxes with ribbons gay,
To throw to children on the way.



"Those pens and squares," said TEDDY—B;
"Drive over there; I want to see."
"The Union Stock Yards," the coachman said,
"In there you'll see a million head
Of cows and calves and pigs and sheep,
And blood enough to make you weep."
"I don't like the show," said TEDDY—G;
"That Missouri bull was enough for me."
And on they drove new sights to find
And left the Stock Yards far behind.
But neither spoke for an hour at least;
They were comparing the lot of man and beast.

To the Athletic Club they went for lunch
To try their cooking and to show the bunch
Of athletes there what bears could do
On a racing track; and a trick or two
On swinging ropes and bars and rings,
And how to swim and a hundred things
About punching bags and playing ball
That the fellows never knew at all.

"I've lost a button," said TEDDY—G,
"Drive to a store and wait for me.
My collar's loose: it hurts my chin;
The button's gone that held it in."
TEDDY—B said he would go there too
To see the store and the things they do.
The store was full; 'twas bargain day;
Or a mark-down sale, as the papers say.
TEDDY—G stepped up to a man "at ease"
And said, "I want a button, please."
"What kind of button do you want?" said he;
"A collar button," said TEDDY—G.
"Go down the aisle to the corner there;
Then turn to the right; take the moving stair;
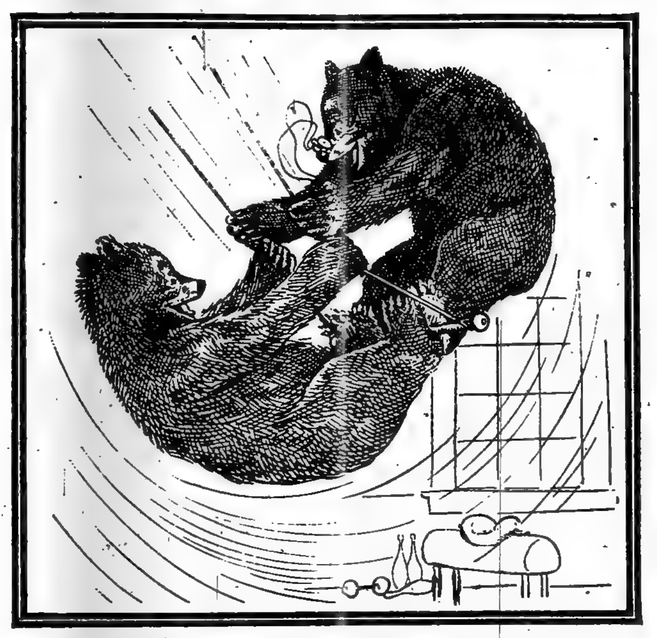
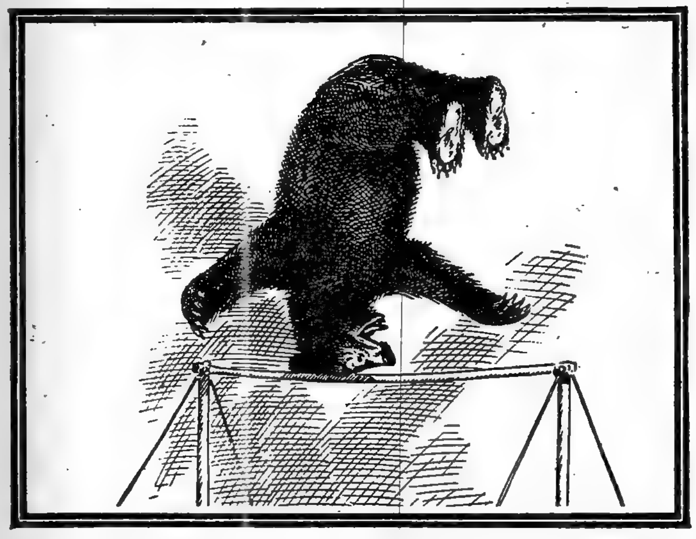
Said TEDDY—B "Do we need a guide?"
The man was off; 'twas his busy day;
And the bears were left to find their way,
To reach the goal or the button spot
Before the directions they forgot.

When the stairs were reached the bears stood still;
They asked a man how to climb the hill.
"Don't block the way," the man replied;
This stairway climbs itself, you know;
You just step on and up you go."
TEDDY—B went up on hands and toes
And tumbled headlong on his nose.
While TEDDY—G held fast the rail
But back he came head over tail.
"Let's try again," said TEDDY—B,
"I like the sport; it's new to me."
A crowd collected one by one
To see the bears and enjoy the fun.
They reached the top in a little while
And with graceful bow and pleasant smile
They said good-bye to the crowd below
Which had gathered to see the stairway show.

Now for that button," said TEDDY—G,
"My collar's entirely loose, you see."
They asked directions from a man near by,
Who said, "If buttons you want to buy,
Take the elevator; fourth floor right;
And ask a clerk if there's one in sight."
A door slid open and a boy in blue
Said "Room for one, but not for two."
TEDDY—G stepped in and up it went
Before TEDDY—B knew what it meant.
Each bear was now on a different floor.
They'd lost each other in the department store.



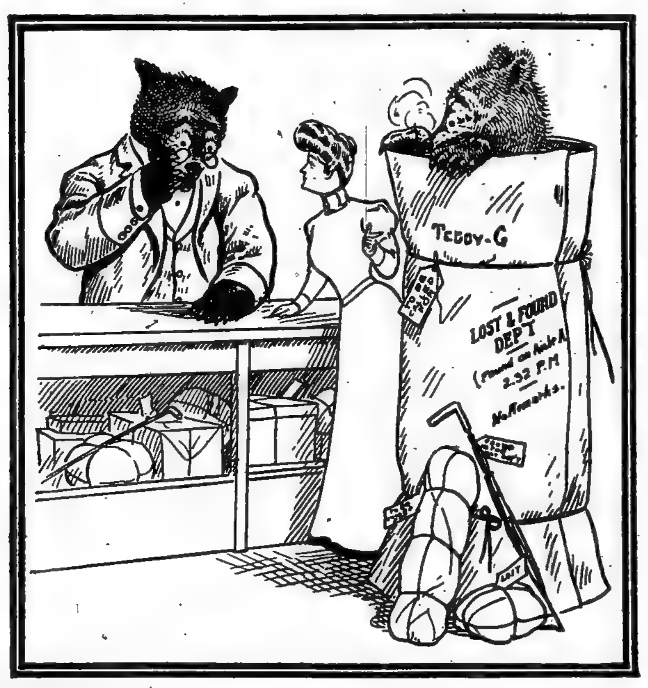
TEDDY—B walked round the things to see;
He hunted and searched for TEDDY—G,
But he couldn't find him high or low,
For an hour at least he was on the go.
He asked some questions here and there
If folks had seen his brother bear.
A floor-walker stopped him and said:
"What is his color, black or red?
And where did you lose him? The time and date?
Was he lost to-day, and if so, how late?
Describe his clothes, his height, his walk;
His age, his eyes, his face, his talk."
These things he wrote down on a pad
And made some signs and called a lad
And said, "Take this and go around
With this young man to Lost and Found."



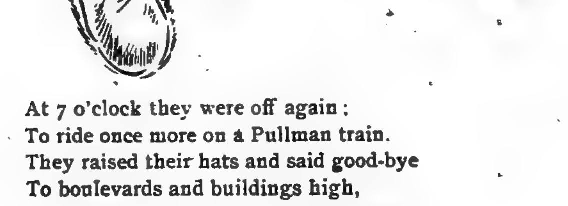
The two went off as they were told
And found TEDDY—G all neatly rolled
In paper brown and tied with string;
With marks and tags; the funniest thing.
It was worth a trip a mile to see
This paper package marked "TEDDY—G."

"Where have you been?" said TEDDY—B;
"I have hunted high and low," said he.
"Buying a button," said TEDDY—G;
"I have it here; cut the string and see.
It's ivory white; it cost a dime,
I couldn't buy two; I hadn't time."
They left the store at half-past five
And started again to complete their drive.

The bears returned when the drive was o'er
To their suite of rooms on the eleventh floor.
The hotel was gay with flags and flowers.
Children were gathering there for hours,
A thousand girls and a thousand boys,
Laughing and chatting with merry noise,
In parlors, halls, and on the stairs,
To say good-bye to the Roosevelt Bears.
The bears dressed up in traveling suits,
And brushed their hair and shined their boots,
And then went down when this they'd done
To shake the hands of every one.
A band was playing a lively air,
And children running here and there,
As merry a crowd as was ever seen
In hall or home or on college green,
Ice cream was served and lots of cake
And candied sweets of every make.



The bears gave each their photograph
And signed their name; 'twould make you laugh
To see the signature of TEDDY—G:
A great big paw for the letter T
And the rest like tracks across the snow,
And for the G, a bear's big toe.
TEDDY—B could write a scholar's hand
As fine as anything in the land.
The girls gave TEDDY—G a gift
Of flowers and ferns, too big to lift;
And the boys a bag to TEDDY—B:
"The very thing I need," said he;
"I'll pack your love in this handsome grip
And take it with me on the trip."
When TEDDY—G made a speech like this:
"To every girl I throw a kiss;
The rose is red, the violet blue;
These flowers are sweet and so are you."



At 7 o'clock they were off again;
To ride once more on a Pullman train.
They raised their hats and said good-bye
To boulevards and buildings high,
To Chicago homes and parks and halls

"The rose is red, the violet blue; these flowers are sweet and so are you."

LIFE COMPANIES DECIDE THEIR PLAN OF CAMPAIGN

A Delegation Will Present Views at Albany Hearing.

MORTON, ORR, PEABODY TO GO

Several Armstrong Committee Reforms Will Be Objected To—No Lobbying, It Is Said.

Life insurance companies, large and small, both foreign and domestic, determined at important meetings held yesterday the programme they will follow regarding the recommendations of the Armstrong legislative committee. As the result of these gatherings it has been determined that a delegation representing practically all the companies shall go to Albany on March 9, the day set for a hearing on the bills that the insurance investigators have presented, and shall cover by assignment of topics the entire field of insurance legislation, in so far as the companies have views to present to the consideration of the Legislature.

The companies are to be represented by their own officials. The programme that has been laid out is constructed on the basis that the officers of the companies themselves should tell the Legislature what they think of the Armstrong Committee's report and where they believe that modifications should be made in the interest of the insurance business.

It may be said authoritatively that so far as the common action of the companies is concerned, there will be no attempt to exert influence on the Legislature by indirect methods or through legislative counsel or agents of any kind.

Whether individual companies may follow another course in violation of the agreement reached yesterday is another matter, and one about which none of the conferrees would venture a prediction.

In the minds of certain of those concerned some question was raised by the text of the resolution adopted by the Trustees of the Mutual at the meeting on Thursday, when the case was considered. That resolution referred the section of the Armstrong Committee's report dealing with remedial legislation to President Peabody and General Solicitor Julien T. Davies, with instructions to present such "facts and considerations as in their judgment may most effectively protect the interests of the company and its policy holders."

Two Meetings Were Held.

Yesterday's meetings were two in number, one in the morning at the offices of the Home Life Insurance Company, at which representatives of a good many of the out-of the State companies conferred with actuaries of the New York companies, and the other in the afternoon in the offices of the Mutual Life. This second meeting, which was for the New York State companies particularly, was the more important of the two, and was the result of a series of conferences that have been going on informally for some days.

On Friday the smaller companies held a meeting at the offices of the Manhattan Life Insurance Company and appointed a committee consisting of ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, President of the Provident Savings Life; President George E. Ide of the Home Life, and President Tatlock of the Washington Life, to represent them in the general meeting. Those who attended yesterday's conference, in addition to the committee of the smaller companies, were President Peabody and Actuary McClintock of the Mutual, Actuary Van Cise of the Equitable, and President Orr, Vice President Kingsley, and Actuary Weeks of the New York Life. The meeting began at 2:30 o'clock and did not end until nearly 6. When it was over a comprehensive programme had been laid out for the hearing on Friday.

It is understood that it was the wish of the Armstrong Committee that some such move be made in order that the same ground might not be covered by representatives of the different companies. The companies have taken the committee at its word, for at the hearing, which is before the entire Legislature as a Committee of the Whole, after introductory addresses by President Morton of the Equitable, President Peabody of the Mutual, and President Orr of the New York Life, speakers will be introduced who will talk on regularly assigned topics. In all of these addresses it will be made plain, according to the understanding reached yesterday, that the companies are approaching the situation not in pursuance of a policy of general resistance, but with sincere desire to co-operate with the Legislature in righting the insurance situation.

Will Fight Expense Limitation.

The one point on which the strongest opposition will be made, both on behalf of the large companies and the small companies, is the limitation that the committee has fixed for expenses whereby the cost of putting new business on the books must be kept within the loadings of the first premiums, plus the mortality gains of the first five years, estimated, after investment expenses have been deducted. Officials of the large companies have already expressed their belief that this restriction would result in a contraction of business that would virtually disorganize the agency forces of their institutions and would limit their volume of annual business far below the one-hundred-and-fifty-million-dollar figure at which the Armstrong Committee has placed it in its report.

To this complaint is now added that of the smaller companies, who say that they also cannot keep the expenses of new business within the stipulations, and that the resultant contraction of business would affect them as badly as it would the big companies. In regard to this the fact is brought up that the Armstrong Committee's report would make it a misdemeanor for a company to exceed its allowance for new business, which, being interpreted by them as applied to the officers, means that an officer concerned in the making of any contract with an agent or otherwise through which the company was forced beyond its allowed expense for getting new business, would be liable under the act.

Cannot Foretell Expenses.

It is therefore declared by representatives of both the big companies and the smaller ones that this law would be un-

A ROCKEFELLER SUES.

Frank Says $500,000 Is Due to Him from Estate of a Suicide.

Frank Rockefeller, brother of John D. Rockefeller, began a suit in the Supreme Court yesterday against various individuals and brokerage firms in this city and in Cleveland. Mr. Rockefeller, who lives in Ohio, is seeking to recover $500,000.

The suit is the outcome of stock transactions with Leland W. Prior, who committed suicide in Cleveland on Jan. 9. Mr. Prior's brokerage firm, Denison, Prior & Co., suspended operations after Prior killed himself, and is now in the hands of a receiver. At the time of the suicide it was said that Prior had become involved in a stock scandal of some sort, but it was not then known that Mr. Rockefeller was the man whom Prior feared to face.

It appears from Mr. Rockefeller's complaint that he is anxious to hold the New York correspondents of Denison, Prior & Co. responsible for the money lost through dealings with Prior. The New York correspondents were C. I. Hudson & Co. of 36 Wall Street, and E. & C. Randolph & Co. of 111 Broadway. Both these firms are named as defendants.

At the time that Prior committed suicide, Mr. Rockefeller was dealing heavily in the stock of the Republic Iron and Steel Company. He had on deposit with the Prior firm and its auxiliaries large blocks of the stock, but it was in the name of Prior, as it had not been paid for, he says, and simply was held for him. The stock certificates had been issued in Prior's name.

As soon as he learned of Prior's suicide, the day after Prior killed himself in the Hollenden Hotel in Cleveland, Mr. Rockefeller says, he telegraphed to the Hudson and Randolph firms, and also to the brokerage firm of T. A. McIntyre & Co. of 71 Broadway, to close out all his deals and sell all the stock they held in trust for him. He now declares that they carried out his instructions and realized large sums by the sales, in fact much more than what had been advanced on the stock in the course of the purchase of the same. Mr. Rockefeller sues to recover the money realized over and above what was due the brokers.

The receiver for the Prior firm, Thomas Bushnell, is also named as a defendant in Mr. Rockefeller's suit. He also names other persons who, he says, have laid claim to some of the money due him. First he asks the court for an injunction restraining the various defendants from disposing of any of the money which he claims, and which other persons claim. Next he asks that a trust be impressed on the funds during pendency of his suit. He also asks for appointment of a receiver to collect the money, and sues for an accounting of all of the transactions in which he was interested with the Prior firm and its New York correspondents. In his complaint he declares that E. & C. Randolph & Co. have $117,000 belonging to him and C. I. Hudson & Co., $67,000. But Mr. Rockefeller does not know what amount is due him from the McIntyre firm and other defendants, so he wants permission from the court to inspect books. He also wants certain money which he says was collected as dividends on the stock in question.

BRAZIL MAY CORNER COFFEE.

Government Syndicate Plans to Buy Whole Crop—We'll Pay the Piper.

Word reached the Coffee Exchange yesterday of a plan under way in Brazil to boost the price of coffee by what will be in effect the cornering of the market by the Brazilian Government.

Brokers were not sufficiently impressed with the imminence of the project to have it affect the market, but if it goes through the prize of Brazilian coffee, which makes up four-fifths of our total importations, will, brokers say, rise sharply.

Overproduction has played havoc with the prosperity of Brazilian coffee growers for years, and various schemes have been devised to raise prices, but none has ever been successfully carried through. The newest idea, which has been formulated by the Governors of the three coffee-growing States of Brazil, is to form a subsidized syndicate to buy all the coffee offered at a minimum price, which will be about 3 cents above the present market. As the season's crop grows scarce, by reason of the syndicate's purchases, it is figured that the foreign demand will send the price for the balance of the crop up to the syndicate's minimum price, and perhaps beyond. None of the syndicate's coffee will be allowed to go into the market below a price that will give a 10 per cent. profit.

The purchasing syndicate, according to the story, is to be formed by the Governments of the three coffee-producing States, and will be financed by an issue of $60,000,000 of sterling bonds indorsed by the Federal Government. While the plan has not yet been approved by the Brazilian Legislature, it is said that the necessary funds have been promised by European bankers.

The syndicate expects to get its money back by charging an additional export tax of 50 cents a bag on coffee.

79 OF 300 BOATS SAFE.

Many Vessels of Norwegian Fishing Fleet Seen Keel Upward.

TRONDHJEM, March 3.—The fishing fleet operating off Trondhjem, which was caught in a terrific storm yesterday, numbered 300 boats, and it is feared that most of them were wrecked, as many boats are reported to have been seen floating keel upward. Eleven boats and 33 lives are known to have been lost.

Thus far 79 of the boats have been reported safe at Flatanger, Koksvik, and he Gjaelingerne Islands, and possibly others have reached shelter at some of the thousands of islands dotting the coast. Steamers are cruising in the hope of picking up survivors.

The fisher boats are usually manned by three or four men each, so that the loss of life must be great. The weather is bitterly cold, and even if the shipwrecked fishermen reach uninhabited islands they must perish unless they are rescued immediately.

The village of Gjaservaero is the greatest sufferer, as most of the fleet had headquarters there.

CHRISTIANIA, March 3.—Several steamers have been dispatched to the Gjaelingerne Islands from Trondhjem.

Much general wreckage has been sighted. The crews of the boats composing the fishing fleet numbered from 1,200 to 1,400 men.

PRESIDENT TO RESCUE OF THREATENED BILLS

Holds Conferences on Statehood and Philippines Tariff.

LODGE PLANS OPEN FIGHT

Will Move to Take Philippines Bill from Committee—Pessimism as to Both Measures.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—President Roosevelt spent much of to-day in conferences on measures to be taken to save the Statehood and Philippines Tariff bills in the Senate. The action of the Senate Committee on Philippines yesterday in deciding against any report at all on the Tariff bill, coupled with the intimation that a campaign against the President's pet measures had begun, and that the Statehood bill would be the next to be dealt with summarily caused alarm in administration circles.

Senator Lodge, Chairman of the Committee on Philippines, who made an ineffectual attempt to have the Tariff bill reported, Speaker Cannon and Secretary Taft were called to the White House, and went over the situation thoroughly. Secretary Taft, who has given much time to the attempt to have the Philippines duties lowered, came out in aggressive mood.

"I have no idea what Congress may do regarding the bill," he said. "I do not attempt to dictate to or interfere with Congress, but so far as I am concerned this fight for lower tariff rates on Philippine products is just begun. I shall continue to do that which I believe to be right and proper to afford the Philippines the relief and assistance they need."

Senator Lodge was pessimistic. He would not discuss the situation except to say that he thought the prospects for the measure were not good. Nevertheless Mr. Lodge has decided to make a motion that the Senate discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, and that it be taken up for discussion. A motion of this character is debatable, and Mr. Lodge purposes to make an argument in favor of the bill.

The means suggested provides the only way in which the bill may be brought before the Senate, in view of the action of the committee. Opponents of it declare that the Senate is overwhelmingly opposed to the measure and that Mr. Lodge's motion will be met with a motion to lay it on the table. The sentiment of the Senate then would be determined.

Mr. Lodge does not intend, however, to precipitate action until after the Statehood bill has been disposed of.

The first conference on Statehood at the White House was held between the President and Senator Beveridge, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories. Later Senators Long of Kansas, Burkett of Nebraska, and Warren of Wyoming, champions of the Statehood bill, were called to the Executive Mansion and spent some time with the President. It was not learned what measures were decided upon at the conference. It was admitted that the prospects of the bill's enactment are not bright.

TRANSFERRED, HE DIED.

Policeman Reynolds for 36 Years Held Post at the Grand Central.

The Twenty-third Police Precinct, at the Grand Central Station, has had on its patrol list since March 8, 1870, the name of Thomas Reynolds, and in all these thirty-six years he has covered the same post inside the station. He was well known to all the railroad men and officers of the road. Commodore Vanderbilt never failed to pass the time of day with him, and always remembered the Reynolds family when Christmas came.

For some reason Reynolds never was promoted, but he appeared perfectly happy as long as was allowed to patrol his old beat in the station. There he could greet the familiar faces every day, shake hands with his friends, talk over old times, and any change seemed unnecessary.

But Commissioner Bingham decided that the Grand Central Police Station must go. Patrolmen were needed elsewhere. Reynolds heard of this, and knew that probably he would be transferred. He became moody. When the station was abolished on March 1, and Reynolds was sent to East Fifty-first Street, he reported sick, and went to bed at his home, 335 East Fiftieth Street.

The doctors said he was suffering from general break down, but his family declared that his heart was broken. He died on Friday night. His wife and two sons survive him.

JOHNSON FOR COMMITTEE.

Majority of National Democratic Body Favor the Mayor.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, March 3.—Mayor Johnson has been nominated as the Ohio member of the Democratic National Committee to succeed John R. McLean of Cincinnati.

The selection of Johnson, rather than Gov. Pattison or Chairman Harvey C. Garber, followed a long conference at Columbus between the Mayor and National Chairman Taggart of Indianapolis, and was made certain at a conference at Xenia, Ohio, where Johnson went to learn the result of the vote on the progress.

Forty-five of the fifty-one members of the National Committee have already wired or mailed their votes to Taggart. Of these thirty-three are for Johnson and twelve for Garber, insuring Johnson's election when the vote shall have been completed and officially announced.

"I most certainly will accept the election," said Mayor Johnson to-day. "It would be extremely strange if I did not, considering that I have in the past tried for it twice and lost."

BELLOW'S FALLS, Vt., March 3.—It is reported here that Mrs. Hetty Green has resolved to reoccupy the mansion house here where she passed her early days as a wife. The old house has been in a dilapidated condition many years, and the townspeople would be glad to see it restored.

F. B. HOFFMAN FINED.

Victim of Revised Game Laws and a Keeper Who Sought a Reward.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENSBOROUGH, N. C., March 8.—Francis Burrall Hoffman of New York and his guest, Jonathan Godfrey, were arrested here to-day for violating the State game laws, and were fined several hundred dollars.

Mr. Hoffman is the lessee of a game preserve of 7,000 acres about six miles east of here, and has been an annual visitor for several years. His arrest was due to his ignorance of a change in the date of closing the shooting season. The season for quail in Guilford County has heretofore closed on March 15. The date was recently made March 1.

When Mr. Hoffman and his guest arrived at the hunting lodge his attendants failed to acquaint him with the change and yesterday he and Mr. Godfrey killed a number of quail. To-day Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Godfrey came to Greensborough. So did one of the game keepers, who wanted a reward, and informed a Deputy Sheriff. A warrant was served and the irate sportsmen were taken before Magistrate Collins. He imposed a fine of $5 for each bird shot.

Mr. Hoffman later departed for Florida, saying he would just as soon be robbed in the land of the palms as in that of "moonshine and corn whisky."

SOCIAL REFORMERS MEET.

Secret Conference in Progress at Home of J. G. Phelps Stokes.

Special to The New York Times.

NOROTON, Conn., March 3.—Much secrecy is observed regarding a conference which is in progress at the Summer home of J. G. Phelps Stokes, in which men interested in social reform are taking part.

Mr. Stokes said to-night that the conference would extend over three days, and that it was of a nature similar to one held at his house about a year ago. He declined to give out any details regarding the topics of discussion or the identity of the participants.

Robert Hunter, the New York settlement worker who married a sister of Mr Stokes, said that while the topic of discussion was the social and political betterment of the people at large, and settlement work in particular, Socialism in any defined sense or in its practical application from a political point of view was not, as had been incorrectly reported, up for consideration.

Mr. Hunter said that neither William R. Hearst nor Eugene V. Debs, the National leader of the Social Democratic Party, had been invited to participate. He added that the discussion was wholly informal and that the party of men attending were there as his guests, not as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Stokes.

Among those who will attend the conference when it begins in earnest on Monday are Joseph Medill Patterson, the young Chicago reformer who has resigned as Commissioner of Public Works in Mayor Dunne's cabinet and come out for Socialism. Lincoln Steffens is also a guest of Mr. Hunter, and the total number of those attending is estimated at about fifty, many of whom left here for New York this afternoon to return on Monday.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 3.—Conflicting reports exist concerning Joseph Medill Patterson, who resigned as Commissioner of Public Works because he has become a Socialist. One of these is to the effect that he is to become the editor of a magazine devoted to Socialism. The establishment of such a magazine is said by Chicago Socialists to be the chief reason for the conference which began last night at Mr. Stokes's country residence at Noroton Point, Conn.

RAMSEY'S NEW ROAD.

The Lorain Southern Will Run to the Hocking Valley.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 3.—Joseph Ramsey, ex-President of the Wabash Road, after spending two days in Pittsburg, left here to-night for New York after announcing that he had organized the Lorain Southern Railroad, had purchased the Industrial Road of Lorain from the Sheffield Land Company, and would construct a line from Lorain, on Lake Erie, to the Hocking Valley and other coal fields along the Ohio River. A line into the coal fields of West Pennsylvania adjacent to Pittsburg is among the possibilities.

The most significant feature of the scheme is the entrance of Mr. Ramsey into the railroad world as an aggressive independent factor. Ramsey came to Pittsburg from St. Louis and awarded contracts for the construction of fifty-five miles of the line to the Ohio Construction Company, of which Col. W. D. Holliday, ex-Assistant General Freight Agent of the Wabash at Pittsburg, is President. A contract was also made with the Carnegie Steel Company for 4,000 tons of steel rails for delivery this Spring. It is the intention of Mr. Ramsey to have at least one portion of the road as far south as Wellington from Lorain complete and ready for operation by July 1.

It was reported to-night that an independent steel plant to cost from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 would be erected on a tract of three thousand acres of land located one and a half miles west of Lorain, along the lake shore. It is also the intention, it is said, to build ore docks, furnaces, and a town for the men employed in the proposed plant.

CARRIAGE HIT OCTOGENARIAN.

Theatre Party Escaped, Leaving Victim Unconscious—He May Die.

While Peter Guchoin, who has spent the last few years of his 85 at 216 West Fifty-third Street, was crossing Broadway at Fifty-third Street about 8 o'clock last night, he was knocked down by a pair of horses drawing a carriage in which were two men and two women, apparently a theatre party.

Guchoin was knocked unconscious. One of the men started from the carriage to the old Frenchman's assistance, when the other man pulled him back, saying:

"Never mind!"

Then this man turned to the driver and ordered him to drive away at full speed. The carriage disappeared before a policeman arrived. Guchoin was taken to Roosevelt Hospital. It is feared that he will die.

$3,000,000 FOR CRIPPLES GIVEN BY MR. WIDENER

INSTITUTION IS NOW OPEN

Mayor Weaver Commends the Donor and Guests Applaud Announcement of Big Fund.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 3.—Announcement was made at the opening of the Widener Memorial Home for Crippled Children to-day that P. A. B. Widener, who gave $2,000,000 for the building of the institution, has donated $3,000,000 more for a maintenance fund. The income from this will be about $150,000 a year.

With simple exercises, the Widener Home, at York Road and Olney Avenue, was opened to-day. Inspection of the fine buildings, in the Georgian Renaissance style, caused much enthusiasm among the 200 or more guests of Mr. Widener. The well-arranged wards in the middle structure, or hospital, which is the only department as yet fully equipped, were decorated with flowers from Mr. Widener's conservatories on his estate at Ashbourne, and a score of nurses were on duty to receive the unfortunates committed to their care.

Dr. De Forest Willard, Surgeon in Chief of the hospital, in his address, made the announcement of Mr. Widener's endowment of $3,000,000. This statement was greeted with great applause.

Mayor Weaver, in an opening speech, said that the donor of this institution, desiring to erect a memorial to his wife and son, had not made it a shaft of marble or granite, which would rear its head many feet above the earth, nor a building whose architecture alone would be a thing of beauty and joy forever, but he had erected something which was architecturally perfect, because perfectly adapted to uses for which it was intended.

Dr. Willard, in the course of his address, said that the project of the institution, as outlined from the beginning, might be well expressed by the following:

"Object: For crippled and deformed minors without distinction of creed, nationality, or sex; to supplement the work of hospitals, to strengthen and renew the weak ones, and then to educate them into habits of industry, order, cleanliness, self-respect, and self-reliance; to apply such mental, moral, and religious training as will render them true, honorable, useful and self-sustaining members of the community."

BIG BILL FOR BRANCH ROAD.

Baltimore & Ohio Puts $2,000,000 Expense on Washington Line.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 3.—It developed to-day at the Legislature Committee's investigation of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, instigated by Senator Gorman, that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has devoted $2,000,000 of the surplus earnings of its Washington branch to the building of a coach yard and other improvements in Washington, and that these improvements are by no means completed.

It was apparent from the line of cross-questioning that the committee believes that the Washington branch has been made to do not only the Baltimore & Ohio's work, but the Pennsylvania Railroad's also.

Major H. D. Bulkley, Controller of the Baltimore & Ohio, was on the stand.

"Upon what grounds," the Major was asked, "does the Baltimore & Ohio charge the Washington branch about $2,000,000 for a coach yard?"

"It is necessary to store the coaches somewhere, and the Washington branch is doing the work," said Major Bulkley. "The Washington branch will receive a proper rental from all who use this yard."

"So there was money in the treasury to pay dividends if the Baltimore and Ohio had wanted to?"

"Yes," said Major Bulkley. "It was a matter for Senator Gorman and Mr. Baughman and other Directors of the Baltimore & Ohio to determine."

Gorman is a State Director.

TELLS OF DYNAMITE PLOT.

Adams Involves Miners' Official in Independence Outrage.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., March 8.—Sheriff Edward Bell of Cripple Creek has received from the Idaho authorities an extract from Steve Adams's confession. Sheriff Bell says this confession solves the mystery of the explosion at Independence depot two years ago when thirteen non-union miners lost their lives. Adams asserts that Secretary W. D. Haywood of the Western Federation of Miners planned the outrage, but he does not say who pulled the string that set off the dynamite.

"The reason Adams does not tell this man's name," said Sheriff Bell, "is because it was Adams himself. I have a warrant for Adams's arrest, charging him with this murder. I have had this warrant for a year. Adams's confession implicates four other Colorado men in this outrage, and the arrests will take place as soon as we can trace the men.

"The murder of Mine Superintendent Arthur Collins at Telluride two years ago, the assassination of Lyte Gregory in Denver eighteen months ago, and the murders of six other men are described by Adams. He was closer to the inner circle than Orchard, and has told the entire method of putting the men out of the way."

BOISE, Idaho, March 3.—Threatening letters have been received by Gov. Gooding, Attorney Hawley, and Detective McParland. These letters are signed "Kneebene," and threaten death. Kneebene was a non-union miner murdered in the Coeur d'Alenes.

ARMY TRANSPORT ASHORE.

Battalion of Twentieth Infantry Rescued on Luzon Coast.

MANILA, March 4.—The Inter-Island transport Ingalls is ashore on Raporapo Reef, off the southern coast of the Island of Luzon. She will probably be a total wreck.

A battalion of the Twentieth Infantry, en route to Manila, where they were to transfer to the transport Sheridan for the United States, were aboard the Ingalls. They were rescued by a coast guard cutter.

The transport Liscum has been sent to take off the soldiers' baggage and render any assistance. The sailing of the Sheridan has been delayed.

THE OLDEST SMITH DEAD.

Mrs. Eliza A., of Peapack, 92 Years Old, Collapsed After Fall.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., March 3.—Mrs. Eliza A. Smith, wife of the late William Smith of Peapack, died at her home, in that village, yesterday. Mrs. Smith was the oldest member of the Smith family whose reunions each year are known about all over the country. She was 92 years old.

A week ago she fell out of bed and was badly bruised. The shock, owing to her advanced age, caused death. With her lived four generations of Smiths under one roof. Just a short distance from the house is to be seen the pile of stones marking the hearthplace of the cabin of the original Smith settler in this section, Zachariah.

MRS. THAW SUED FOR $16,000.

Stained Glass Company Says She Ordered Church Window Rebuilt.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 3.—Suit was entered in Common Pleas Court to-day by the Willet Stained Glass Company against Mrs. Mary C. Thaw, mother of the Countess of Yarmouth, for $16,500.

The claim is for work done on a memorial art window representing "The Holy City," which was placed in the Third Presbyterian Church, erected at a cost of $500,000.

Mrs. Thaw visited the studios of the Willet Company and became interested in a window sketch of "The Holy City." The company says she asked it to make certain changes, and was so pleased that she ordered the window rebuilt, which has been done.

When the local firm presented the bill for the new window Mrs. Thaw complained that it was beyond the contract price. Mrs. Thaw contends that she merely ordered alterations.

A DELIGHT, SAYS LONGWORTH.

So Describes the Honeymoon Trip, and His Bride Approves.

Mrs. Longworth, sitting near, smiled her aproval.

It was suggested that a trip to Savannah and Roswell, Ga., would be in order.

"We would like to visit them," said Mr. Longworth, "and I expect we will at some later date. My wife is especially anxious to visit both places. We have had the greatest time in our lives, still duty is calling, and we are both glad to get back to take up once more the serious duties of life."

Cyclone Spreads Destruction In the Society and Other Groups.

WHOLE VILLAGES WIPED OUT

Wind 120 Miles an Hour and Waves 65 Feet High—Americans Suffer.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 8.—The steamer Mariposa arrived here to-day from Papeete, Tahiti, bringing news of a terrible cyclone which swept over the Society, Tuamotu, and Cook's Islands on Feb. 7 and 8.

The Evening Post states that it has advices that 10,000 persons perished during the storm on Tahiti and adjacent islands and that several islands disappeared. It places the damage at $5,000,000. The officers of the steamer could not vouch for these figures.

The steamer brought an account of the cyclone, written by an Associated Press correspondent at Tahiti. It gives these details:

"The most destructive cyclone ever experienced in the Society and Tuamotu Islands occurred on Feb. 7 and 8.

It is feared that there has been heavy loss of life in the lagoons of Tuamotu Islands.

The damage in Tahiti is estimated at $1,000,000, and presumably a similar amount of property was destroyed on the Tuamotu Islands. The City of Papeete was inundated and about seventy-five buildings destroyed, including the American Consulate and the French Government Building. The shipping in the harbor of Papeete escaped injury owing to the direction of the wind, but fears are entertained for vessels which were cruising near the Tuamotu Islands.

The cyclone or hurricane reached the velocity of 120 miles an hour. It struck the islands about midnight on Feb. 7 and continued until about 4 o'clock on the next afternoon. The Island of Anaa, Tuamotu group, is believed to have been the centre of the storm.

At Papeete about 7 o'clock on the evening of Feb. 7 the sea began to break heavily over the reef, the waves in the harbor washing over the quay. There was no perceptible wind. Toward 10 o'clock people dwelling in the vicinity of the water front were compelled to abandon their homes, saving, as a rule, only a small portion of their belongings.

The merchants and clerks went to the stores and warehouses only to discover that it was impossible to save goods on the lower floors. An hour later high seas broke, completely demolishing the Government slip and buildings, beside causing great damage to the coal sheds. The guardian of the arsenal, Teffer Adams, an expert swimmer, was in the water for many hours and assisted in warning and rescuing others.

Whole Villages Swept Away.

The village of Tarona, near the arsenal, was completely swept away. It consisted of the mission buildings and homes of native converts of the reorganized Latter Day Saints' mission, formerly under the direction of Capt. Joseph Burton of California. The mission house and a great many houses were carried hundreds of yards and demolished. Of the church edifice not a vestige remains.

A settlement about an eighth of a mile distant, comprised of dwellings of several hundred Cook Islanders, (British subjects,) was completely destroyed. One American named Seefeldt, living near that community, had to take to an adjacent swamp, which became inundated, and he was compelled to battle with the waves for many hours. Further east on the beach road all the houses were swept away for about half a mile.

At Taunoa, the family of Herman Menell had a thrilling experience. Their fine residence, probably worth $15,000, was badly damaged by strong waves, which compelled the family to flee for their lives to a native house. Frequently the water was up to their necks, and they were obliged to cling to trees. Where before the storm there was a frontage of 160 yards to the sea, the waves cut off the lawn, so that the water now is within ten yards of the veranda. Other fine homes were badly damaged.

Matters were worse in the City of Papeete. To the west of the arsenal, along the water front, dwelling houses and commercial establishments were invaded by the water, which broke at the quay about ten feet high, but rushed through the narrow streets many feet higher. The shipbuilding yards of Capt. Peterson, Brown, and Benchahman were destroyed.

Mrs. Gooding, an aged American, narrowly escaped death, being caught by débris in her home when it collapsed.

The lumber sheds of L. Martin were destroyed, the lumber floating far and wide, acting like battering rams against warehouses and dwellings.

American Consulate Collapses.

About 8 o'clock in the morning the American Consulate, the oldest structure in Papeete, built about 1836, collapsed. In the absence of the American Consul his mother, Mrs. Doty, supervised the removal of the archives, aided by several missionaries. Mrs. Doty was in serious jeopardy several times. The records were temporarily stored at the Latter Day Saints' mission house. Mr. Doty's family also accepted their hospitality.

The British Consulate was damaged and Capt. Bemall had to abandon his home with his family.

The substitute guardian at the quarantine station at Motauta Island, Papeete harbor, was waving a lantern for many hours during the night, as he and his wife clung to the tops of cocoanut trees in the midst of waves that dashed thirty feet high over the island. On shore M. Andre, the chief pilot, called out to Commander Hurbin of the gunboat Zelee in let him have a boat and crew for the rescue. Commander Hurbin explained that he deemed it his duty to decline to send his men on what appeared to be a forlorn hope expedition, but promised to let M. Andre have a boat without a crew. Pilot Andre requisitioned four prisoners a the local jail and with them swam to the Zelee, as Commander Hurbin did not wish to risk the lives of his crew, even to send a boat ashore. The four native prisoners went to the rescue.

The schooner Papeete was submerged for an hour near Anaa, Tuamotu. Her Captain, Philip Michaelli, estimated that the waves were 65 feet high. It was impossible to see twenty feet away. At 3 o'clock in the day time the sailors had to be lashed to the vessel.

M. Marcadi, a French resident at Faharan, Tuamotu, abandoned the place in a small cutter after all the Government buildings and dwelling houses and the Catholic Church were swept away. He reached here after three days' battling with the sea. Many of the natives had climbed cocoanut trees, and others put out to sea in small boats. M. Marcadi knew of no loss of life, but feared that many would succumb to hunger, thirst, and exposure.

Appeals for Aid for Homeless.

There is much distress among the homeless people. The local government opened the military barracks as a temporary refuge, and provided food when needed, but the funds of the treasury are practically exhausted. Gov. Jullien will appeal to France for aid. The British Consul will also address his Government in behalf of some 500 British subjects, (Cook Islanders,) who have lost their homes.

The American colony also has sustained heavy losses, and are hopeful that either the United States Government will forward to Consul Doty an amount equal to the emergency or that American citizens in California and elsewhere will furnish funds to him or a committee of merchants.

The steam Mariposa waited beyond her sailing time at the request of Gov. Jullien, who hoped that the French gunboat Zelee would return from her relief trip to the Tuamotu Islands. The vessel had not been sighted when the Mariposa departed.

THE DEVASTATED ISLANDS.

Two Groups French and One English —Many Christians There.

The Society Islands lie between 16 degrees and 18 degrees south latitude at the western end of the border of the two bands of islands that constitute the south tropical chain. Their area is about 630 square miles. Besides Tahiti, Eimeo, and other lesser islands of the Windward Group, the Society Islands comprise the Leeward group, including Raiatea, Bora-Bora, Tubai, Huahine, Lord Howe, and other small islands.

The archipelago was discovered by Quiros, the Spaniard, in 1606, and was visited by Cook, who went thither on his first voyage in 1769 to observe the transit of Venus.

The French protectorate was declared in 1842, but it was not until 1880 that the Windward group was formally annexed, followed by the Leeward group in 1885. The islands are all volcanic and mountainous, well watered, densely wooded, and surrounded by coral reefs. The climate is mild and healthful. The chief commercial products are copra and pearl shells, but cotton, sugar, rum, vanilla, oranges, cocoanut oil, and edible fungi are also exported.

The natives are Polynesians, many of whom have been converted to Christianity. Tahiti is the seat of Papeeti, capital of French Oceania. It has an area of about 400 square miles, and is the largest of the Society group. It consists of two mountainous peninsulas united by a narrow isthmus. The coasts are low, but in the interior are mountains culminating in a peak over 7,000 feet high.

The Tuamotu Archipelago, including the small group of the Gandier Islands at the southeast, comprises over eighty lower coral islands lying east of the Society Islands, between 14 and 24 degrees south latitude and 135 and 150 west longitude. The area is about 330 square miles. The natives are of Polynesian stock, thrifty and industrious, and comparing favorably with the often careless and indolent dwellers on the fertile volcanic islands. The chief products are copra, pearl shells, and furs.

The Cook, or Hervey, Islands, in the south tropical chain, lie east of the Tonga group, and, like them, crossed by the parallel of 20 degrees south, comprise fifteen islands and islets, with a total area of 142 square miles. They were discovered by Cook in 1777, were taken under British protection in 1888, and, with the Tongarewa and Sudaroff Islands and some other small groups, became a dependency of New Zealand in 1900.

The largest island, Rarotonga, thirty square miles, is a richly wounded volcanic island, surrounded by a coral reef, and is the seat of the British residence. The laws are administered by an Executive Council, of which the native Kings and Queens are members. Cocoanuts and their products, breadfruits, coffee, cotton, and oranges are the chief productions of the group.

LAWYER STEELE RETURNING.

Not Missing, Son Says—Charged with Practicing Illegally.

Charles Brewster Steele of Linden Hill, Flushing, who was reported missing yesterday, and for whom a warrant is out on a charge of practicing law without legal right, will return to this city on Monday to face the charge, which is preferred by Andrew McCreary of 50 Pine Street.

This announcement was made by Charles Nelson Steele, his son, at Linden Hall last night. The younger Steele added that his father had never been missing and had only recently learned that there was a warrant out for his arrest.

Steele, who is well to do, has an office in the suite occupied by Brainsby & Dorin, lawyers, at 32 Broadway, but he is not connected with the firm in business, the son says. A few weeks ago, Mr. McCreary charged Mr. Steele with practicing law illegally, and the matter went to the District Attorney's office. Mr. Steele immediately went there, and, on explaining that he was a patent lawyer who had practiced in Washington, D. C., for many years, the matter was dropped.

A week ago yesterday Mr. Steele went to Boston. On Monday Mr. McCreary swore out a warrant before Magistrate Baker. Steele, however, could not be found, and it was said after a few days that he was "missing." His son would not explain his absence, save that his father was not aware he was wanted here. He added that Mr. McCreary's family was quite friendly with the Steeles, and that he could not understand the action. In fact, he said, at the moment the warrant was being sworn out, Mr. McCreary's mother and sister were visiting the Steeles at Linden Hill.

When Mr. Steele came to this city from Washington he brought letters of recommendation, his son says, from Jesse Grant, son of President Grant; Capt. Cook, and other army friends with whom he is acquainted.

LAWMAKERS AND FELONS SAVE TORNADO VICTIMS

DEATH LIST'S TOTAL NOW 24

Man Crushed in Ruins of a Building Ends His Sufferings by Cutting His Throat.

Special to The New York Times.

MERIDIAN, Miss., March 3.—At a late hour to-night twenty-four bodies had been recovered from the ruins of the district swept by the tornado last night. Fifty-three persons were injured, and property of an estimated value of $1,000,000 was ruined or damaged.

One of the sad tragedies of the disaster was the suicide of Claude Williams, floor manager of the Meyer-Neville Hardware Company. Mr. Williams was at the centre of the first floor when the building collapsed, and was crushed under the débris. His cries for help were heard, but all efforts to reach him were futile. He ended his suffering by slashing his throat with his penknife. His body was recovered this morning. Mr. Williams was 25 years of age, unmarried, and the only support of two sisters.

A mass meeting of citizens of Meridian was called to-day and $8,000 was immediately subscribed to aid the destitute and injured. Hunter George, President of the Board of Trade, was made Chairman of the General Relief Committee, and J. W. Donovan was elected Secretary. Business is practically suspended, and every citizen is giving his best efforts toward alleviating the suffering of many poor people.

A special train arrived from Jackson late this afternoon bearing forty Senators and Representatives, Gov. Vardaman, the Attorney General, and a Railroad Commissioner. Word had reached Gov. Vardaman that help was needed, and he immediately requested and received from the Legislature an appropriation of $5,000 to be used in case of an emergency. At the Rankin County Farm thirty-seven convicts, a Sergeant, and guards were placed on board the train, and with members of the Legislature they are at work among the débris.

The greatest loss of life is reported from the east end, in what is known as "the cotton mill" settlement. The large cotton mill there was partially wrecked and probably 400 small houses were demolished or badly damaged.

A conflict has arisen between Gov. Vardaman and President George of the Meridian Board of Trade as to the need of appealing for financial aid.

The Governor to-night issued the following:

"To the People of Mississippi: I find on arrival here that the destructive cyclone which visited the City of Meriden yesterday evening left a great many poor people in a pitifully destitute condition. Their houses were wrecked and household goods destroyed. The accumulation of a lifetime has been swept away. They must be cared for, and their wants supplied, and it is too much to ask the good people of Meridian to bear this burden alone.

"To this end I call upon all good people of Mississippi to contribute generously to this cause. Let the contributions be sent to Col. H. M. Street, Chairman of the Relief Committee, Meridian, Miss. I trust that you will act promptly in this matter."

"In view of the highly colored accounts of the cyclone Friday night which have found publication, this Board of Trade and Cotton Exchange request that you announce officially that Meridian is amply able to take care of her own unfortunates, sufficient funds being raised for the purpose at a mass meeting held to-day and does not desire, nor could she accept, outside financial aid of any kind.

"While appreciating the sympathy and good fellowship displayed in these proffers, it is well to be understood that Meridian is not yet impoverished, her people being easily able to meet the emergency."

F. M. Strutz of Washington, Mo., who left to-day for Mobile, gave a vivid description of last night's tornado. Mr. Strutz said:

"I was in the dining room of the Southern Hotel when the death-dealing wind struck the city. Late in the afternoon I noticed dark clouds hovering around the city and the humidity was very trying. Shortly after 6:15 o'clock a terrible-looking cloud could be observed bounding out from the southwest toward the city. This was followed by a downpour of rain and then, with a rush and a noise that struck terror to the stoutest hearts, the tornado descended upon that portion of the city near the passenger station.

"It came toward the city from the southwest, following the railroad tracks which passed through Meridian along Front Street. The noise was terrible. Among the first buildings to go down was the electric lighting plant, and the city was thrown into a stifling darkness. Confusion reigned. People were panic-stricken and rushed into the streets from every direction.

"To add to the terror of the night fire started out in various parts of the ruined district. Vandalism was also soon apparent, and to keep back persons who were frenzied with grief over missing friends and relatives, the local militia was called out by the Mayor. A cordon of armed men was thrown around the ruined business district. Lamps, candles, and lanterns were pressed into service by those engaged in the work of rescue."

Charles Harris, an operator for the Queen & Crescent Railroad, probably owes his escape from injury when the wind struck the depot building last night to the fact that he was a cripple. Many of the others in the building, when they heard the wind roaring outside, attempted to escape, and several of them were injured in their efforts. Harris sat on the floor, hoping that the storm might pass over his head, which it did. He escaped with a few scratches.

Among other freaks which the wind played was the carrying off of a little baby of James Stewart from its home, sweeping it through the air many feet above the ground and finally depositing it gently on the ground uninjured. The baby lay in the rain for some time, but appeared none the worse for its experience. This morning about 5 o'clock when searchers found the missing child it was peacefully sleeping.

DOUBLE PENNSYLVANIA ROAD.

Plan to Create a Parallel Two-Track Line for Freight.

PHILADELPHIA, March 3.—Official explanation was made to-day concerning the trans-State railroad project which President Cassatt outlines in the annual report of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company just published. The plan is the creation of an entirely separate double track railroad, paralleling the present line from Pittsburg to Philadelphia and New York, the idea being to separate passenger and freight traffic.

According to preliminary estimates, fully $30,000,000 and not less than two years' time will be required to do the work contemplated. When completed, the additional system will comprise about 480 miles of railroad line, of which about 184 miles are virtually completed.

PENNSYLVANIA'S PENSIONS.

Railroad Has Paid $2,004,087 to Retired Employes in Six Years.

The statistics of the Pennsylvania Railroad Pension Department, compiled as of Dec. 31, 1905, show that in the six years of its operation there has been authorized in pension allowance to retired employes of the company $2,004,087.59, made up each year as follows: 1905, $390,000; 1904, $390,000; 1903, 359,374.32; 1902, $328,403.10; 1901, $292,290.20, and 1900, $244,019.97.

The expense of operation, also borne by the company, is not included in these figures. In the six years 2,700 employes have been retired as pensioners, of which number 890 have died. Of the total number retired, 688 were between the ages of 65 and 69 years, and 546 were retired on their own request with the approval of the employing officer.

PROBING WALSH BANK CRASH.

More Than Thirty Prosecutions Threatened in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 3.—It is said that more than thirty prosecutions are threatened in consequence of the failure of the Walsh banking institutions. It was revealed to-day that the operations in "dummy" notes were on a more extensive scale than had been supposed. Twenty-nine notes, calling for $2,628,000, have been uncovered in the assets of the Chicago National Bank, and the Government officers say that measures will be taken against every man who has committed a criminal act.

It came out to-day that the report which Walsh made, and which it is charged was false, was signed by two Directors of the bank. The Government declined to make public these men's names. Subpoenas were issued to-day for Special Bank Examiner Curry, an accountant, and four former clerks and tellers in the bank.

GLAD COLER ISN'T HOSTILE.

President of B. R. T. Quotes Speech Which Made Him Think So.

E. W. Winter, President of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, has sent a communication to Borough President Coler of Brooklyn in response to the latter's open letter of Friday. Mr. Coler's letter was the result of Mr. Winter's public statement that the city officials were hostile to the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, and that on account of this hostility the company could not get the franchises necessary to meet the transportation requirements of the borough.

Mr. Coler denied hostility on his part, but added that the company had made contracts with the city which it never fulfilled or attempted to fulfill, and declared that if the Brooklyn Rapid Transit went to the Board of Estimate with requests for new contracts the city would have no guarantee that the company would live up to them.

In his letter yesterday President Winter quotes a declaration made by the Borough President on Feb. 6, as follows:

> While the company continues its present policy, mine is to be one of unrelenting hostility. I shall try to make it prove its right to every foot of track it has in our streets. I shall carry to the highest court, if need be, the question of its right to extend its power and its system under the cover of an all-comprehensive injunction. Every application which it shall make for a new franchise I shall oppose. Every franchise it has acquired but not used I shall refuse to recognize.

Mr. Winter goes on to say that he is glad that he has interpreted Mr. Coler's announcement as a hostile demonstration. He will gladly co-operate with the Borough President. He does not want a renewal of the ash-removal contract. He says it doesn't pay.

The letter says in part:

"It will, perhaps, be accepted even by you as some evidence of the sincerity of our purpose to improve transit conditions in Brooklyn that there has been expended to that end, within the three years last past, upward of $19,000,000 besides a much larger amount than ever before in the same period, for maintenance and repairs, and that new work of construction and improvement amounting to more than $8,000,000 is authorized for the present calendar year."

$20,000,000 BOND ISSUE.

Missouri, Kansas & Texas Road to Make Improvements.

PARSONS, Kansas, March 3.—Stockholders of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company met here to-day and decided to issue the mortgage bonds of the company to the amount of $20,000,000 to be paid in gold coin of the United States, the bonds to draw 4½ per cent. interest, to be paid semi-annually, and to be due Jan. 1, 1936. The bonds are for the improvement of the roadbed and the purchase of new rolling stock. It is also said that the company will build many miles of new road during the coming year.

Westminster Abbey, the hardware merchant of 61 Front Street, who was arrested on Friday night on the charge of receiving stolen revolvers, valued at $15, from the pier of the New Haven Railroad Company, was honorably discharged in the Police Court yesterday. His lawyer, Daniel W. Blumenthal, said last night that a suit for $75,000 damages for false arrest would be instituted by Mr. Abbey against the company.

CHINA'S COMMISSIONERS DIVIDE AFTER QUARREL

Row Said to be Due to Rumors of Dowager Empress's Death.

THREE LEFT AT SEATTLE

Others to Split Up Into Two Parties on Reaching St. Paul—Prince's Suite Reduced to Fifteen.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, March 3.—The rumors of the death of the Dowager Empress of China are presumed to be the cause of a serious dispute that has divided the Imperial High Commission now on the way from Seattle to St. Paul.

Prince Tsai-Tse, a cousin of the Emperor, is the head of the commission, and, as a member of the imperial family, naturally has conservative tendencies. Others of the party, including a number of Cantonese Secretaries and Li Sheng-Tao, Minister to Belgium, who is Third Commissioner, are well disposed toward the liberal movement now threatening the Chinese throne.

The report of the death of the Dowager Empress caused intense commotion among the members of the commission. They are reported to have engaged in a heated discussion that took an acrimonious turn. It was, it is said, only by the utmost endeavors of half a dozen cool-headed members of the party that a semblance of the wonted dignity of the distinguished Chinese was preserved.

In any event, it is already announced that three of the forty-one members of the commission were left behind at Seattle, and that the remaining thirty-eight members will divide in St. Paul and take different trains eastward.

Whether the three who were left on the coast are going to Washington through San Francisco or intend to return to China is not yet known here. It is, however, officially stated by the Burlington Road that twenty-two of the Chinese will start from here for Chicago on Monday morning on the daylight special train, and that Prince Tsai-Tse and fifteen other members will leave here on Monday night on the Burlington Limited.

The plans of the commission in this country were not so exhaustive as those of the Imperial Chinese Commission which recently visited many American cities and then sailed for Europe. The greater part of the work of the second commission was to be done in Europe, where a long time—long, at least, for Chinese commissions of this character—was to be spent.

The work of the second commission, so far as is known, was to be the same as that of the first—to make a general survey of political, industrial, and commercial conditions in the Occident and to incorporate in its reports recommendations for various reforms in China.

McMANUS'S BAIL REFUSED.

Capt. Daly Wouldn't Free Men Charged with Crap Shooting.

The McManus, Tammany leader of the Fifteenth District, and Capt. Daly of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, were at odds early this morning over the furnishing of bail for George W. Priska of 666 Eleventh Avenue and fifteen other young men, who were arrested by Daly's men for shooting craps. Priska was charged with maintaining a gambling house and the others with being common gamblers. McManus heard that Priska's house was to be raided, and was at the station house when the sixteen were brought in.

"I'll go their bail," he volunteered.

"No you won't," interrupted Daly. "Those men can't be bailed out."

"Not here," retorted Daly.

"Yes, here," insisted McManus.

"It makes a difference," said Capt. Daly, "whether they are charged with a felony or a misdemeanor." Then the two men consulted the Penal Code.

"You can't get them out," said Daly with emphasis when the conference was over.

"I'll bet a gold mine I will," retorted McManus angrily. "I'll get those boys out if I have to get a Magistrate out of bed to do it." Then, casting a look of indignation and anger at Daly, he walked out of the station to find a Magistrate.

COL. BILL GETS PAINE FARM.

He May Lay Out on It a Suburban Park for New Rochelle.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, March 3.—The farm in New Rochelle where Thomas Paine, author of the "Age of Reason," spent his latter days, was sold to-day to Col. Edward Lyman Bill, publisher of The Music Trade Review of New York. Col. Bill paid $60,000, it is said, and will lay out a suburban park.

The farm, which originally consisted of seventy-seven acres, was given to Paine by the New York Legislature in 1784, following his flight from France to escape death at the hands of the Directorate. The same year Congress voted $3,000 to Paine for his patriotic services. The farm has since been divided several times, and the remaining portion consists of only forty-one acres.

ALASKA GOVERNORSHIP OPEN.

D. H. Jarvis Declines the President's Offer of It.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—D. H. Jarvis, formerly an officer in the Revenue Cutter Service and now General Manager of the Northwestern Fisheries Company, called on the President to-day to discuss with him the Governorship of Alaska, which the President had tendered to him.

Mr. Jarvis informed the President that personally he should like very much to accept the appointment, but for business reasons he felt compelled to decline. In these circumstances, the President accepted Mr. Jarvis's reasons as sufficient.

Among the candidates for the place are W. T. Perkins of Nome, W. B. Hoggatt of Juneau, and John P. Clum, recently appointed Postmaster at Fairbanks, Alaska.

CONVICT HIT PROSECUTOR.

Prevented a Plea for Leniency and Got Severe Sentence.

CHICAGO, March 3.—Frank Crowe, Assistant State Attorney, was to-day struck down by Joseph Brown, a prisoner, who had been brought into court to be sentenced for robbery. Brown, while passing Mr. Crowe, suddenly reached out and struck him, knocking him unconscious.

Mr. Crowe had come into court intending to ask the Judge to be lenient with Brown. While he was unconscious the prisoner got an indeterminate penitentiary sentence that may last from one to fourteen years.

STORY OF A SATCHEL STRAP.

False Whiskers Would Not Better Have Disguised the Commuter.

Mr. Harvey, THE TIMES's commuter, had long noticed that whenever the train brought in an extra lot of passengers his friend, Conductor Rice, carried the satchel containing the earnings of the run up to the office by a shoulder strap.

"My satchel gets pretty heavy sometimes," said Mr. Harvey. "Guess I'll try it, too."

So it happened that one day last week Mr. Harvey walked 'cross lots to the Lonesome Park railroad station, with the satchel containing lunch, night cap, air cushion, (the better to catch a nap going home on the Owl,) also a strictly fresh fish for a flat dweller hanging from his shoulder, happy in the conceit that that strap was the next best thing to having an extra hand, especially when it came to climbing fences.

The first shock came in Vesey Street within a block of the river. An elderly man of benign appearance halted him.

"My friend," said he, "have you got any of those little rubber balls that you squeeze and a donkey's head pops out of them?"

"No, Sir. Sorry, Sir; only lemon drops to-day," said Mr. Harvey, hurrying on to find himself face to face with a friend of many years ago.

"How are you, Major?" exclaimed Mr. Harvey. They shook hands and talked commonplaces for a few minutes.

"Now, Major," said Mr. Harvey, "I'll bet you don't know who I am."

"Yes I do," said the Major. "Ain't you the fellow that put the wiring in at the club when I was on the House Committee?"

At Park Row a fakir was selling—from a satchel—a pretty toy, three cardboard disks which whirred when you pulled the string and showed changing bands of colors covering the whole spectrum.

"It's good to have a bag," mused Mr. Harvey, as he bought four. "If I tried to take those home to the children in my pocket they'd sure be broken."

Another stranger accosted him before the old Times Building.

"I've got a fine line for you," said he. "Want it?"

"Of course I do," said Mr. Harvey. "What is it?"

The stranger dived deep into the side pocket of his shabby ulster and brought up a heaping handful of chestnut bells.

"I can fix you out with these," said he, "so's you can sell them for a cent apiece and make 300 per cent. at that."

Mr. Harvey said he worked only on commission, and plunged into the Subway station at the bridge. Those spinning disks were so pretty that standing aloof beneath the stairs he took the topmost out of the heap in the satchel and made it go. Instantly a platform guard was at his shoulder.

"I'm sorry, my friend," he said in kindly tones, "but you mustn't try to sell those here. It's against orders."

Still Mr. Harvey finds that satchel strap a mighty handy thing going 'cross lots, and it packs easy in the bag every day when the ferryboat bumps into the New York shore.

TO ADOPT NEW YORK BILLS.

Armstrong, Hughes, and Lawson Expected at Ohio Inquiry.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 3.—All the bills prepared by the Armstrong Committee in New York will be thrown into the Ohio legislative hopper within the next few days. Following the introduction of these measures, all the forces which have been behind the inquisition of insurance conditions in New York will be put to work to procure if possible the enactment of the bills into laws.

With this end in view the Insurance Committee, to which the measure will in all probability be referred, will hold a public hearing on the question when the presence of Senator Armstrong, head of the committee which bears his name, and Attorney Hughes, whose questioning produced the evidence at the hearing in New York, as well as Thomas W. Lawson, who stirred up the whole trouble, is expected.

It is the purpose of those who are behind the insurance reform movement to force the fight for proposed remedial legislation in Columbus simultaneously with the battle in Albany. Had it not been for the illness of Gov. Pattison there would have been an insurance investigation in Ohio before now. The condition of the Executive, himself the head of an insurance company, precluded such action.

HELD FOR POISONING BRIDE.

Young Georgian, Married Two Weeks, Is Committed to Jail.

OCILLA, Ga., March 3.—Reason Handley was lodged in jail at Irwinville to-day charged with poisoning his young bride of two weeks. Handley is from near Crossland, and had lived here for a short time.

The Coroner held an inquest yesterday and the jury asked that the stomach be analyzed, which will be done. The accused is a young man of a prominent family. He protests his innocence.

Ribs Crushed at Bridge Entrance.

While trying to board a car at the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn Bridge last night, Orville Whitney, a belt manufacturer, living at 255 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, was caught between the car and a pillar and badly crushed. At the Hudson Street Hospital it was found that several of his ribs were fractured. Mr. Whitney is seventy-three years old. His son, Dr. Chester Whitney of 244 West 104th Street, was called to the hospital by telephone.

Salt Sprinkled to Ruin Ice Crop.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 3.—The police of this city and the people in general are energetically engaged in endeavoring to apprehend the persons who endeavored to ruin the business of Charles F. Tiedemann, an ice dealer here, by sprinkling a large quantity of salt on an ice pond just before cutting was to begin. This is the second time the act has been perpetrated upon Tiedemann this season, and each time he has suffered heavy loss.

Cup of Kerosene Kills Child.

Mrs. Stabello of 317 West Seventy-fourth Street, the mother of 4-year-old Amelia Stabello, grew tired after giving the child four drinks of water in an hour, and when she asked for a fifth she told her to get it herself. Little Amelia was just able to reach a cup that stood on the table and drank its contents. It contained kerosene, and the child died in a few hours.

workable for the reason that no company can tell in the course of a year how expenses will stand at the year's end with reference to the loadings. To this is added the complaint that, with the reduction of commissions, which insurance officials say would be necessary, the companies would lose all their agents in centres outside New York to the home companies of States operating under a more liberal commission arrangement, and that these same companies foreign to this State would cease writing business here because their agents would not work in this State for a less commission than they received in other States.

The small companies as well as the big ones object to the limitation of business to be written in any year which the Armstrong Committee has attempted to fix by a sliding scale for the small companies and by the flat figure of $150,000,000 for the big ones. Representatives of the smaller companies will suggest that the terminations in any given year be taken into account in figuring the limitation of business.

For instance, the case is cited of one of the smaller companies which at present is losing large amounts of business that was written in an era of rebates and bonus giving. The company has about $100,000,000 of business outstanding, and would under the report be allowed to write $25,000,000 of business a year. It is estimated that the terminations this year will be in the neighborhood of $15,000,000, and it is the contention that this item should be taken into account in determining the amount of new business to be written.

To Ask Other Modifications.

The limitation of the surplus is another thing on which both the large and small companies are going to have something to say, as it is felt that the limits placed upon surplus accumulations by the Armstrong committee are not liberal enough to provide for absolute safety in all cases. Deferred dividends which are prohibited by the Armstrong report is another topic on which some modification is to be sought, and the companies have views to express also regarding the proposed compulsory annual accounting to policy holders.

In the matter of standardizing policy forms there is some criticism of the stand that the Armstrong committee has taken in prescribing four and only four forms which it says must be followed. It is objected that in several States where New York companies are doing business the State laws provide that policies shall contain features not included in the standard forms laid down for this State and that if the forms were adopted the companies would have to be continually applying to the State Superintendent of Insurance or permission to vary their policies in their business away from home.

So far as could be learned yesterday there will be no substantial objection to the plans of the committee for the policy holders of mutual companies participating in the election of Trustees and for the election of entire new boards next November. There were, to be sure, only two mutual companies, the Mutual Life and the New York Life, represented at yesterday's general meeting, but it is not expected that these two will attempt to secure a modification of the Armstrong committee's ideas on these points.

Stock Companies Content.

The stock companies, so far as could be learned, are also well content with the recommendation that the Directors of a stock company may with the consent of a majority of the stock mutualize. A good many insurance men expected much more radical legislation on this point.

While these plans are being worked out on behalf of the companies themselves, the general agents of many of them represented in the Life Underwriters' Association are busily at work to obtain on their own account some modification of the Armstrong Committee's scheme of restricting new business and the expenses for writing it. At the Life Underwriters' dinner on Wednesday night it was contended that the report would put the agents out of business entirely.

Since then some impatience has been expressed at the stand the companies have taken. The agents are understood to be working on a scheme to flood the Legislature with letters demanding a modification of the report in these respects, and are thinking of employing the endless chain idea to this end.

A statement issued last night by William C. Johnson, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Life Underwriters' Association of New York, is in part as follows:

Statement by the Agents.

The statement that the agents are organizing to "strike back" at the Armstrong Committee does them a grave injustice. The 18,000 licensed agents in the State of New York rejoice in the efficient work done by the Armstrong Investigating Committee and welcome the proposed laws requiring publicity, accountability, and a proper limitation of expenses. We believe that a reform in the agency system will lead to driving the unscrupulous rebating agents out of the business and do much to elevate the calling of the life agent. It will diminish lapses and benefit all policy holders. Every honest insurance man believes in putting a stop to extravagant methods in the handling of trust funds, and will rejoice to see that that end is accomplished.

The agents do not disagree with the end sought by the Armstrong Committee. They merely feel that the method of limiting agency expenses as proposed by that committee will be not only of injury to them but to the policy holders of the companies. With this view of the matter they propose to be heard through their representatives at the hearing at Albany on the 9th, and the agents as a whole feel so strongly about the matter that a large number of them will go to the hearing.

The agents are making no effort whatever to create sentiment against the Armstrong Committee or the purpose that it has in view. On the contrary, they are in hearty accord with most of its recommendations. They propose only to make a clear and businesslike statement of their objections to the proposed new Section 98, covering agency expenses, which objections are that the adoption of such a radical provision would lead, not only to the disintegration and destruction of the agency plants of the New York State companies, but to the withdrawing from this State of the old and conservative companies of New England and of other outside States.

Such withdrawal would, of couse, throw thousands of agents out of employment, and would be an injury to the citizens of the State, as it would preclude them from hereafter purchasing insurance from a class of companies which have contributed nothing to recent scandals, and which have given the public a square deal and sound insurance at honest cost.

The statement adds that the agents and the Armstrong Committee are working toward the same end.

PROMISE TO SUPPORT FISH.

British Policy Holders Cable Assurance That They Will Aid.

A cable dispatch has been received from the British Policy Holders' Committee, of which Lord Northcliffe (Sir Alfred Harmsworth) is Chairman, that that committee and the policy holders it represents will be solidly behind Stuyvesant Fish in any move he undertakes on behalf of the policy holders of the Mutual and New York Life Insurance Companies.

This makes a strong British representation of policy holders a practical certainty. Steps will be taken at once to extend the organization through Germany and France, where both the Mutual and New York Life Insurance Companies have been working, through their agents, with a view to continuing the present management in office.

Letters are being received here every day from policy holders who are in sympathy with the movement, and negotiations are in progress with several men of National reputation to serve on the committee.

Even the friends of E. H. Harriman repudiated yesterday the story that Mr. Fish had tried to trade a settlement of the Illinois Central fight for a cessation of his activities in the life insurance field.

Australian Black Swans.

A fearful destruction of animal and bird life has ben going on in Australia during recent years. From a number of places come reports of the ruthless manner in which the black swans are being exterminated. They are said to be "shot down in dozens by pot-hunters, who frequently leave the birds maimed and wounded." Western Australia was originally known as the "Swan River Settlement." All the early issues of stamps in that colony had a graceful black swan floating in their centrepiece. These stamps are now very rare and valuable.—London Chronicle.

FOOD.

THE CARELESS GROCER
Blundered, and Great Good Came of It.

A careless grocer left the wrong package at a Michigan home one day and thereby brought a great blessing to the household.

"Two years ago I was a sufferer from stomach trouble, so acute that the effort to digest ordinary food gave me great pain, and brought on a condition of such extreme nervousness that I could not be left alone. I thought I should certainly become insane. I was so reduced in flesh that I was little better than a living skeleton. The doctors failed to give me relief and I despaired of recovery.

"One day our groceryman left a package of Grape-Nuts food by mistake, so I tried a dish for dinner. I was surprised to find that it satisfied my appetite and gave me no distress whatever. The next meal I ate of it again, and to be brief, I have lived for the past year almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. It has proved to be a most healthy and appetizing food, perfectly adapted to the requirements of my system.

"It is not only easily digested and assimilated itself, but I find that since I have been using it I am able to eat anything else my appetite fancies, without trouble from indigestion. The stomach trouble and nervousness have left me, I have regained my plumpness, and my views of life are no longer despondent and gloomy. Other members of my family, especially my husband, (whose old enemy the 'heart-burn' has been vanquished,) have also derived great benefit from the use of Grape-Nuts food and we think no morning meal complete without it." MARCH 1906

GERMANY GETS VOTES OF ONLY TWO STATES

Austria and Morocco Her Supporters at Algeciras.

TO DISCUSS POLICE QUESTION

Delegates Accept the British Proposal—Outlook for an Agreement Regarded as More Hopeful.

ALGECIRAS, March 3.—The Conference on Moroccan Reforms took a most important step to-day by deciding, on the initiative of Great Britain, to proceed to the immediate discussion of the police question.

After Sir Arthur Nicolson, Chief of the British Delegation, had submitted this proposition, the Marquis Visconti Venosta, head of the Italian Mission, actively seconded it, eloquently appealing for conciliation and asking for the abandonment of the absolute and unbending attitude of France and Germany. His words were listened to with respectful deference.

The voting showed that Germany, who was against the British proposition, had with her Austria and Morocco, while eight representatives of powers supported Sir Arthur Nicolson. Belgium and Sweden announced that they would abide by the decision of the majority. One of the delegates then proposed that the police question be referred to a special committee, which should propose a project and submit it to the conference, but this proposition was received with a negative vote.

The result of the vote on Sir Arthur Nicolson's proposition has caused something of a sensation, as it means that the delicate Franco-German contest over the policing of Morocco has been forced to a decisive issue in which both sides will be compelled to show their hands. Moreover, the vote gave the first indication of strength of the two sides. While this was not decisive, as the question was not upon the merits of the police controversy, yet it showed that Austria and Morocco were the only countries voting with Germany. It is understood that France will not present a police project to the conference and that therefore she will be consulted simply on the question of principle involved.

It is expected that the discussion of the police question will be begun on Monday.

Concerning a dispatch to a London newspaper from Washington to the effect that Emperor William contemplates a dramatic stroke by announcing to the world that France and Germany have agreed, the delegates declare that they do not possess information warranting such a statement. However, many of them admit that the character of the German Emperor makes such a step possible.

Herr von Radowitz, head of the German delegation, while denying the statement, expresses a hopeful view of the situation. Count Cassini, the chief Russian Plenipotentiary, says he pins his faith on the events of the last hour, when both sides are face to face with the tremendous responsibility of the failure of the conference.

On the whole, the trend of opinion among the delegates is that the chances for a successful result are growing.

VIENNA, March 3.—Diplomats here regard the situation at Algeciras as more favorable.

It was stated authoritatively to-day that Austria-Hungary, Russia, and the United States had made strong representations to Berlin, in consequence of which Prince Bülow appeared to have adopted a more conciliatory attitude, and was inclined to entertain France's proposals.

ROME, March 3.—The official news received here from Algeciras is hopeful, and points to the possibility of the adoption of a middle course between the French and German pretensions, toward which end Italy and Austria are working, and at the same time endeavoring to obtain the adhesion of the United States. It is believed in official quarters here that this combination would exercise such a moral influence that it would assume almost the character of mediation.

The compromise, it is added, may consist in practically giving the control of the Morocco State Bank to France, who in exchange would make important concessions regarding the control of the Morocco police.

PARIS CHEERS KING EDWARD.

He Will Exchange Visits with President Fallieres To-day.

PARIS, March 3.—King Edward arrived at the Invalides Station at 6:50 o'clock this evening. He was met by a representative of President Fallières and by Premier Rouvier, Prefect of Police Lépine, and Sir Francis L. Bertie, the British Ambassador, and the embassy staff.

Crowds cheered the King as he was driven to the British Embassy, where he will remain for three days under the incognito of the Duke of Lancaster.

The arrival of King Edward attracts comment in connection with the Algeciras conference as being a timely reaffirmation of the Anglo-French agreement. President Fallières and King Edward will exchange visits to-morrow, and afterward there will be a gala dinner at the embassy, at which the King, the President, and the Premier will be guests. Baron de Courcel, head of the French mission at the funeral of King Christian, and who at that time approached Emperor William with the purpose of ameliorating Franco-German relations, will also be of the party.

WATERSPOUT ENGULFED SHIP.

Brig Lucienne Sunk in Madagascar Disaster—Village Destroyed.

ANTANANARIVO, March 3.—Details of the havoc caused by the waterspout which recently destroyed the village of Mahanoro show that only two houses were left standing.

Thirty bodies have been recovered. All the Europeans in the village were injured and the material losses were very great.

The French brig Lucienne was engulfed and disappeared.

Royal Prizes at Milan Exposition.

ROME, March 3.—In connection with the coming International Exposition at Milan, the King of Italy will donate $16,000 in prizes, as follows: $2,000 each for the most artistically furnished room, the best public automobile, the best flying machine, the best workingmen's house, and the most useful invention for Italian industries, and $1,000 each for the best automatic coupler, motor boat, means for distributing milk, brass band, horse exhibit, and indicator for high-power currents. The prizes will be awarded to any one exhibiting at the exposition, and the competition is open to the world.

Gallant Suicide a Tennesseean.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., March 3.—The body of the man who committed suicide last night by leaping from the end of Young's Pier floated ashore at South Atlantic City to-day. Papers found in his pockets showed him to have been E. M. Y. Bass, once a Tennessee lawyer, and a Confederate veteran. He had a cork leg and the body was floating head downward when discovered. He was supposed to represent New York magazines here. No money was found on the body.

STAY FOR E. F. SHEPARD.

Further Efforts Made to Save Him from a French Jail.

PARIS, March 3.—The Government's refusal to pardon Elliott F. Shepard, grandson of the late W. H. Vanderbilt, carries with it the necessity for him to serve his sentence, but renewed efforts to induce the Government to reconsider its decision have resulted in a postponement of the beginning of the sentence until March 12.

Two new applications have been submitted, one to the Foreign Office and the other to the Prefecture. Mr. Shepard says he is confident that the new applications will be successful.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The State Department is receiving many appeals to intervene on behalf of Elliott F. Shepard, who has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment in France.

While the substance of these appeals has been transmitted to the American Embassy at Paris, the State Department feels that it has no right to make any sort of demand upon the French Government in a case like this, when all the forms of law have been observed, so that any leniency toward Mr. Shepard will be purely voluntary on the part of France.

Mr. Shepard was recently in this country. Afterward it was reported that he had gone to Cuba, but the Paris dispatch apparently indicates that he has now returned to France.

NEW YORKERS AID HAMBURG.

Messrs. Warburg and Lewisohn Subscribe for a University There.

BERLIN, March 3.—The Tageblatt says that, notwithstanding the denial of the report that Alfred Beit has given $500,000 to found a university at Hamburg, the statement is true.

The paper adds that Messrs. Warburg of Hamburg, Felix M. Warburg of New York, and Mr. Lewisohn of New York have also given $500,000 each for the same purpose.

Felix M. Warburg of this city said last night that the project for a university at Hamburg was in a primary stage and that none of those interested in the matter had given anything like $500,000 for its foundation.

"It is true," said Mr. Warburg, "that Mr. Lewisohn, my brother, and myself have given something toward the project, but it is untrue that we have given $500,000. I will not name the amount, but no one has given over $100,000.

"The whole matter is in a primary stage. So far as Mr. Beit is concerned, I can say that he has been approached."

In explaining the purposes of the university, Mr. Warburg said it was considered that, Hamburg being a free city and without an institution of high learning, the foundation of a university there would assure a good deal of freedom and would be a valuable adjunct to the German educational system.

AMERICAN'S GIFT TO PARIS.

Franklin Statue to be Unveiled April 20—Big Celebration Planned.

PARIS, March 3.—Ambassador McCormick and Premier Rouvier are planning a notable Franco-American celebration on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue of Benjamin Franklin on April 20.

Ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith of Philadelphia will be the chief speaker, and it is probable that ex-President Cleveland and ex-President Loubet will be asked respectively to head the American and French honorary committees.

The statue of Benjamin Franklin referred to in the foregoing dispatch is a duplicate of the statue standing in front of the Philadelphia Post Office. It will stand close to the site of the home occupied in Paris by Franklin.

It is the gift of John H. Harjes, the American banker of Paris, to the municipality of that city. It is of bronze, was cast at Greenpoint, N. Y., and was designed by John J. Boyle of New York City, and cost about $10,000.

ANOTHER PLOT IN COLOMBIA.

Ex-War Secretary and Chief of Police of Bogota Arrested.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The following dispatch from Bogota was received to-day at the State Department:

"Another group of prominent men, including Fernandez, former Secretary of War, and Ramirez, Chief of Police, has been arrested for conspiracy. The former has been exiled to Curacao and the latter has been tried by court-martial.

"The would-be assassins of the President have not yet been apprehended. The police are patrolling the city armed with rifles. Most amicable relations exist between the American Legation and the Government."

SAW TOO MANY CHURCHES.

So Football-Playing Students Left Their Professor in Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 3.—Giving as the reason for suddenly abandoning their tour over the European continent that they objected to the too frequent visits to religious edifices insisted on by Dr. Swigert, Professor of Modern Languages, several students at Sewanee University have returned home.

"It is true we went abroad for instruction," said one of the returning party, "but we thought we might be permitted to sprinkle a little fun along with the general life. We were taken into churches by the wholesale. We enjoyed the famous old-style architecture and the wonderful cathedrals at Milan, Rome, Cologne, and Notre Dame, Paris, but we had to draw the line at the frequent visits to the little churches that were of no interest to us. Therefore we packed up our trunks and sailed."

It is said that the Faculty will investigate the trouble, although the trip was started when the students were not under the direct jurisdiction of the university.

REORGANIZERS FEW.

Only Two Responded to Brooklyn Democratic Club's Call.

The Brooklyn Democratic Club appointed a committee at its last meeting to invite representatives of all Democratic factions in the borough to meet and discuss plans for the reorganization of the party in McCarren's bailiwick. The conference was to be held last night.

At the appointed hour F. X. Carmody, Richard Dixon, Daniel Moynahan, A. Augustus Healy, and A. H. Eastwood, club members all, were in the reception room, waiting to greet the representatives of the party who should appear. Half an hour or so later Warden Patrick Hayes and Robert F. Gillin of the Brooklyn League of Democratic Clubs appeared. They were the first and last arrivals.

Controller Herman A. Metz, on his way to a dinner, looked in for a moment. When he saw the seven Democrats sitting despondently in one corner of the reception room he laughed.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Are reorganizers afraid of hot feet?"

When the Controller had gone it was announced that the conference was off.

CAUGHT WITH BOMBS INTENDED FOR CZAR

REACTIONARIES DESPERATE

ST. PETERSBURG, March 3.—Two Anarchists armed with bombs were arrested at a railroad station here to-day as they were boarding a train for Tsarskoe-Selo, where the Emperor is living.

The reactionary cabal at Tsarskoe-Selo, headed by Count Ignatieff, Gen. Trepoff, and Gen. Prince Putiatin, made a last ditch fight to defeat the decision of the Emperor to incorporate in the fundamental laws of the empire the provision that hereafter no law shall be effective without the consent of the National Assembly and the Council of the Empire. According to some reports their efforts were not without the sympathy of the Empress.

When it became apparent that Premier Witte and the other councilors who argued that only such a renunciation of the imperial power could appease the sentiment of the country would carry the day Count Ignatieff made a last personal appeal to the Emperor, warning him that such an irrevocable step would put an end forever to the autocracy. The Emperor, however, remained firm, and ordered a vote of the Council to be taken, and when the proposition was carried his Majesty formally confirmed the decision.

The reactionary cabal is represented as being driven to desperation by the defeat and there are sinister rumors of an attempt at a palace revolution.

The Emperor's determination to abide by his promises of Oct. 30 was announced finally and resolutely in answer to a reactionary delegation from Ivanovo-Voznesensk which asked him to withdraw his manifesto and to govern the country as his fathers had done. The Emperor said:

"The reforms promulated on Oct. 30 are progressing without deviation. While the rights accorded to the people remain unaltered, my autocratic power will ever remain as it always has been."

The Emperor's allusion to the retention of autocratic power probably refers to a change in the definition of the imperial powers under the fundamental law, in which, though the word "unlimited" is eliminated, the word "autocratic" is retained. The official explanation is that the title "autocratic," which was assumed when Russia shook off the Tartar yoke, denotes independence of other sovereigns and has no reference to internal conditions.

Two million six hundred thousand dollars has been presented to the Don, Ural, Kuban, and Terek Cossacks, ostensibly for the improvement of their lands, but in reality as a reward for their services during the war and in repressing the troubles in the interior.

A number of armored automobiles, manufactured in France for the use of the Russian Army, have arrived here. It is understood that they will be used by the troops in case of street riots in the cities and agrarian troubles in the country.

LIEUT. SCHMIDT TO BE HANGED.

Three Other Sevastopol Mutineers Sentenced to be Shot.

ODESSA, March 3.—Lieut. Schmidt, who headed the naval mutiny last June at Sevastopol, was to-day sentenced to be hanged, three other mutineers were condemned to be shot, and twenty-seven others were sentenced to terms of imprisonment. Ten of the accused were acquitted.

The condemned men have appealed to the Court of Cassation. The executions are fixed for March 6.

GAS KILLS YOUNG STUDENT.

Arthur W. Noyes Came Here to Study Law and Languages.

When Arthur W. Noyes, a young stenographer from Boston, went to bed in his room in a flat at 233 East Ninth Street Thursday night he turned out his gas, but turned on at the same time another jet supplying a gas stove in the room. He was found dead yesterday morning. A search of his clothing revealed $30 in cash, and in his room were many books on mathematics and languages. A letter showed that his brother, E. P. Noyes, lived at 27 Washington Street, Gardner, Mass. Noyes told his landlady that he came to New York because he wanted to be near the Astor Library and Cooper Union.

GARDNER, Mass., March 3.—Arthur W. Noyes, who was found dead in his room in New York, was the son of Edward P. Noyes, a chairmaker, of this town. Young Noyes was well known here, and was considered a brilliant student. After being graduated from the High School in 1898 he spent some time at Harvard University. He withdrew from college and worked in a department store in Boston, but continued the study of languages and law, later going to New York to continue those subjects.

Loving Cup from Mayor McClellan.

Former District Attorney George A. Gregg of Queens has received a silver loving cup from Mayor McClellan. The cup is marked "G. A. G. from G. B. McC., January, 1906." A letter accompanying the gift explained that the Mayor wanted to show some appreciation of the services rendered by Mr Gregg when the latter watched the interests of Mr. McClellan in the count of the vote in Queens.

The second annual meeting and entertainment of the Amcehat Society will be held at the Grand Central Palace on Monday, March 5. At least 1,200 persons have been invited to enjoy a vaudeville programme. The society is composed of the officers, managers, and employes of the Acker, Merrall & Condit Company.

In The City Record yesterday were notices of the approval of an appropriation of $161,526 for the Police Department and of an issue of $500,000 corporate stock for the erection of a new municipal building in Brooklyn.

The Seligman Solomon Society, alumni of the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum of New York, will celebrate its nineteenth birthday with an entertainment and ball at Terrace Garden next Wednesday night. The society appropriates annually between $300 and $500 for poor relief.

The order made by Judge Conlon in the City Court in favor of Foxhall Keene, who was sued by William F. McNamara for $465 for repairs to an automobile bought from the Locomobile Company of America, has been set aside by the Supreme Court, Appellate Term.

The Sphinx Club will have a "Dry Goods Night" on Tuesday evening, March 13. The speakers will include Joseph H. Appel of John Wanamaker's, R. B. Peck, Walter Hammitt of Frederick Loeser's, and Charles W. Halsey of Rogers, Peet & Co.

Dr. Felix Pirkner of 33 West Ninety-seventh Street, who was taken to Bellevue Hospital early yesterday suffering from chloral poisoning, was said to be recovering late yesterday. He had been suffering from nervous prostration, and managing to elude his nurse, took an overdose.

MITCHELL'S MEN SCATTER.

Committee to be Called When Necessary—Preparing for Convention.

More members of the Committee of Anthracite Mine Workers left President Mitchell at the Ashland House yesterday for home. They will be summoned to New York when their presence is required. They will hold meetings to elect delegates to the National Convention. Mitchell said last night that he would make no further move until he heard from the anthracite mine workers next week. The miners' convention will meet on March 15 at Indianapolis, and the operators will meet on March 19.

Mitchell talked more cheerfully, though he was as non-committal as ever. The small operators in the soft-coal fields, it is said, will vigorously oppose any increase in wages. Most of them went into business after the anthracite strike of 1902, when there was an abnormal demand for soft coal.

PITTSBURG, March 3.—Commenting on the fact that John Mitchell, National President of the United Mine Workers, did not recognize the officers of Pittsburg district by giving them notice of the Indianapolis convention, Uriah Bellingham, Vice President of this district, said to-day:

"Mitchell has ignored us, but President Dolan, Secretary Dodds, and myself and other delegates from this local union will go to the convention, and expect to be seated. We will be prepared to fight for our rights."

CROMWELL QUIZ STOPPED.

Senate Committee Will Make Inquiries Into Type of Canal.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals to-day put an end to the examination of William Nelson Cromwell by Senator Morgan. In consequence of this long-drawn mental skirmish the committee held an executive session to-day. Mr. Morgan did not attend, but was consulted and agreed to the passage of this motion:

"That the committee complete the examination of witnesses Markel and Shonts, and then proceed to hear evidence on the type of canal, method of construction, and proposed legislation, with the understanding that the witnesses whose testimony has not been completed and such other witnesses as the committee may desire to call will be examined later."

The motion was offered by Senator Kittredge and seconded by Senator Knox, and was carried unanimously. It was decided to hear Mr. Markel at 2 P. M. on Monday, and on Tuesday hear Linden W. Bates of New York on his plan for the canal. After that American members of the consulting engineers will be heard.

No action was taken on Senator Morgan's demand that Mr. Cromwell be compelled to answer certain questions. Mr. Cromwell, who had been waiting in the corridor outside the committee room, was excused subject to the call of the chair.

GUNCAP IN EYE FIFTY YEARS.

Brush Felt No Pain Until Lately—Eye Removed and Metal Found.

After carrying in his eye for fifty years a bit of guncap that entered his eye when he was a youth, Morris R. Brush of Rockville Centre has had his eye removed to prevent the destruction of the sight of the other eye.

When the piece of flying guncap struck his eye half a century ago Brush suffered intense pain for a brief period, after which the incident almost died out of his memory. But the bit of metal remained in the eye, and, although he was not conscious of the fact, it must have been gradually working the destruction of the eye. Two years ago sharp pains were felt in the right eye, and then Brush recalled the incident of the piece of guncap. Oculists were unable to do anything either to relieve the pain or save the eye, the sight of which diminished until quite recently, when it entirely disappeared.

When the eye was removed the small piece of guncap that had caused the trouble fifty years before was found in the eye. The surgeon said he had never heard of a similar case.

SEEKS TO FREE MRS. OSBORN.

Lawyer Will Ask Order Releasing Her from Sanitarium.

Lawyer H. T. Slosson, representing Mrs. Penelope Deuel Osborn, who was declared sane by a Sheriff's jury at White Plains and who is still in a sanitarium at Mamaroneck, where she has been for five years, announced at White Plains yesterday that next Wednesday he will ask Justice Burr in Brooklyn to order the immediate discharge of Mrs. Osborn. She owns property valued at $200,000.

The three Commissioners who were appointed by Justice Keogh and the fifteen jurymen who heard the testimony have signed affidavits denying certain allegations of a lawyer representing the trust company which has charge of Mrs. Osborn's estate. The affidavits of the jurymen deny "that any one of them is a saloon keeper, or that they were prejudiced in any way against the contestant."

MANY PICTURES TO SHOW.

1,500 Sent In for the Society of American Artists' Exhibition.

The jury of the Society of American Artists, having spent Friday and Saturday in judging the paintings sent in for the approaching exhibition at the Fine Arts Building, will proceed to-day with the revision, going over all the pictures provisionally accepted, for the second time, and also judging the sculpture.

The Society has never before hud such reason to regret its exceedingly cramped quarters for exhibitions. Fifteen hundred works have been sent in and the standard is said to be unusually high. It is likely that many accepted works will remain unplaced, simply for lack of space. The Hanging Committee will begin its labors to-morrow, and the exhibition will open to the public on Saturday, March 17, at the Fine Arts Building, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street.

NEGROES' VICTIM DEAD.

News Was Kept from the Springfield Public for Several Hours.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, March 3.—Mark M. Davis, the brakeman who was shot by negroes last Wednesday night, died at 3:30 o'clock this morning. It was the shooting of Davis that led to the riots in this city on Wednesday and Thursday nights. Edward Dean and Preston Ladd, both colored, are in jail at Dayton charged with shooting Davis.

For several hours after the death of Davis Col. Charles Ammel, in command of the militia, kept the news secret. In the meantime the militia were placed in advantageous positions.

It is believed that the mob spirit is effectually broken The militia will be kept on duty until Monday.

ETHIOPIAN MOVEMENT IMPERILS WHITE RULE

Sending of Kaffirs Here for Education Causes Alarm.

AFRICA FOR THE AFRICANS

Policy of the New Native Church—Natal Premier Declares That Harsh Measures Are Necessary.

PIETERMARITZBURG, March 3.—Premier Smythe at a public meeting today denounced Ethiopianism as the primary cause of the present disaffection of the natives.

The Premier declared that the preaching of the Ethiopian leaders was calculated to destroy European rule, and he appealed for public support to make a clean sweep of the present disaffection, even though bloodshed must follow.

A clergyman who was among the speakers said 150 natives, including 20 Natalians, had recently been sent to negro colleges in America.

The movement started in South Africa by what is known as the Ethiopian Church appears, judging by recent dispatches, to have spread throughout all the British colonies in that part of the world. Its policy is "Africa for the Africans," and the British authorities fear that the recent trouble in Natal is only the forerunner of much more serious outbreaks.

Sir Albert Hime, ex-Premier of Natal, said in an interview a few days ago:

"Probably the connection of the Ethiopian Church in the general question of a native rising is exaggerated, but at the same time this body is not one which will bring benefit to any Government in South Africa and ought to be most carefully watched. The attitude of the Natal Government with regard to them is that we would like to get them out of the colony altogether, but meanwhile we watch their movements with the greatest care.

"At any rate the Ethiopian Church has not secured any hold on the people of Natal worth mentioning. In the Cape Colony, however, it exercises the greatest influence, this being due to the fact that a section of the Ethiopian Church has been recognized by the Church of the Province of South Africa in the Cape Colony. That this is a dangerous movement is clear from the facts that have come to the knowledge of the Government."

The London Times's Johannesburg correspondent, who went to Pietermaritzburg when the Natal revolt broke out, said in a dispatch dated Feb. 11:

"From several quarters intelligence has been received that the attitude of the natives is threatening, and that reinforcements are required. Small bodies of men distributed over the country may check the movement, but things have gone far enough to make more drastic measures advisable, if not imperative.

"Last night Pietermaritzburg was scared by the report that a body of natives was advancing on the town. The rumor was found to be based on the behavior of some natives a few miles off who were indulging in a war dance and predicting the death of the white man.

"From what took place last night the colony seems to require a considerable amount of organization before it will be able to cope with native disturbance on any considerable scale.

"The spirit of unrest primarily affects the Natal natives as distinct from the natives of the Zulu and other territory, but when once the fire is kindled it is difficult to say in what direction the conflagration may not spread. The fact that the first disturbance comes from Christianized Kaffirs lends color to the fear that the Ethiopian movement is already a power for mischief in the country."

HOTTENTOT LEADER CAPTURED.

German Success in Africa — Another Transport Leaves Hamburg.

BERLIN, March 3.—Gov. Lindequist of German Southwest Africa announces the capture of Capt. Cornelius and his entire band.

Cornelius, next to Jacob Morengo, was the most dangerous enemy of the Germans in the Hottentot uprising.

War Dance by 12,000 Africans.

LORENZO MARQUES, Portuguese East Africa, March 3.—The Duke of Connaught, who has been on a tour of inspection in British South Africa, to-day witnessed a war dance here by 12,000 natives. Such an armed assemblage is without parallel in time of peace.

SHOT, PLAYING WILD WEST.

Volunteer Hold-Up Victim Wounded in Tussle with Playmate.

Sixteen-year-old Felix Badrian of 316 East Eighty-sixth Street, while playing with Albert Reinhardt, a companion, of 341 East Eighty-seventh Street, in the parlor of the latter's home last night, proposed that they should have a Wild West show.

"I'll play the hold-up man," said Felix.

"All right," responded Albert. "I'll be the man to be robbed." Albert's mother, Mrs. Kate Reinhardt, and his sister Elsie looked on with approval. Felix drew a revolver from his pocket and pointed it at the other boy.

"Hold up your hands," he commanded.

"Surrender? Never!" replied Albert, as he closed with Felix; and the two boys fell to the floor. They tussled for the gun, and it exploded, a bullet entering Albert's right cheek. A Presbyterian Hospital ambulance physician found the boy was seriously wounded, and the police of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station placed Felix under arrest on a charge of felonious assault. The revolver disappeared.

DETECTIVE'S GOOD WORK IN TWO LABOR FIGHTS

How McParlan Broke Up the Mollie Maguires.

GOT STEUNENBERG'S SLAYER

Perilous Deeds of a Modest Detective Who Thinks He Has Done Nothing Notable.

Some day, a short, jolly faced little man, known to very few, quiet and retiring in deportment and living most of the time away from the rush of business life, in Denver, is going to write a history of personal adventure. He has it on the authority of the Governor of Idaho that when he does so it will be "the greatest narrative of crime which the world knows."

His name is James McParlan and he is the Western manager of the Pinkerton detective agency. He is the hero of two great labor fights, involving murder, crime, and outrage in almost every form. He made his reputation in helping to break up the Mollie Maguires in the coal regions of Pennsylvania in the 60's and 70's, and then retired to Denver, honorably superannuated.

In an idle and easy berth, awarded him for his extraordinary services in Pennsylvania he fidgetted when the Coeur d'Alene troubles broke out among the miners of the Far West, and still strong, active, tactful, and observant at the age of 52, he ventured into that as a supplement to his career, breaking the force of the wave of crime there and greatly assisting in the work of restoring order out of anarchy.

McParlan won't talk for the public. He says he never gained anything by doing so. At his quiet home in Denver he has been asked to tell about his experiences, but he refuses. He is quiet and unassuming. He talks at the right time, but doesn't believe much in reminiscence. But, for all that, he is one of the most natural "mixers" in the detective history of the country, and he can adapt himself to almost every branch of society.

He proved that when the Pinkerton agency on Oct. 27, 1873, sent him from Philadelphia to Port Clinton, seventy-five miles in the interior, to look into the Mollie Maguires. The "Mollies," as they were popularly termed, were 40,000 strong in the coal regions, and were holding a carnival of blood. Almost every day they were committing murder, and their strongholds were fortresses of anarchy.

State troops and local police had opposed them in vain. McParlan went out single-handed to see what he could do. When he landed at Port Clinton he was disguised in the tattered, blackened clothes of a miner. His luggage he carried in a bandanna handkerchief. The hotel-saloon keeper to whom he applied for lodging kicked him out of the place. A friendly Irishman took him up, however, and gave him a bed.

McParlan said he was James McKenna and was looking for a job. McKenna mixed with the Mollies at the outset and ingratiated himself, when in a drunken quarrel he thrashed the town bully. Then he went to Tamaqua and Shenandoah with letters of introduction, and was admitted to the Ancient Order of Hibernians. That was what he had been looking for, and when he received the secret signs and password he wrote back to Philadelphia:

Downfall of Mollie Maguires.

From that date the downfall of the Mollies began. During the next two years they committed many murders. Four of the men slain were Superintendents of mines, others were offending workmen. McKenna worked with his associate miners and often helped to indite warnings like this, which were sent to persons under the ban:

'Notice you have carried this as far as you can by By cheating thy men you Three bosses be Carefull if the above dont be your home in A short time.

"FROM A STRANGER—HE NOWES YOU."

Above the warning was a rude sketch of a coffin. McKenna participated, and came to be known as one of the most rollicking, reckless men of the whole outfit. He had plenty of money and drank a great deal. His reputation was that of a traveling agent for a band of counterfeiters. In 1874 there was a serious strike, and it was McKenna who remarked, when twenty of the miners were armed with Winchesters:

"Twenty times sixteen is 320. That number must fall. Nothing less."

McKenna dressed like a tramp miner, and once, when he appeared to be watching F. B. Gowen, President of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, at Pottstown, a policeman clubbed him almost to death. Later his reputation got to be that of a bank burglar, and he was put under the surveillance of the police.

After Bloody Sunday.

Aug. 14, 1874, was bloody Sunday with the Mollies. Seven men were murdered on that day, and in September five more were killed. Among them was one Thomas Jones, and it was the trial of his case which proved to be the undoing of the Mollies. Prior to that, when a Mollie was arraigned on the charge of murder, the convenient alibi was there to save the accused. But when the Jones case was tried the alibi failed and two men were sentenced to be hanged.

The Mollies began to get suspicious, and plots to blow up the court, the jury, the lawyers, and witnesses were laid. The passwords and secret signs were changed. Every man suspected the other, and the climax was reached when the newspapers began to print accurate lists of the names of the members of the order.

Finally suspicion centred upon McKenna, and his associate Mollies tried to kill him. One man offered him a poisoned drink, and others set traps for him in the mines. He escaped every attempt at murder, however, and shortly afterward left the coal region for Philadelphia. He had accomplished a great work, and had been one of the main factors in the destruction of the organization, for with the conviction of Jones's murderers on information given by McParlan, the Mollies quickly collapsed.

E. Benjamin Andrews, formerly President of Brown University, and now Chancellor of the University of Nebraska, was among those to give credit to McParlan for the collapse of the Mollies, saying in his history of "The Last Quarter Century of the United States": "No bolder, no more dangerous, no more telling work, was ever wrought by a detective than that undertaken by McParlan."

When he had helped to finish the Mollies, McParlan worked at Philadelphia until about ten years ago, when he got the post of manager at Denver. It was practically a retirement, and was so considered by McParlan, who was then 52 years old. But when the Coeur d'Alene troubles began his old detective instinct overmastered him, and he broke into the fray upon the invitation of the Governor of Idaho. The main events marking the history of the Western Federation of Miners, extending over the States of Idaho, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, Utah, and New Mexico since 1893, are well known. They culminated in the second and successful attempt to kill ex-Gov. Frank Steunenberg of Idaho.

In the West McParlan followed the same tactics he adopted during the Mollie Maguire troubles. He was a miner, and mixed with miners. He got into their secret councils, and after Gov. Steunenberg was killed by Harry Orchard at his front door he obtained a confession from the dynamiter, which told how the "inner circle" of the Federation sought to get control of all the mining industries of the Rocky Mountains by fair means or foul. When McParlan had obtained the confession from Orchard Gov. Gooding of Idaho said:

"I attribute Orchard's confession to the great brain of James McParlan, who has been employed by the State to run down the murderers of ex-Gov. Steunenberg."

How He Got a Confession.

McParlan worked upon Orchard's sentiment. One day Orchard told the detective, his fellow miner, that his mother had often read Scripture to him. McParlan took that as his base and gradually, by reading the Bible to Orchard in the quiet of the night, worked upon the murderer's feelings until he confessed.

"The memories of his early days came up and smote his conscience," said Gov. Gooding. "He told me that he believed in a Supreme Being and a hereafter and that now his one thought was to make his peace with his Maker."

When McParlan had succeeded in breaking the backbone of the Federation he went back to Denver. He's there now. He says that some day he may be called to some great labor trouble again, but he doubts it. He thinks he has done his share.

McParlan is now 62 years old. He was born in Ireland and was a liquor dealer in Chicago for several years. The Chicago fire destroyed his place of business and he joined the Pinkertons. He thinks he has never done anything great as a detective. Some day, he says, he'll write all about it and then whoever cares to read the book may judge for himself.

More Murder Plot Arrests Expected.

BOISE, Idaho, March 3.—Steve Adams, member of the Western Federation of Miners, who was arrested on a ranch near Haines, Oregon, charged with complicity in the assassination of ex-Gov. Steunenberg and who on Wednesday of this week made a confession, which is said fully to confirm previous statements made by Harry Orchard, will be taken to Colorado, where important arrests in the near future are probable. Adams, it is stated, will not resist extradition.

FIERY TEST FOR PLAINTIFF.

Expert Burns and Pricks Lipsitz in Court to Show Injuries.

Expert medical testimony of an unusual character in a court of law was the chief feature of a suit for damages against the New Haven Railroad, tried before Judge Thomas in the United States District Court in Brooklyn on Friday. Henry Lipsitz, who lived in New Boston, Mass., at the time the alleged injuries upon which the action was based were received, was the plaintiff and subject of the medical demonstration.

In the complaint it is set forth that in a head-on collision near Waterbury, Conn., on March 31, 1903, Lipsitz was thrown through a door and against the iron work of the car platform with such force as to break his ribs, injure his hip, and damage his spine to such an extent that he has never recovered. His permanent disability, according to Dr. William Hirsch of 52 East Sixty-fourth Street, who was called as an expert witness, consists in his disability to feel anything over large areas of the body. This condition of anaesthesia, Dr. Hirsch said, was due to a hemorrhage of the spinal cord. Lipsitz asked $50,000 damages.

Lawyer Abraham Oberstein told the jury that he proposed to show that his client was insensible to pain. Accordingly Lipsitz was stripped to the waist and Dr. Hirsch produced the actual or galvano-cautery. The platinum point was allowed to become red hot and was then applied to different parts of Lipsitz's body. The subject of the demonstration did not flinch. He was pricked with needles, but showed no evidence of pain.

The plaintiff's lawyer declared that he had blindfolded his client and pushed him against a red-hot stove, but that he did not feel anything and remained leaning against it until pushed away. The lawyer indicated a large red scar, which, he said, was the result of the burn made by the stove. Lipsitz's injuries never prevented him from walking freely.

Dr. Hirsch said that inasmuch as the sense of feeling was one of man's greatest safeguards the injury was grave on that account.

Dr. Hirsch said last night that the railroad company had settled for a large amount after his testimony had been offered. The railroad company was represented by a member of the firm of Strong & Cadwalader.

They Will Arrive To-day on the Steamer Minneapolis.

On the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis, due here to-day, is a single cage containing a lion and a lamb. The animals are the property of the Barnum & Bailey Circus, and according to "Tody" Hamilton, the press agent of the Greatest Show on Earth, it is the first instance on record of the king of the jungle and the gentlest of all animals living together in peace and harmony. The lion is a full-grown African beast.

When the lion and the lamb were offered for shipment the London agents of the Atlantic Transport Line refused to accept them on account of the law which prohibits the importation of sheep into the United States except by special permission of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. However, on representations being made to the Washington authorities, instructions were cabled to the Consul General in London that the animals could be shipped. It was discovered, however, that the permit required the animals to be separated, and that the lamb be sent to the quarantine station at Athenia, N. J., for fifteen days.

As it was thought that if the animals were parted for fifteen days and then brought together again the lamb would be inside the lion in a second after they met, another request was made to Washington for permission to land the cage with its two occupants and permit their transportation to the Winter quarters of the show at Bridgeport, Conn.

The request was granted with the proviso that the lamb be examined on its arrival in Bridgeport by a Government Inspector, and that the cage containing the animals be kept separated from the other animals in Bridgeport for fifteen days.

A duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem is to be paid on the lion, while $1.50 is the tariff on the lamb.

DEPORTED FROM ENGLAND.

American Citizen Sent Back Under New Immigration Law.

The first American citizen to be deported from England under the new immigration law that recently went into effect arrived here on the steamship Consuelo last Friday. He is David J. Allen of Brooklyn. He was sent back to the United States because he was without funds and came under the head of "liable to become a public charge."

When Allen arrived in England he had only $1. The law, in all its main provisions, is identical with the United States immigration law. Being an American citizen, there was nothing to prevent Allen landing on his arrival in New York.

Manhattan Justice for Brooklyn.

For the first time in the history of the Brooklyn courts, a Manhattan Magistrate will preside in one of the courts in that borough to-morrow. Because of the illness of Magistrate Voorhees, President O'Reilly of the Brooklyn Board of Magistrates was forced to call upon President Wahle of the Manhattan board for assistance. Magistrate Wahle replied that he would assign a Magistrate to sit in Brooklyn to-morrow.

HARLEM PARK GAMBLE STIRS UP MERCHANTS

Business Men Protest Against Undesirable Park Site.

WOULD HURT TRADE, THEY SAY

Real Estate Speculation Apparently Behind the Project—Big Petition to Ahearn.

The project now before the Board of Aldermen to condemn the property at 125th Street and First Avenue for a public park has aroused strong protests from Harlem merchants and property owners. On Tuesday morning former Controller Edward M. Grout will present to the board a petition, protesting against the proposed park, and signed by 500 citizens.

The petitioners protest against the selection of the property on the ground that valuable business property for use in connection with the water front of the Harlem River would be wasted; also that it is on the main business crosstown thoroughfare of Harlem, and should be preserved for the uses of business and commerce.

Addressed to Borough President John F. Ahearn, the petition says that the locality does not require another park, being already provided with Jefferson Park on the south and Mount Morris Park on the west, while the Harlem River skirts the premises on the east. On the north of the proposed location the river bends sharply to the west, and there are no dwellings north or east of the property. The property is situated at the entrance to the Harlem Ship Canal, below all bridges, the petition says.

Among the prominent signers of the petition are: H. C. F. Koch & Co., Sperry & Hutchinson, Oscar D. Thees, Edward D. Farrell, the Sperry & Popham Coal Company, Dimock & Fink, James S. Purdy, Henry D. Cochrane, George Merle, Demarest & Demarest, the Buckley Newhall Company, and the various savings and commercial banks.

Arthur Shaw, one of the signers of the petition, when interviewed on the subject by a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday, said: "There is not one good reason that can be advanced why this property should be condemned for a park. The locality is already exceptionally well supplied with parks; there is a recreation pier and Jefferson Park two blocks to the south, and Jefferson Park includes the water front on the Harlem River. On the premises proposed to be taken for this park, at the foot of 125th Street, is the Hermann Lumber Company, which has a large lumber yard with $100,000 worth of lumber in it and a four-story mill with an office building and kiln. This company does a very large business, and is now working its plant until 10 o'clock at night. It employs 100 hands. Water fronts with a large tract of land adjoining are very scarce and very necessary for a large business; the Hermann Company occupy twenty city blocks besides the water front. They are about to build a dock on the water front to connect the city dock at the foot of 125th Street with the new dock which is being built by the Lehigh Valley Railroad at the foot of 124th Street. On this dock the railroad company is about to build a large freight station. A large tract adjoining this freight station has been leased for shipping purposes in connection with the railroad dock by one of the largest shippers in Harlem.

"This proposed park project is not a new one, it has already been brought up and voted on in the Board of Estimate. Former Dock Commissioner Hawkes reported against it and the Park Commissioners have reported against it. The present landscape architect of the Park Department, Mr. Parsons, has also made two adverse reports. The Harlem Board of Commerce also voted against it when it was first proposed, and sent a protest to the Board of Estimate; the Board of Estimate voted against it and their engineer, Mr. Lewis, voted against it.

"It is intimated that a real estate speculation is at the bottom of the present movement for the park, and Harlem business men do not purpose to see the land sacrificed. There are no dwellings north or east of this property, and it is by no means a congested section of the city."

2,500 AT BANK'S BIRTHDAY.

Big Celebration in Mechanics' Trust Company's Home in Bayonne.

The twentieth anniversary of the beginning of business by the Mechanics' Trust Company of Bayonne was celebrated yesterday with a big birthday party in the company's marble-front bank building in Eighth Street. The Directors invited the entire city to take part, and fully 2,500 persons accepted the invitation. Of these several hundred were women, and many men prominent in finance were among the guests. The bank was decorated with the National colors, roses, pinks, smilax, orchids, and palms. Refreshments were served.

The guests were welcomed by the Directors, who are Charles S. Noe, De Witt Van Buskirk, George Carragan, James H. Alexander, Charles E. Annett, William G. Besler, Alfred W. Booth, Dr. Lucius F. Donohoe, Warren Delano, Jr., Charles Eddy, ex-Mayor William C. Farr, Oscar L. Gubelman, John W. Hardenbergh, John A. Middleton, Edward T. Perine, George W. Young, and Christian B. Zabriskie.

BURGLARS GET GOLF TOGS.

$400 Worth of Clothing Stolen from New Brunswick Club.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., March 3.—Burglary was committed some time early this morning at the house of the New Brunswick Golf Club, the old Rose mansion, on the River Road. When at 8 o'clock this morning the steward, Charles Ballou, who, with his family, occupies the third floor, went to the basement, he discovered that all of the lockers had been rifled. Golf sticks and balls littered the floor.

About $400 worth of clothing had been stolen. The burglars had entered the basement by smashing a window. There were traces of blood on the floor near the lockers. The women's lockers on the second floor escaped the robbers. Many of the members held to the superstition that they always had better luck in trying stages of the game when attired in some old togs. The police and county detectives are at work on the case.

New Haven Won't Quit Grand Central.

NEW HAVEN, March 3.—In regard to a report printed to-day that the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company would withdraw from the Grand Central Station in New York, and would use the Pennsylvania Station, President Mellen said to-day: "There is nothing whatever in the report. Our continued use of the Grand Central Station is assured, and there is no thought of going elsewhere."

OUR ERRONEOUS IDEALS.

Congressman Burton Attributes Many Evils to Them.

PHILADELPHIA, March 3.—Congressman Theodore E. Burton of Ohio, Chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, was the principal speaker tonight at the annual banquet of the Philadelphia Bank, Group 1, of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association. Responding to the toast "Some Unfavorable Aspects of Recent Progress," he said:

"The recent appalling disclosures of dishonesty, corruption, and unfaithfulness in official and commercial life have been explained in divers ways. The fundamental cause lies in our erroneous ideals, which are largely the result of environment, and an incident to unparalleled opportunities. No adequate remedy will be found until the ideals and aspirations of the people are changed, and it is realized that life has prizes infinitely more valuable than great fortunes or splendid success.

"The question is whether honesty can be maintained. I want to tell you that despite all the comment against public officials they are no worse than the average of the people who elect them to office. The officials are just as the people want them to be and no worse.

"One of the greatest things the people of the country have failed to solve is the question of municipal government. Why have we failed! Well, first, we have given over to the bosses and the rings the management of the affairs of the cities, and all because of the indifference of the people."

ARREST GIRL AND CONDUCTOR

She's Only 14 Years Old, and He Is Charged with Abduction.

Detectives of the Adams Street Station, Brooklyn, held up Brighton Beach trains at the Brooklyn City Hall station last night until they found Conductor John Hollien, 18 years old, of 242 Lynch Street, Brooklyn, whom they arrested on a charge of abduction, and Isabel Arnold, 14 years old, of 433 West Forty-sixth Street, Manhattan. The girl was charged with vagrancy. Both were taken to Coney Island and locked up for the night.

Isabel's sister Margaret, 17 years old, had been arrested at the Culver Station, Coney Island, a few hours before and locked up on a vagrancy charge. She told the police where to find her sister.

According to the police, the older girl, who had been living away from home for two years, returned two weeks ago, and last Wednesday induced her sister to run away. Detective Marks had been looking for the girls since Isabel disappeared.

OLD MAN A SUICIDE.

Ill-Health Thought to Have Made Benjamin Moise Shoot Himself.

Benjamin Moise, 83 years old, committed suicide at his home, Huguenot Avenue, Staten Island, yesterday afternoon by shooting himself in the temple with a revolver. He was alone, and his body was not discovered until last night, when one of his sons returned home and found him dead in bed. Mr. Moise had been ill for some time, and this is believed to have caused him to end his life.

He was a member of one of the oldest families on Staten Island. He was born there, and at one time owned the Moise farm in the Huguenot section of the island. He leaves four sons and two daughters.

MIDDIES DEMORALIZED BY THE HAZING TRIALS

Over a Quarter of Whole Number Deficient at Examinations.

DELAY AT NAVY DEPARTMENT

Interference with Academy Routine Ascribed to Efforts of Politicians on Behalf of Proteges.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, March 3.—The Naval Academy authorities are awaiting daily the report of the action of the Navy Department on the list of about sixty midshipmen who were hopelessly deficient at the recent semi-annual examinations, and who are to be notified that their resignations will be accepted.

The original number of deficiencies is said to have been 226, a little over a quarter of the whole number of midshipmen, but on account of the largeness of the number only those who fell far below the minimum generally in more than one subject received practical dismissal, while others were allowed to drop back a class.

Besides this large number in the three lower classes, it will be remembered that eleven Midshipmen of the graduating class failed in their final examinations, a proportion unprecedented in the history of the academy.

There is little doubt that the extraordinarily large number of Midshipmen who have been below the line in their studies is due to the general unsettlement of the academy from the courts-martial which have been in session here engaged in the trial of Midshipmen on charges of hazing.

Previous to the examinations it was generally thought that this would be the case, but a greater percentage were deficient than anticipated. It is stated that in some branches the marks of all the midshipmen were scaled up twice in order to obtain a respectable number of passing marks.

The action of the Academic Board on those whose low marks made it absolutely impossible to retain them in the academy has been before the Navy Department about two weeks. Although about half a dozen cases have been decided, nothing has been heard here concerning the bulk of the list, although its approval and return were expected within a couple of days. It is well known here that the delay is occasioned by the efforts of Congressmen and others to have the recommendations of the Naval Academy authorities disapproved in certain cases. Thus the routine of the Academy is being delayed, as it has been in many other instances, by the efforts of politicians to obtain partial treatment in behalf of their particular protégés.

Officials here say it is not to be expected that discipline can be preserved and the work of the institution carried on with the best results if others are allowed to interfere with the proper action of the Academy authorities. It is felt that this action is of a kind with the restoration to the service of Chaffee, Lofland, and Little, who had been dismissed for hazing.

HIS 4TH SENTENCE OF DEATH.

Murderer Marmo Must Die March 22—Hard Fight to Save Him.

Giuseppe Marmo, the convicted murderer of his brother-in-law, Nunzio Marinano, was for the fourth time sentenced to be hanged, in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, in Newark, yesterday. Chief Justice Gummere, who sentenced Marimo, fixed March 22 as the date of the hanging.

Marimo shot and killed his victim Aug. 28, 1904, and the time elapsed since his conviction more than a year ago has been marked by a continual battle on the part of his counsel to save him from the gallows.

STILL CAN'T FIND MISS VIAL.

Ziegler Says He Gave $2,000 to Woman Broker to Invest.

Irving E. Ziegler, a lawyer of 27 William Street, has been directing for the last four months, but so far without success, the movements of a number of process servers who are on the lookout for a Miss L. A. Vial. She is wanted to explain what she did with $2,000 said to have been given to her for investment by John J. Barr, a member of a manufacturing firm at 25 West Thirty-fifth Street.

Miss Vial, according to Ziegler and his client, is a well-dressed woman of about 32 years. She is pleasing to talk with, and the lawyer says that on account of this she has prospered as a broker. Barr says he met Miss Vial last Summer, and heard that she was supposed to be connected with an inside party in the Standard Oil Company, and that she "knew a lot of things."

About four months ago Barr brought suit through Ziegler to find out what Miss Vial did with $2,000 he says he intrusted to her. Her address was given as 770 St. Nicholas Avenue. A Miss Vial has apartments at that address, but the hall boy says she has not been in them for some time. The process servers have waited patiently ever since.

Recently, Ziegler says, he learned that Miss Vial spent most of her time at the Hotel Martinique, Thirty-third Street and Broadway. He declared that she was there under another name. The clerk at the Martinique didn't recall her yesterday. The process servers kept an eye open there, too. On Friday there was a rumor that Miss Vial was booked on the Campania. Whether she sailed yesterday morning is a matter of doubt. Lawyer Ziegler declares she did not. Were not his process servers stationed outside the pier, outside the Martinique, and outside 770 St. Nicholas Avenue?

Anyhow, Miss Vial has not been found yet.

PRISONER NOBODY WANTS.

New Order by Bingham Confuses the Hunter's Point Police.

The police of the Hunter's Point Precinct have a prisoner on their hands whom they cannot get rid of. The precinct was recently extended by Commissioner Bingham to take in all of the Newtown Creek bridge. The bridge extends to Manhattan Avenue and Ash Street, Greenpoint, and yesterday Patrolman Campbell on duty at the Greenpoint end of the bridge was called upon to arrest a young man who was flourishing a revolver.

The prisoner described himself as Robert Marcantino, 18 years old, of 479 Graham Avenue, Brooklyn. In the Long Island City Court Magistrate Connorton refused to consider the case as the arrest was made in Kings County. The policeman cannot go to Brooklyn with the prisoner without a special order from Commissioner Bingham, and in the meantime the prisoner is being deprived of his rights under the law, which states plainly he must be arraigned before the nearest Magistrate.

PATTERSON, JR., BELIEVES HE HAS TOO MUCH MONEY

And So Have the Vanderbilts and Such People.

FANATICISM, SAYS FATHER

But Chicago Tribune's Editor Opines His Son Is of Age—Both at the Holland House.

There is a split in the Chicago house of Patterson. The tale thereof was told at the Holland House yesterday.

Robert W. Patterson, editor of The Chicago Tribune, is conservative to the marrow. His son, Joseph Medill Patterson, until three days ago Chicago's Commissioner of Public Works, is an advanced Socialist. Even Jack London's speeches have no terrors for him.

The son reached the Holland House Friday, bringing his views with him. He came east to attend the four-day socialistic conference called to meet at the Connecticut home of J. G. Phelps Stokes, and he came loaded.

The father arrived in New York yesterday morning on his way to Chicago. He was accompanied by his daughter, and the profound conviction that Socialism and fanaticism walk hand in hand. Neither father nor son had the slightest hesitancy in discussing their beliefs.

Joseph Medill Patterson is 27 years old, and was graduated from Yale in 1901. He is a grandson of the late Joseph Medill, who made The Chicago Tribune what it is to-day. His father married Miss Medill, and has since looked after the Medill interests.

After leaving college young Mr. Patterson entered The Tribune office as a reporter. For six months he accepted the assignments given him by the city editor and saw the blue pencil run through his copy just as all other beginners do. Then he went into the Sunday staff, writing special articles for the magazine section. After six months of this he was made an editorial writer.

He wasn't dependent on what he made. He had money of his own, and if he hadn't any his father had enough for both. He married Miss Alice Higginbotham, a Chicago girl of wealth and social prominence. Related, as he is, to the richest families in Chicago and a cousin of Harold McCormick, who married John D. Rockefeller's daughter, he was something of a Chicago society man himself.

Even while he was in college the Socialistic bee buzzed in his bonnet. He began newspaper work an ardent advocate of municipal ownership and something more, and when he realized that his individual opinions cut little figure in the matter of The Tribune's policy he didn't think so well of the newspaper business.

When Mayor Dunne was running for office on the Municipal Ownership ticket the junior Mr. Patterson felt that it was time for him to assert himself and he resigned from the Tribune's staff. After the election of Mr. Dunne, he was made Commissioner of Public Works. This place he held a year. Three days ago, while in Washington, he resigned, stating that his experience in public office had taught him that municipal ownership would by no means solve the social problems which confront the United States.

Says He's a Socialist.

"I believe," he wrote, "that the ownership from which money springs should be invested in the whole community. In other words, as I understand it, I am a Socialist."

The footloose ex-officeholder slept until 11 o'clock yesterday morning. The first thing he asked the clerk, when he came downstairs, was whether his father and sister had arrived. He got an affirmative answer and spent the morning with them. In the afternoon, after the elder Mr. Patterson's departure for the West, the son explained his views.

"It isn't fair," he said earnestly, "that because my grandfather worked hard and left money I should have everything and so many people should have nothing. Here I am, living at the Holland House, going to the opera and the theatre and with the facilities for doing generally what I please. I have a groom who touches his hat to me and says 'Sir' when he brings my polo pony around. That groom knows more about horses and more about polo than I do, and yet he cannot drive or ride or play because he was born poor. That isn't as it should be.

"All sources of production should be vested in the people. Rockefeller has no earthly right to control the God-given oil springs. Alfred Vanderbilt and others like him are not entitled to the share they receive of other people's earnings."

"Do you believe that all the wealth in the world should be equally divided?" he was asked.

"No. I believe that there should be no monopoly of the natural sources of wealth or of wealth-producing agencies, and I don't think wealth should be inherited. I think I was a Socialist before I left college. After my conversion, if you may call it such, I read Jack London and other Socialistic writers. I have looked, too, into the single tax idea. It did not impress me greatly."

"Why did you resign from Mayor Dunne's Cabinet?"

"There is a campaign coming on, and the Socialist ticket is the one I want to support. Municipal ownership is only socialism skin deep. I'm Socialist all the way through."

"Will you be a candidate on the Socialist ticket?"

"I don't know. I haven't made up my mind yet as to my future. I may go back into the newspaper game. After the conference with Mr. Stokes I'm going back to Chicago."

Mr. Patterson was talking and eating luncheon at the same time. His sister joined him at this juncture and listened tolerantly to what he said.

"Do you regard the slight progress made in Chicago in achieving municipal ownership as any argument against the policy?" he was asked.

"Most assuredly not. There is no chance to make faster strides. The entire system of laws is framed to protect so-called vested rights. The whole scheme of the law is to exalt property as against the community—to protect the privileged few as against the many.

"Municipal ownership is a move in the right direction. This has been proved. Take the Chicago water works. I know something about them. The tangible property belonging to the water system is easily worth $30,000,000. It cost $40,000,000. There are but $3,500,000 in bonds outstanding. These bonds represent the entire actual cost of the system to Chicago.

"If the water monopoly of Chicago was owned by a corporation it would be bonded for at least $150,000,000, and interest would have to be paid by the people on these bonds, on the common stock and on the preferred. As it is they are all stockholders, drawing their dividends in the form of a low water rate. A corporation would capitalize its franchise for as much as possible. The residents of Rogers Park, right alongside Chicago people, are paying 20 cents for what their neighbors get for 10."

"Do you believe that Socialism can be attained?"

"Certainly I do. I count on intelligent selfishness to bring about the desired results. If the majority of the people had riches they would be fools to support Socialism. The majority of the people, though, are poor. If they don't win better, more equable conditions for themselves, it is their own fault."

Robert W. Patterson disagrees with his son.

"My son is of age," the editor declared, "and has a right to an opinion of his own. He has served one term in the Legislature and part of a term as Commissioner of Public Works. I am a firm believer in letting everybody think as he pleases, including my son.

"Personally I believe that Socialism is the wildest kind of fanaticism, and that municipal ownership, as practiced in Chicago, is a flat failure. Why, they can't even run the city pound without graft. Joe got a taste of practical politics as Commissioner. He didn't like it and got out. Politicians asked him to do things for which he could have been indicted, and naturally he didn't do them."

"If your son runs for office on the Socialistic ticket will The Tribune support him?"

"It most certainly will not, if I am still on the paper. It didn't support the municipal ownership ticket when he was occupying a place on it."

A story was sent out from Chicago last night to the effect that the ex-Commissioner would be the candidate for Mayor on the Socialist ticket. There was another story, also of Chicago origin, that he proposed to found a magazine in New York for the spreading of the doctrines of Socialism.

"I am really undecided as to my future," he said, when asked to say which of the stories, if either, was correct. "I do not know that I will re-enter politics. I do know, however, that I shall not make my home in New York. For the present I shall probably rest. I have been working very hard for quite a long time and I think I have a rest coming to me."

BUYING POOR PICTURES.

Lack of Discretion Charged Against Metropolitan Museum Management.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Among the later purchases of paintings for the Metropolitan Museum there are three which to the average fairly intelligent well-wisher for the reputation of that institution, do not seem to be worthy of being placed among its collections. The most noticeable of the number is a nativity by Domenico Theotocopuli, commonly known as Il Greco. This work, if by the artist to whom it is attributed, is unworthy of his representation, and, if assigned to an artist of less standing in the history of art, would not bring $50 in any auction room in either of the large cities of the world. It is in all essential respects, from an art viewpoint, as complete a failure as possible. As to composition, it is a jumble of carelessly thrown together, badly drawn human figures seemingly without purpose, or artistic unity of colors. The whole is as far off from expressing the solemn dignity of the occasion as possible; and in no sense does it rise to the common level of serious work by second or even third rate painters of the Il Greco period. The wonder is that so great a man should have executed and left to posterity a work so completely unworthy of the subject and his own reputation.

The fact that the Museum authorities have had such a defective and worthless picture inflicted upon them is bad enough, but, as to relative importance, nothing when compared with the misappropriation of the $35,000 from the income of the well-intentioned Rogers fund, which was the price paid for it. The Directors who have charge of the greater European collections do not now purchase names unless accompanied by works of self-evident merit and acknowledged art value. And such ought to be the policy with us. And, further, there is no excuse for the purchase of poor paintings, no matter by whom executed, as there are always good ones to be found.

Within the last three months one of the most important works by Van Dyck ever brought to this country, another of almost equal importance by Gainsborough, and a third—a very fine portrait by Rembrandt—have been sold at very reasonable prices from the establishment of one New York dealer, the two former to a collector in a Western city and the third to a local purchaser. With the funds at the command of the Museum authorities all three could have been obtained and their collection enriched by the addition of works of established reputation and potent value as to art excellence. Another New York dealer has in the same time disposed of a still larger number of well-authenticated, important works by old masters of the first rank.

The second item in this unfortunate list is a small "art-writer masterpiece" by Watts, intended to represent Ariadne. Such a large amount, "up in the thousands," as stated by one who knows, was paid for this crude painting of a worn-out subject that those implicated in its purchase are discreetly silent concerning the exact number of thousands of dollars parted with to secure it.

All the artists save Watts, including our own Vanderlyn, who have painted this subject, have treated it as a woman of rare beauty. But the work we have obtained represents an ungainly, heavy, fat woman with yellow skin, a face devoid of expression, in which is set a pair of porcelain blue eyes with an unmeaning, far-away look. The upper part of the figure is nude and the lower part clothed in a solid fabric which may have been made from any known mineral. The anatomy of this singular composition is not apparent. The upper, the nude part, is so clothed with adipose matter that neither bones nor muscles are indicated, and the lower parts from about the hips down are so completely incased within the solid folds of their mineral drapery as to make anatomical expression out of the question. There is, however, a short distance from the right of the figure, a detached block of drapery which the artist, no doubt, intended to cover the right knee, but it is so far detached from the body of the composition that the effect attempted records only a clumsy failure. The color scheme, which is entirely wanting as to the needed variety of essential qualities, is in unqualified keeping with all the other characteristics of this unattractive production, of which it may be said that in its execution the acute artificial is the dominant note which governs the whole composition.

The number three of this new list is a small painting by Etty, named "The Three Graces." It represents three very solid and largely substantial female figures draped from a little below the hips, nude above, putty white for flesh tints, heads and faces indifferent as to beauty lines, and the whole unattractive. But since it cost only $1,500, about three times its market value, its acquisition is not worthy of our serious lamentations. The artist who executed it stood in the second or third grade among the English artists of his time, and his reputation is no greater now than then, and the why of its purchase for our important collection of rapidly growing reputation in the right direction is not apparent to the average intelligent observer.

The authorities in control of the most notable European galleries have adopted the rule of purchasing only works worthy of being exhibited with the best, and that rule ought to govern with us. But it never will so long as our museums are under the control of town meeting committees, composed of members ignorant of their duties, who, although respectable as to capacity when applied to their respective vocations, may not, and as a rule do not, possess such a rudimentary knowledge of art as would enable them to act correctly upon the least possible art proposition which might be presented for their decision.

In the management of Museum art affairs, especially in relation to painting, we want the man—the one man only—who knows, not a dozen who do not know. He should be endowed with a strong natural instinct in favor of the artistic as to construction, composition, form, color, an intelligent expression of purpose, and an accurate knowledge derived from long and intimate association with the greater works of the masters of all periods. Add to these qualities perfect honesty of purpose, and we have the model man out of which successful picture gallery directors are made. Of course he must have power to act independent of the indiscretion of the average know-nothing committee.

In view of this later unfortunate experience, would it be out of the way, or could it be regarded as impertinent, to suggest to the authorities in control of the Metropolitan Museum, that they suspend the power to purchase of their present purchasing agent?

COURAGE AND CANDIDATE LACKING, SAYS ODELL

Enemies Not in a Position to Name State Chairman.

MORTGAGE TAX FIGHT TALK

Sharp Struggle Likely Also Over the Local Option Bill — Insurance Bill Hearing.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 3.—State Chairman Odell was one of the figures that loomed large at the dinner of the Legislative Correspondents' Association on Thursday night. His speech was a succession of epigrams that cut deep. One of the best, however, was delivered by the ex-Governor after the dinner was over and a few choice spirits had gathered in the grill-room of the hotel.

"When will there be a change in the State Chairmanship?" he was asked.

"I don't know," was the reply.

"Well, will there be any change?"

"There are just two things the opposition lacks," said Mr. Odell, "courage and a candidate."

At the same dinner District Attorney Jerome made his first public utterance of how he stood in relation to the insurance investigation. He said he did not purpose to be moved by public clamor.

"It's easy to do your duty when you have the applause of the multitude," he said, "but to my mind the real test of manhood comes when a public officer does what he conceives to be his duty whether or not he is applauded for it."

Senator Grady also brought some of his oratory to bear on the situation.

"The Insurance Committee has made a weighty report," he said, "and I can assure the District Attorney that it will receive weighty consideration. I mean to study it all this year so that I will be in a position to act on it next year."

Then the Senator took another rap at the Republican majority.

"Some of the bills will be passed, no doubt," he said, "even if not all of them recommended get into statute form. However, I feel quite confident that those left over will be what the people want most."

Since Thursday, when the delegates from all parts of the State visited Albany to influence legislation in the interest of the repeal of the mortgage tax law, this matter has been one of the leading topics of discussion in the Capitol.

Prior to Thursday the opinion prevailed very generally that notwithstanding the fact that the sentiment throughout the State demanded the repeal of the mortgage tax and a substitution therefor of a recording tax, the Republican majority would not go contrary to the generally accepted views of Gov. Higgins that the tax law should not be tinkered at this session.

There has been a shifting of opinion on this subject within the past few days, and it is believed that the chances are about even. Senators are to be chosen as well as Assemblymen at the next election, and it is quite sure that unless there is a repeal of the tax it will be made a leading issue in the campaign.

In his address before the Joint Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment on Thursday ex-Justice William N. Cohen called attention to the hodge-podge tax laws of the State and said that if there was one thing that was urgently needed it was the appointment of a commission to revise all the tax laws. It may be that if the Legislature backs up the Governor in his desire to make a good showing of State finances and refuses to repeal the obnoxious law, it will, in order to allay public resentment, provide for the appointment of such a commission. This would materially lessen the force of the issue in the campaign, and put the whole question of tax revision up to the special commission.

The Tully-Wainwright bill providing for local option is likely to develop a sharp struggle between the forces opposed to and favoring the measure, which is conceded to be one of the most important pieces of legislation which have come up at this session.

The introducers of the bill in the Assembly and Senate are endeavoring to make the bill a party measure, despite the fact that Senator Raines has voiced his opposition to it, and that under those circumstances their path will not be altogether a rosy one. Among the Republicans there is considerable opposition to the bill as being too radical; business interests in New York, Albany, Rochester, and Buffalo are against the attempt to put the Republican Party behind it, and the attempt to give the bill a party character is likely to bring about a revolt.

Many German societies have put themselves on record as opposed to the measure, while church societies generally favor its passage.

The illness of two Senators now much in the public eye has held up consideration on two important measures. Senator Elsberg is ill with intercostal neuralgia, and so his rapid transit measure was allowed to go back to committee when it was found that he could not be present to move its advancement. It is likely that some action will be taken on it during the week.

Senator Malby's illness has temporarily stopped consideration of the bill to investigate the Banking Department, which was the subject of an acrimonious debate when Senator Marks moved to take his bill, providing for a general lifting of the lid, from consideration of the committee.

With Senators Armstrong and Stevens arrayed in favor of an immediate consideration of the banking investigation, the situation has changed, and a lively session is expected Tuesday, when the matter comes up again.

Next Friday will be a great day in the history of the capital. On that day there will be the only hearing on the insurance bills which have been introduced as the result of the investigation of the insurance companies in New York. An enormous crowd is expected, and Friday was set apart so that no other business would interfere, and that the hearing might be prolonged far beyond the time usually extended to such matters.

The Armstrong Committee will hear the argument, in which one of the principal speakers for the bills will be Charles E. Hughes. It was decided to have this committee listen to the arguments instead of the Insurance Committees, as its members are men most familiar with the subject to be discussed. The exodus from Albany on the part of legislators will be smaller than usual on Friday.

An amusing incident illustrative of the procedure in introducing bills which their proponents have not even read occurred several days ago when Senator Brackett handed up a batch of measures. These went through the usual buzzing procedure between the clerk and the Lieutenant Governor until the last bill was reached. Mr. Bruce did not hear the title clearly, and was in doubt as to what committee to refer it to.

"What is the nature of that bill, Senator?" he asked.

Senator Brackett looked uneasy, laughed, and then said:

"Well, the truth is I haven't read it, but I can tell you where it came from."

In the general laugh that followed the bill was properly committed.

COUNCILMEN IN FIST FIGHT.

Passaic Aldermen Exchange Blows and Graft Charges.

Special to The New York Times.

PASSAIC, N. J., March 3.—Graft charges were followed by a fist fight between Councilmen at the meeting of the City Council last night. The trouble grew out of the awarding of the city lighting contract to the Public Service Corporation last year.

At last night's meeting Alderman Osborne, who is Chairman of the Street Committee, called upon Councilman Hammond to do some work in committee to abate the "nuisance" caused by electric signs of tradesmen overhanging the sidewalks.

"You don't do anything," Osborne told Hammond. "Those electric light signs ought to be taken down. You're too friendly with the Public Service Corporation."

"You're a — liar!" shouted Hammond.

"You're another!" Osborne yelled back.

"You know," Hammond returned, "that you came up to me and said that this year's lighting contract was worth a lot, and there ought to be thousands of dollars in it for the Lighting Committee, and that you had a heavy mortgage on your property."

"That's a — lie!" roared Osborne, "but I know you wanted me to come down to the Hygeia Hotel to get $1,000, and I refused to go."

Without further talk Hammond suddenly dealt Osborne a blow between the eyes that sent him reeling across the chamber. Osborne gathered himself together and, rushing back, struck Hammond on the nose. The other members of the committee rushed between them and with some difficulty separated the combatants.

He was partly drawn under the moving engine, and sustained a severe scalp wound and internal injuries. He was taken to Lincoln Hospital, where it was said he would die. Bird is married and has a four-year-old son.

SEEK GREENE-GAYNOR BOOKS.

Defense Says Government Has Them —Testimony on Forgery Charge.

SAVANNAH, Ga., March 3.—Upon the convening of the Federal Court to-day in the trial of Greene and Gaynor, District Attorney Erwin called upon the defense to produce the books of the Atlantic Contracting Company, under which name Greene and Gaynor entered into contracts with the Government. P. W. Meldrim of counsel for the defense said that all their books had been turned over to the Government.

Joseph J. Gleason, a local bank teller, as an expert on handwriting identified that of Michael A. Connolly, who had been secretary to Carter. He testified that the supposed signatures of Anson M. Bangs, Henry Smith, and James C. Bogart, appearing on contracts, were in the handwriting of Connolly. This testimony was given in substantiation of the Government's charge that forgery had been practiced in the perpetration of the alleged frauds upon the Government.

He also said the signature of Edward H. Gaynor was in the handwriting of Connolly on a statement of accounts. The Court said that it behooved the defense, if it could do so, to disprove the fact that Connolly wrote the name of Gaynor.

E. J. Keating, who was a Government Inspector at one of the brush camps maintained by Greene and Gaynor, estimated that in all a mattress cost the contractors $370.73, and the Government paid $3,491.25.

DRYDEN'S CHANCES REDUCED.

Senator Not Likely to be Re-Elected—Stokes a Popular Choice.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, March 3.—The chances of United States Senator Dryden succeeding himself are growing slim. The Colby forces are at war with him, and the Standard Oil influence is against the Senator and with Colby.

According to custom, the State Senator in whose county the United States Senatorial candidate lives must present his name to the Legislature. Colby is from Essex County, where Dryden lives. Unless Colby should make a complete turnabout before the next session of the Legislature the name he will present will not be Dryden's.

Dryden has a residence in Bernardsville, and could get Senator Frelinghuysen to present his name, were it not for the fact that Frelinghuysen is tied up to Gov. Stokes, and Stokes wants to be United States Senator more than he ever wanted to be Governor. He has said, however, that he would not be a candidate against Dryden, but if it is shown that Dryden cannot land the plum, Stokes will get out in the open.

There will come before this session the bill to allow voters at a general election to express preference for United States Senator. The popular vote is likely to be for Stokes.

CAPT. MIKKELSEN FAILS MEETING OF EXPLORERS

Plans to Wrest a Continent from Czar Suddenly Halted.

FUNDS READILY OFFERED

Dane Called Away, He Said, to Buy a Ship in 'Frisco—Admirers Left in Doubt.

There were rumors a few days ago of an international crisis between the United States and Russia. Capt. Ejnar Mikkelsen, an arctic explorer, it was announced, was about to sail under American auspices to discover the "great unknown continent" to the north of Siberia and to plant on its icy fields the Stars and Stripes. The Czar, it was declared, had paused in the task of pacifying an empire to declare that these unknown shores were part of his dominions, and to remonstrate through the proper diplomatic channels with the American Government.

A few weeks ago a dinner was given at the Explorers' Club to Dr. Otto Nordenskjold, and to this Capt. Mikkelsen was invited as one of the guests of honor. It seems that he had received a good deal of advertising in the English papers, and, as the club heard he was in New York, the members thought he should be asked to be present. This served as his introduction to New York and a number of men who were prepared to take him up.

He was not without recommendations. The Royal Geographical Society in England had thought well of him, and he had been a member of Ziegler's expedition to the north pole. He had a scheme for a dash to the north with only two compions, and in many ways gave a very plausible account of himself and his plans.

Among those who were much interested in him was Dr. G. d'Erp Browne, representative in this country of the British Natural History Society of London. He spent time and money in rendering all the assistance in his power. He formed a reception committee to prepare a proper welcome for Mikkelsen, a woman's committee to attend to the details no man understands, a Scandinavian committee to make him feel at home, and a financial committee to raise all the funds that New York could supply for the great expedition that might at length bring to America the honor of solving the mystery of the arctic regions.

The Committee of Reception consisted of Dr. P. Grath of the University of Christiania, Dr. J. C. Bryan, C. V. Hartman, curator of the Carnegie Museum, Pittsburg; Dr. G. d'Erp Browne, Bernard Naumberg, Stanesbury Hagar, R. Steadman Patrick, Vladimer Vretman, Phillip P. Riddell, J. W. Krueger, Charles A. Ogren, Axel V. Beken, with Gen. James Grant Wilson as Chairman.

For a time all went well. Capt. Mikkelsen answered all inquiries as to his expedition with a resolution that delighted his supporters.

"When do you expect to come back, Captain?" he was asked.

"I may never get back at all," he replied.

"Will you eat your dogs if you run short of food?"

"If they do not eat me," he answered with a smile.

He consulted with Dr. Franz Boas of Columbia as to the ethnographical discoveries he would make, and was ready to take as the companion of his dash to the pole the Icelander he recommended.

For a time all seemed going excellently. The committees met frequently, and were cheered by the news that not only the Royal Geographical Society of England was willing to help, but that the American Geographical Society had paid over $3,000 and that Harper's was negotiating about contracts for the story of Mikkelsen's adventures. Efforts were redoubled in his behalf, and one man, who already has been the angel of arctic expeditions, expressed his willingness to finance this as well if its leader would direct his course according to his desires.

But by degrees doubt began to arise among Mikkelsen's supporters. For one thing the Danish Consul did not seem to regard him with enthusiasm. Then it was explained that though he had been known as a retired Captain of the Danish Navy, he was only a Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve. He failed to keep appointments with the man who was willing to put up the funds for his expedition. It was hard to get him to attend meetings of the committee, and telephone calls to his hotel in Brooklyn met with no response.

One day he was traveling in the Subway and he became very nervous.

"Ah! I shall become an idiot!" he exclaimed, and his friends began to have doubts of his capacity to be the leader of an expedition. Still there was no doubt he knew something about the arctic regions.

A reception was announced for him to be held last night at the house of Dr. J. C. Bryan, 110 West Eighty-first Street. Invitations were sent to the Mayor, the Consuls, and other prominent men, and Gen. James Grant Wilson was to occupy the chair. But when invitations had been printed and acceptances and regrets had begun to stream in from all quarters Capt. Mikkelsen found that he must leave the city.

He said it was imperative for him to go to San Francisco to look after the purchase of the ship in which he was to brave the ice. He could get the very boat he wanted for $1,000 or $1,400 from the customs authorities, but the societies that had done him the honor of bestowing their patronage had decided that he must purchase it himself. Therefore he must be in San Francisco at all costs last night. So he went at the beginning of last week. The committee held a consolation meeing last night at Dr. Browne's house, 200 West Eightieth Street.

There were hints at jealousy between learned societies as to the share each would have in the fruits of the expedition. As they recalled the time expended and the money put out in printing and organization, they took consolation from the thought that, whether Capt. Mikkelsen was a naval Captain or not, whether he had ever seen or would ever see the fields of pack ice and crashing icebergs, at any rate he was a sailor man.

SCULPTURAL IMPRESSIONS.

Exhibition of Sketches and Finished Work by Paul Nocquet.

The large studio of Mr. Gutzon Borglum, in the back at 166 East Thirty-eighth Street, near Third Avenue, has been lent by that sculptor to a young Frenchman who has been working on this side of the Atlantic for some years. M. Paul Nocquet has had a good deal of experience in Paris and Brussels, has shown frequently at the Salon, and, at the St. Louis World's Fair, won a silver medal for a figure in patined plaster called "Wounded Man."

The original sketch for this figure is also here. The bearded warrior has been wounded in the left ankle. Seated on the ground, he has thrust his left shoulder under his left leg and bowed his head, so as to bring his lips to the wound; the result is a very curious if somewhat uncomfortable attitude suggesting warfare among primitive tribes. Similar figures, unconventional and even violent in action, are "Suicide," a statuette of a man in the moment of falling forward, having plunged a dagger in his own shoulder near the throat; "Endless Grief," a man groveling with face against the ground and fingers fluttering above his head; "Yawning Girl," nude statuette with excessive tension of torso, arms, and legs, head thrown back and open mouth, and "Deadly Struggle," two nude wrestlers, one of whom has seized the other by the head, lifting him off his feet, and is about to throw him over his shoulder on the ground. The grim or excited nature of the subjects chosen by this young sculptor may be imagined from these descriptions and from such titles as "Despair," "Defiance," "Centaur Struggling," "Desolation," "The Cursed," "Frightened Woman," and "Hate."

Gentler in motif but still harsh in modeling and gloomy as to effect are "Woman with Sickle," a bronze statuette a reaper, whose face and action might symbolize the great reaper Death; "Near the Abyss," nude male statuette, exceptional in the fine long lines of the composition which give the figure grace; "The Two Weepers," male and female nudes, framing a hollow in the rock where water drips—a sketch for a fountain in a cemetery; "The Man and His Chimera," patined plaster statuette with a monster, part baboon, part boa constrictor, encircling the man's waist and rising over his shoulder, where the baboon tears at his head.

These gruesome and often interesting sketches and bronzes will be visible to-day and to-morrow at 166 East Thirty-eighth Street. They offer a most unusual array of extravagant, painful, or vividly realistic attitudes in figures which are left intentionally sketchy as to modeling. They would have set Canova's teeth on edge, but perhaps Rodin would grant them the indulgence that comes from the subtle flattery of imitation.

Another master besides Rodin who has more or less unconsciously inspired M. Nocquet is the late Meunier of Brussels. The bronze group "Effort," with its original sketch in terra cotta, belongs to themes of life among miners and navvies such as Meunier used to exhibit in the various international shows on the other side during the past three decades. A huge boulder—or is it the stump of a mighty shattered tree?—lies on rollers; a dozen nude men are straining and pushing it onward with crowbar and bare hands. Remarkable is the expression of agonizing exertion. Such effort cannot be long sustained. These are not men who know that they must reserve their strength because they will have to labor through the day; rather are they primeval giants who can exhaust themselves in one supreme, quick exertion and loaf the rest of the day.

But M. Nocquet has a lighter side, as witness "Vanity," a statuette of a Caliban with big inturned feet, which caricatures a noted Belgian sculptor, and "Presidential Vacation," which has earned him an autograph from President Roosevelt; "Dancing Girl," a clever example of balancing a nude figure on one toe, and "Dutch Knight," a terra-cotta bust of a deep-jowled Falstaffian person with little eyes and conceited, sensual features. "Master Florian," terra-cotta bust of a boy, has the touch of caricature, and perhaps also the head "English Girl" in patined plaster, though it has a certain comeliness along with its lack of innocence and candor. A very decided talent for portraiture is one of the clearest evidences here.

Especially strong in character is the small bust of Monsieur C. Laurent, with the face of a bon vivant, but also intellectually strong, a thoroughly French bourgeois type. Other notable portraits are the bronze statuette of Master Dicky Lowengard, the terra cotta portrait of Gaston de Gerlache, the patined plaster bust of Mlle. Beatrice X.

There are also a few essays in decorative objects, inkstands and candlesticks, modeled in the Art Nouveau style, and some decorative vases—"Man with Horn" and "Strength" with low reliefs, as well as the plaque shown lately at the exhibition of the Architectural League. Altogether, these threescore objects are stimulative, and reveal an uncommonly clever craftsman who has not yet taken his settled course in art.

900 PIECES OF FUR IN ONE COAT COLLAR

MACKINTOSHES OF THE WILDS

"You marvel at the patience of women who make delicate embroideries and exquisite bits of needlework which they display in bazaars," said Dick Craine, the Alaskan naturalist at the Sportsman's Show yesterday, speaking of the Northern Indians. "Did you ever examine any of the Indian women's handiwork? I've got some here," taking down a wonderful coat of fur, "that I'll bet no white woman could make in a thousand years. And this isn't an unusual specimen by any means. In the collar of that coat are nearly 900 separate pieces of fur, not one of them much bigger than your finger nail. They are all sewed in on the hide of the seal with threads made of the sinews of deer. It required infinite patience and wonderful dexterity to make that fabric, and no one but a stolid Indian woman could do it."

The coat was a plain sealskin one, like a great pea jacket, with a collar bearing an elaborate design constructed in furs of different colorings, all natural and shading marvelously the one into the other. The delicate points of the design were many of them so fine as to seem no larger than a pea.

"What an Indian can do with the simple resources of nature is amazing. Take, for instance, the mackintoshes of the forest. They make a waterproof coat in Alaska from the intestines of the walrus and seal. The intestines are taken from the body and washed thoroughly and slit and dried in the sun. They form long narrow strips from two to three inches wide, and from fifteen to twenty feet long. These are sewed together to form a hooded coat that is drawn tight about the face and waist and at the wrists, and no water can penetrate it. It is sewn with deer sinews. These are worn in the canoes—kyaks, they call them—and keep the wearer as dry as an oilskin. They don't weigh eight ounces.

"They make these coats out of bear intestines as well. The bear, however, does not produce a waterproof. In fact, no land animal will, but they afford a tough coat that will never wear out or tear and will protect the furs that are worn underneath from the snows. This is done because there is no way to dry out a fur once wet in that cold climate.

"Here is a curious contrivance," handing out a ball the size of a football and as light as though made of fluff. "That is stuffed with reindeer hair and covered with sealskin, sewed together with deer sinews. The different colored skin is produced by bleaching in the sun. It is called a hoochie, and the Indians have great fun with it. It is tossed from one to another of fifty or more of the braves, and must not be allowed to touch the ground. Any one that drops it retires from the game, and the survivor wins some trophy—a pipe or some other coveted object. They have loads of such games.

"Look at this basket," taking a small basket looking like wicker ware and standing erect on it. "It is made of roots and cannot be broken. It is woven by hand in regular design with the different colored roots. It holds water without leaking a drop and is used for boiling meat or fish in it. Of course, it could not be put over a fire, even if they had the fuel for big fires, but the water in it is boiled by means of heating stones in a fire to an intense heat and dropping them into it.

"Here is an apparatus for kindling a fire. This flat stick with holes burrowed in it is placed on the ground. This pointed stick is placed on it, and on the other end this handle is placed," suiting the action to the word. Then taking what looked like a bow and wrapping the string once around the upright stick, "By revolving this pointed stick in the hole in the bottom piece of wood, a dust is created and the heat ignites it. As soon as it begins to smoke their blow on it and shoot a flame into some leaves and a fire is started. The Indian women carry these in their blankets to keep them dry as tinder.

"Take this bead belt. Those beads are all placed in one vessel and strung on a thread of sinew until a string possibly 200 feet long is produced. They are seemingly put on indiscriminately, without regard to their color, yet when that thong is sewed together it makes that design. The miscount of one bead would throw the whole design out beyond correction. Yet they never make a mistake. The belt is heavy and a beautiful piece of workmanship.

"I might show you articles like these for hours, showing the resourcefulness, the ingenuity, of these people, with the limited resources at their command to supply their needs. Here is a horned spoon, made from a sheep's horn. The handle is the natural form of the horn; the bowl is heated and bent into this shape while red hot. It is used to drink oil out of, for these people have to consume great quantities of seal oil to fit them to resist the cold. So they make their knives and other utensils out of the ivory of walrus tusks. And their ornaments. Here is an anklet, the tusk of a mammoth, a relic of prehistoric days.

"I tell you, that country is simply inexhaustible in natural marvels for the man who cares to investigate them."

THE LAWBREAKERS OF 1776.

Ellery B. Crane Says History as Taught in Schools is Untrue.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., March 3.—"Col. Timothy Bigelow of Worcester was a lawbreaker. So were the other patriots of 1776 and thereabouts," said Ellery B. Crane, Librarian of the Society of Antiquity to-day. "But I pay all due honor to them. I simply say that history is written incorrectly; as taught in the schools it is not true. We may as well look these facts in the face and be honest about it."

Mr. Crane pointed out that the English Government gave liberties to religious sects which angered those who fled from England to establish their own religion in America. Some settlers formed secret societies and plotted against the Government, as lawbreakers do to-day, and to-day are condemned for doing, whereas in the perspective of history such men as Col. Timothy Bigelow were made in name the honored heads of patriotic societies. Many good things could be said of the Tories of 1774-8. The worst that could be said of them was that they were loyal to a cause they thought to be right, and stuck to that cause consistently. It required men of iron wills to withstand the arguments, threats, and punishments supplied by the Whigs.

MANY GIFTS TO PRINCETON.

$1,000,000 Already Pledged for New Preceptorial System.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, March 3.—The annual report of the Treasurer of Princeton University was made public to-day, and announcement was made that $1,000,000 has been raised by the committee of fifty toward the fund that will be the permanent endowment of the new preceptorial system. It takes the interest on $2,500,000 to pay the salaries of the tutors, and it is expected that the remainder will be in hand before next March.

In the general running expenses of the university a deficit of $25,123 is shown. When, however, account is taken of the special receipts and gifts, a surplus of $61,758 is shown on the Treasurer's books. On the whole the university has had a very successful year, the total receipts being $476,930. In addition to this the alumni from 1891 to 1901 have contributed $130,000 for the dormitory now under construction, while an anonymous donor has given $350,000 for the construction of a recitation hall.

ANOTHER TRUNK MYSTERY.

What Was Unearthed by the Latent Detective Ability.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 3.—Walter Van Guysling is one of Albany's Coroners. He is an employe of the New York Central Railroad. A palmist has said that the lines of his hand, especially of his thumb, show that he was born to be a great detective.

Among the baggage that came into Albany yesterday was a trunk that brought with it something which, when it came to Guysling's attention, caused him to believe that he scented a mystery. He called the attention of others to it. "Awful," they whispered, and looked at one another with round eyes.

The word went around, so that soon one of the railroad officials, a member of the Board of Health, a policeman, and Chief of Detectives Humphreys had arrived.

Walter Van Guysling stood near the trunk mystery. Everybody tested the evidence again and whispered once more: "Awful."

Then they pried open the trunk. Everybody sighed and said: "Smoked halibut."

Van Guysling sighed, too.

LECTURES FOR CANCER HOME.

Dr. Walsh to Talk on "The Women of the Greek Poets."

Six lectures are to be given by Dr. James J. Walsh at Carnegie Hall for the two cancer homes of The Servants of Relief on Thursday mornings in Lent. His subject will be "The Women of the Greek Poets."

In the two cancer homes there are no pay beds. The charity is Dominican, twenty members of the order having consecrated their lives to the work. The sisters are as poor as their patients, whom they care for until death stops their sufferings. They have never turned away a destitute cancer patient of either sex.

CITY TO SAVE $779,797 ON ITS LIGHTING BILLS

This Year's Bids Materially Below Last Contract.

COMPARISON IS WITH 1903

Chief Engineer Lacombe Says the Lower Figures Are the Result of Three Years' Agitation.

Under the lighting bids submitted to the city Feb. 1 the city will save $779,797.48 this year on its bills for lighting the streets, parks, and public buildings, notwithstanding an increase in the number of lamps. This is compared with the prices paid in 1903, which was the last year the city had a contract with the companies. A dead-lock then arose.

Comparative figures were laid before Commissioner Ellison, of the Department of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity yesterday by C. F. Lacombe, Chief Engineer of Light and Power in the department. Mr. Lacombe has been at work since Feb. 1 tabulating and analyzing the figures then submitted by the gas and electric companies for all the boroughs. His report yesterday showed the following results:

Manhattan and the Bronx	$427,000.00	$350,000.00
Brooklyn	173,000.00	160,000.00

Total public building lighting	634,000.00	534,000.00
Total	$3,734,034.12	$2,954,236.64

Difference in cost of lighting same number of street lights as in 1906, and same consumption in public buildings as in 1905, over 1903, at the prices bid for each year, $779,797.48.

Chief Engineer Lacombe, in submitting this report, made the following comment to Commissioner Ellison:

"This statement shows the cost of the street lights existing Jan. 1, 1906, under the prices recently obtained, and also shows you the cost of these lights under the prices which ruled during the year 1903, when the movement for lower prices was begun.

"A few of these amounts had to be estimated, on account of the fact that no bids were received on Feb. 1, on that particular kind of lighting. The cost of public building lighting is estimated, but it is estimated carefully, providing for the inevitable increase in public building lighting from year to year.

"While this is, of course, an approximate statement, showing a comparison between periods relatively far apart, at the same time it is of value in pointing out the benefit to the City of New York of the agitation of this matter during the past three years."

The new contracts will be made as soon as Mayor McClellan and Corporation Counsel Delany pass on the figures tabulated by Mr. Lacombe for Commissioner Ellison.

Dr. Dowling Called to Brooklyn.

A call to become the rector of St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, has been extended to the Rev. Dr. George T. Dowling of Manhattan. Dr. Dowling has promised to give his answer on Easter Sunday, and will act as rector of the church in the meantime.

TO TEST SENATE'S POWER.

Cincinnati Bankers Object to Drake Investigation.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 3.—President Rowe of the First National Bank, whose cashier disregarded a subpoena of the Drake Investigating Committee and is to be called before that committee to answer for the action, said to-day that the power of the Senate would be tested in the courts.

Mr. Rowe did not say just what form the test would take, but it probably will follow the serving of the warrant issued by the committee against T. J. Davis, cashier of the First National Bank, citing Davis to appear and say why he should not be punished for contempt in disregarding the subpoena to appear as a witness before the committee.

The bank's attorneys say they will endeavor to learn from the court whether the Senate committee is a legally constituted board of inquiry that can force the banks to disclose business transactions, and that the case will be carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The inquiry into the County Treasurer's office was continued by the committee to-day. Ex-Treasurer French testified that he was unable to give the amount that he had in the various banks, but said that if the courts and his attorneys advised him that he had received any money to which he was not entitled he would pay it over to the county.

FIVE STATES REPORT ON SHORT ICE HARVEST

VERY LITTLE OLD ICE LEFT

Cost of Storing the New Lot Excessive and Much Lost Through Scarcity of Labor.

Special to The New York Times.

FISHKILL LANDING, N. Y., March 3.—The ice crop of 1906 is a big failure at the present writing. In 1890 the crop was an absolute failure, while 1891 ice sold at $10 a ton, wholesale. In 1895 it was largely a failure, while 1900 only gave a moderate crop. In 1903 the crop was only about half what it should have been, and this year it is even less than that. A postal card canvass has been made of the crop of five States, and the consensus of opinion is that less than half the crop had been housed on Feb. 28.

On the Hudson River, from Albany south to Rondout, responses include nineteen replies, covering twenty-two plants, with capacity of 603,500 tons. The tonnage in the houses, of which 94,000 tons were carried over from last year, is reported to be 310,000. The new ice harvested runs from nine to thirteen inches in thickness, the majority of it being ten inches. The greater part of it is noted as "good" in quality.

North of Albany a good deal of ice has been harvested, but it is not an important factor in the New York market because of the excessive rates to transfer it to the metropolis. Out of 135 houses 35 are entirely empty and about half a dozen are half full. About 3,000,000 tons of old ice and 1,000,000 of new ice are in houses beyond Albany.

In central New York about 40 per cent. has been harvested. From western New York, covering the Buffalo market and smaller towns south of Buffalo, it is understood the harvest is scant and does not equal half the capacity of the houses. It is likely that considerable ice will be brought from Canada to supply the deficiency. Chautauqua Lake, usually reliable, has not yielded over 40 per cent., and that is only "fair" in quality. In southern New York and Long Island the plants are small in capacity and supply from lakes or ponds which, as a rule, yield quickly to low temperature and make ice fast. Inquiry reveals that very few got any ice from the lakes and that the ice stored away was very light, as a rule.

In Northern New Jersey word has been received from plants with a total capacity of 397,900 tons. Only 97,000 were in the houses on Feb. 26, and some of it was carried over from last year. A resumé from a reliable source shows that not over 25 per cent. of the usual harvest is now in the houses. It ranges from 7 to 11 inches.

In twenty-four plants in Pennsylvania, including Scranton, with a capacity of 840,000 tons, on Feb. 25 there were housed 376,000 tons, part being old ice carried over. A dealer says the crop will not reach 50 per cent. of the normal.

From Connecticut twenty-six plants have been heard from, with a capacity of 254,500 tons, and less than half a crop has been housed. Many plants near the Sound have no ice at all.

Thirty-six responses were received from Massachusetts, covering a total capacity of 754,300 tons. They show old ice, 33,150 tons; new, 227,350 tons, a loss of over 500,000 tons. Many dealers are going to New Hampshire for their supplies.

Assuming that the reports quoted from the five States are a fair average, it is clear that there is a great shortage of new ice and that there was very little old ice carried over. The cost of harvesting this year has been excessive, and the scarcity of labor at many points very great, preventing the putting in of much ice where it was available.

Unless March gives a thorough surprise in the way of continued cold weather the outlook is for such a scarcity of natural ice at many points as the trade has rarely seen.

WHY NOT AN ICEBERG?

Capt. Schuemaeker Suggests a Plan to End the Ice Famine.

The impending ice famine is the sole topic of conversation among the men who command the ice barges which every Winter bring the up-State ice crop to New York.

Capt. Perk Soully of the barge Alcibiades, Capt. Rudolph Schuemaeker of the Ophelia and Capt. Clarence Gaynes of the Moses Stiles argued all last evening in a Battery saloon about what New York is to do for ice this Summer.

"Strikes me," said Capt. Soully, the oldest of the three, "that somethin' oughter be done, and that it oughter be done pretty soon. My old woman, she goes about with me most o' the time, an' she's o' the same opinion, and she argues that the city should build a lot of ice factories."

Capt. Gaynes frankly admitted that he did not see that anything could be done to relieve the situation, but it was different so far as Capt. Schuemaeker is concerned. Schuemaker is a little, curly headed chap, who has been in the hard-water business for over thirty years, and there is not an ice patch between New York and the headwaters of the Hudson that he cannot tell you all about.

"Now I reckon you fellers is going to give me the laugh," he said, "but this thing can be settled without any trouble at all. To come right down t' the p'int, what's the matter with bringing an iceberg down to the Highlands, or off Atlantic City, the Brigantine Shoals, for instance, and beachin' it? Why one o' them big chunks of ice would be enough ter keep New York cool for three months, while as fer a couple er big ones, such as the French sailors tell [illegible] about, they would be sufficient to f[illegible]e all New York County up for a whole summer."

"B[illegible] icebergs is salty," objected Capt. Gaynes.

"Stop yer kiddin'," rejoined Schuemaeker. "Icebergs ain't sea water; they're glaciers, and glaciers is hill ice, as everybody knows, and them that don't know ought to."

"What's hill ice?" asked Capt. Soully.

"Hill ice, yer ignorant old lubber," replied Schuemaeker with some heat, "is ice that was once snow that fell upon a hill up in a country where the north pole is supposed ter be. The snow it falls on them hills until it gits to be nearly a mile thick, and then it commences ter slide. It slides right down into the ocean, and sometimes it strikes a derelict or somethin' on that order an' breaks off and floats out to sea. Then it starts down south. That's hill ice, and once it starts floatin' it's an iceberg. So there you are."

"But how are yer going ter git it here? inquired Soully, his red whiskers all abristle in anticipation of some new scheme to make a fortune.

"Push it in," answered Schuemaeker. "Ye've got t' git a dozen er two o' them big tugs and push and push and push. Ye can't tow it becus it melts on the bottom an' turns over every twenty-four hours and if it was to turn with the tow lines in position it would turtle the tug, so you simply got ter push."

"The Gulf Stream," replied Schuemaeker. "What did yer think it was—a volcaner?"

"Schuey," said Soully, "what do ye figger the profit in a decent iceberg at, pervided we can git it down here?"

"About $80,000," responded the commander of the Ophelia.

"How do ye figger it?" asked Gaynes.

"Well, just this way," began the Ophelia's skipper. "You must allow fer meltin' when we hit the warm regions, and reckonin' the loss by that means at erbout ten thousand tons, it would still leave us 90,000 tons ter the good, fer, as ye know, a decent middlin' iceberg weighs at least 100,000 tons. Now, suppose it brings 20 cents a hundred, that would mean $180,000 for the 90,000 tons that would be left. Now, it would cost p'r'aps $50,000 to push it south and about the same amount more to saw it, pack it, and deliver it, which would leave a clear profit of nigh onto $80,000."

"Smoke up," said Soully.

"Yes, smoke up and take a long draw twice," added Gaynes.

"Yer a pair er fools," rejoined Schuemaeker.

Somebody called Schuemaeker away about this time, so arrangements for the ice enterprise are still uncompleted.

REMITTANCE MAN'S SUICIDE.

Son of an ex-Lord Mayor of Liverpool Kills Himself in Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, March 3.—James D. Maudsley, a young Englishman, committed suicide at the Leland Hotel here to-day by shooting himself through the head. It is believed that worry over his approaching trial on a charge of assault preferred by a woman caused him to kill himself.

He was the son of James Maudsley, ex-Lord Mayor of Liverpool, England, who is head of the large Maudsley Publishing Company of that city.

The young man received an annuity of $2,500 from his parents.

Ten Years for Killing His Wife.

OSWEGO, N. Y., March 3.—William Battles, the Scriba farmer, recently convicted of manslaughter in the first degree for killing his wife, was sentenced to-day by Judge Emerson to Auburn Prison for ten years. A petition for clemency was presented. Battles made an address declaring his innocence.

GOODNESS IS THE RULE IN A TOWN IN TEXAS

No Citizen of Linden Ever Accused of a Grave Crime.

COURTHOUSE FOR A CHURCH

Ruffians Visited Town, but No Man Ever Was Shot on Its Streets—A Celebration Planned.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, March 3.—Citizens of the Town of Linden, the county seat of Cass County, are endeavoring to get together for a celebration of its goodness. They have let the semi-centennial of its founding slip by because they did not really awake to their civic virtue until recent years. But they feel now that attention of the country should be called to at least one place where citizenship is worth while and the traditions of the Republic have been upheld.

Linden was founded in 1850 by some of the pioneers who came to the plains of Texas to help build up the big State. It was a border town, and of course it had its share of the incidents that accompanied the settlement of the border. It put officers in charge of the public peace and erected a two-story frame Court House.

But such has been the peaceful life of Linden that the Court House was found before many years to be more for ornament than use. It was finally moved from its original site to a place about 200 yards distant, and since has been used for services of the Baptist Church and as a meeting place for the Masonic lodge, rather than for the holding of court. The only real reason for its maintenance has laid in the occasional meeting of the county authorities there.

Many desperate characters infested the region around Linden after the war, for Cass County had a history in the bad days of the old times. Outlaws often visited the place in squads. It had its saloons, and much whisky was drunk at times. Cullun Baker and his gang and other border ruffians were among those who held carnival in its borders.

Notwithstanding all this, however, no man was ever shot on the streets of Linden. There were occasional shooting affrays, but somehow the bullets never found a human target. Not one of Linden's citizens ever saw a man shot or stabbed.

No citizen of Linden even was charged with a serious crime, and no big trials were ever held within the Court House. In all its existence only one or two persons have met with a serious accident. Few epidemics of disease have been known.

The town voted for local option in 1878 and has remained dry ever since. It is not a question of voting against liquor and letting it be sold on the sly, for the citizens work in harmony and any one who would try to break the law would find himself promptly suppressed. Gambling, if done at all, is done on the sly.

No railroad has yet been built into Linden and its leading citizens would consider such an invasion a calamity, for it would undoubtedly bring some new ideas about virtue to the town. The place has not grown big, like some cities that have been founded since, but it has progressed steadily, and to-day there is not a vacant house in it. The people are generally self-sustaining, prosperous, and happy. Many of its younger men have moved away and some of the highest places in the State have been held by sons of Linden.

MEDAL FOR A TRUCK DRIVER.

A Woman Decorates McGill for Being Kind to His Horses.

Richard McGill of 106 Fourteenth Street, Brooklyn, was the proudest truck driver in Brooklyn last night when Miss Ida Sheehan of 214 Park Place presented to him a gold medal in recognition of the humanity he has shown in the management of his team. The presentation took place at Miss Sheehan's residence, to which McGill had been invited.

Miss Sheehan is a great lover of animals. It is her habit to keep a sharp lookout for drivers who abuse their horses, and those who spare their teams are marked down on her books. Her friends, too, help her keep tab. McGill had the best marks when medal time came around and was bidden to the Sheehan home. When he received the invitation he could not imagine what was wanted of him.

McGill has been in the employ of Powell & Titus, a Brooklyn coal firm, for eighteen years. He takes more pride in his team than in anything else in the world, and, despite the fact that the two horses haul a heavy coal truck, they are always in the best of condition, and their coats are as smooth as satin. When he knocked at the Sheehan door last night and was ushered in, to be informed of the honor awaiting him, he was much abashed. He finally summoned up enough courage to stand still while the medal was pinned to the lapel of his coat.

The medal is of solid gold and depends from a solid gold bar. On the bar is inscribed the single word "Humanity." The medal itself bears the inscription, "Awarded to Richard McGill, March 3, 1906. Judged to be one of the most humane drivers in Brooklyn and New York."

Two years ago Harry, Miss Sheehan's pet spaniel, died. On the anniversary of the dog's death she caused to be published in a Brooklyn paper an original poem in Harry's memory.

MORPHINE IN HIS CAKE.

Headquarters Detective Intercepts "Stuff" for Prisoner Just Arrested.

Detective Sergts. Furnesin and Granville of the Central Office, last night arrested at Fourteenth Street and Third Avenue, Frank Michael, known to the police as "Frank Dunn," who says he lives at 207 East Fourteenth Street, and William Albert, as suspicious persons.

Within an hour after their arrival at headquarters a messenger boy came in with a note addressed to Michael and a large frosted cake. Detective Manion dismissed the boy, and opened the note. It read:

> Dear Friend: If you want anything let me know. You will find the stuff in the cake.
>
> BARNEY.

Manion cut the cake open and found fifteen morphine tablets. Michael didn't get the stuff. The police say that Michael's number in the Rogues' Gallery is 5,603B and Albert's 4,624.

LAD SEES HIS LEG CUT OFF.

While going an errand for his mother, 12-year-old Peter Hoffman of 130 Broadway, Jersey City, was struck by a Pennsylvania Railroad train and his left leg was crushed.

The surgeons decided that the only way to save the boy's life was to amputate the leg at the knee. They sent for the lad's father, who gave his consent, and the operation was performed by Drs. Baumann and McNenny. The lad refused to be put under ether, and did not utter a sound as he watched the doctors at work. He was resting comfortably last night.

ANTI-SALOON SERMONS ALL OVER JERSEY TO-DAY

Effort to Get 500,000 to Sign Petition for New Excise Bill.

LIQUOR MEN'S COUNTER MOVE

They Are Gathering Signatures of Protest—Plan to Invade Trenton To-morrow Night.

In every Catholic and Episcopal pulpit in New Jersey to-day sermons will be preached against the evils of intemperance and emphasizing the necessity for regulation of the liquor traffic. Interest is centred in the bill prepared by the dignitaries of the churches of both denominations and little, if at all, in the Miller Local Option bill.

"Every one knows," Bishop McFaul said in his letter to the priests directing them to bring the subject to the notice of their people in special sermons, "that the Catholic Church does not condemn the use of liquor. Let it be clearly understood, therefore, that this campaign is inaugurated solely against existing abuses."

Bishop O'Connor's call is for services of the same character and framed along the same line. The liquor men hope to be able to secure a modification of the clauses requiring them to expose the interiors of their places and placing the responsibility for a license upon the owner of the property as well as upon the saloon man.

In their joint address, issued yesterday to the clergy of their respective dioceses in the Protestant Episcopal Church, Bishops Lines and Scarborough quote those particular provisions as of the very essence of the desired legislation, saying:

"The business in question is regarded as dangerous by all civilized States; and there is need of constant action, we all know, in the way of restraint and restriction. We would urge you as pastors and guardians of the moral welfare of the community to do all in your power to stimulate a public sentiment in favor of the proposed legislation. The liquor interest is making every effort to defeat the bill, and we are earnestly desirous that our church take a definite and firm stand at once on the right side of this contention between the friends and foes of good morals, law and order."

Blank forms of petitions are to be circulated in the churches and the promoters hope to gather 500,000 names.

Upon the bar of every saloon in the State this week were pen and ink and a blank form of remonstrance against the legislation;and every wayfarer who stopped in was solicited to write his name. The State Liquor Dealers' League has directed every member to be in Trenton at the reassembling of the Legislature to-morrow night to join in a demonstration against the passage of either act.

Most of the liquor men, especially those in the cities, are of the Catholic faith, and they have been unsparing in their criticisms of the priests for their "interference with their business." To this Mgr. Sheppard's answer is:

"Shame on the man who wishes us to regard his contribution as so much hush money! As to the orphanages and hospitals, as a class the saloonkeepers should be paying for about two-thirds of the inmates."

The Local Option bill, though it has been reported out of committee, has not so much aroused the fears of the saloon men as has the great pressure behind the "Bishops" bill. It is giving the Republican majority and State leaders a lot of concern. They equally fear to defeat or pass it. And to ease the situation it is proposed that the bill be amended with a referendum clause giving the voters of the State at large a chance to declare on it.

The liquor men say that there is enough law already to regulate the traffic, and that abuses exist only because it is not enforced.

Removes Nervous Fire Chief.

RUTLAND, Vt., March 3.—Mayor J. F. Manning to-day removed from office Chief George W. Dunton of the Rutland Fire Department, who has held office since 1899. Investigation into the $500,000 fire of Feb. 18 showed to the Mayor's satisfaction that the spread of the fire through six buildings was due to poor judgment in directing the firemen. Mr. Dunton has a nervous trouble.

JERSEY VIGILANTES TO ACT.

Anti-Horse Thief Society Decides Now to Protect Women, Too.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., March 3.—Stirred by the Allinson murder at Moorestown, the Cooper robbery and attempted assault at Newtown, and similar crimes in other adjacent territory, the Consolidated Vigilant Society of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, in annual session here to-day, decided by a unanimous vote to amend its constitution so as to include the prosecution of such criminals in its objects, extending its scope beyond the mere pursuit and apprehension of horse thieves, its original purpose.

"We were organized to protect horses," declared one of the members, "but now we intend to protect women from the criminals that have for so long been a menace to them, especially on the lonely farms in the country districts."

Fourteen of the fifteen subordinate societies were represented at the meeting.

PLEADS FOR IMMIGRANTS.

Nathan Bijur Says There Is Dearth of Mechanics and Servants.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Nathan Bijur of New York was heard at length to-day by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and took the position generally against all the proposed further restrictions to immigration.

He favored the establishment of information bureaus, either in this country or Europe, which would give immigrants information as to where labor conditions were the best.

In answering direct questions as to the crowded conditions of the tenements in New York he said these conditions were very much better than a number of years ago, and that while there always would be poor and suffering humanity in every large city, the present conditions as to labor were such that he could not get mechanics to repair his dwelling and his wife could not get servants. These same conditions he had witnessed in Alaska during last year.

The Chief Offender.

The American Federation of Labor is numerically the largest trust in existence.

The labor union trust and every capital trust was organized to gather extra gain or money from the common people.

It makes no gain for the beef trust if one member charges another member an extra price.

It makes no gain for the labor union trust if a bricklayer member gains an extra price for working for a member of the carpenter's union. All that is but "swapping nickels."

The feed to fatten the trust must come from the common people who are not members and who therefore cannot be counted in on the division of the spoils.

It is plainly the common people who must be legally and genteelly "held up" and made to contribute funds to fatten the trust members. The common man who buys a pair of shoes or suit of clothes must pay something extra to cover whatever the labor trust has been able to "boost" the price of labor above the natural price governed by supply and demand. So the man who buys beef must pay the extra price forced by the beef trust. Therefore it seems plain that all trusts both of capital and labor are contrary to the interests of the common people and are oppressors just in proportion as they have the power to force money from, and tyrannous conditions upon the people.

There would be no limit to the tyranny if the people did not protect themselves.

This condition has demanded the organization of Citizens' Associations in the cities and villages, massing the power of the people for self-protection, and the plan works.

There are now nearly 500 local ass'ns affiliated and working with the Nat'l Citizens' Industrial Ass'n.

It has only lately occurred to the people that when any labor union trust calls a strike, ties up an industry, pickets, boycotts and interferes in various ways with the affairs of citizens, they come under the Nat'l laws governing trusts which prohibits acts in restraint of trade.

It is the right and duty of every employer to demand of the Prosecuting or District Att'y that he proceed against the members of the labor trust whenever they break the law by the illegal acts of boycott, picketing or any sort of interference with business and commerce. We are all free American born with the right to work when and where we please, to employ or not employ whom we please, and to conduct our affairs without interference by any impudent member of any trust on the face of the earth and the man who will not resent such interference and attempted tyranny is a coward and a traitor to his fellow-man.

Let the members of the labor trust be brought to the bar of judgment whenever they break the law "in the restraint of trade" or become violent lawbreakers in other ways.

The laws are for the protection of the common people and it must be made very unsafe for any labor union trust member or any other trust member to break them.

If you are oppressed and tyrannized over, compel the public officers to do their duty.

Let this country be conducted in the interest of the common man and not solely for any combination, either of capital or labor.

The Square Deal Magazine publishes facts about the labor trust in an educational campaign to place these facts before the people clearly, stripped of sentiment and fancy. It is on sale at news-stands at 10c. or sent a year for $1.00. It is boycotted by some news-dealers with labor union proclivities.

If the news-dealer says he don't sell it, suppose you transfer your trade to another who believes in supplying papers and magazines that people call for without regard to the dictates of any labor union trust.

THE RUSSIAN PARLIAMENT.

"Is to be" is a phrase that has led to many disappointments in Russia, and the announcement that a manifesto of the Czar establishing a Parliament "is to be ceded and incorporated in the fundamental laws of the empire" will be accepted necessarily with much reserve. But there is reason to believe that the announcement is correct. It is made by The Associated Press from St. Petersburg, where the press has been particularly well served, and it is reported to be the result of a series of special councils presided over by the Czar.

Moreover it is clear to all dispassionate observers that some sort of a Parliament, some authorized intermediary between the Autocrat and his people, is absolutely essential to the establishment of real peace in the empire, and to the resumption by Russia of its proper position in the world. The old system of reliance on the bureaucracy has completely broken down, and though there has been recently a certain success in the reactionary plans, the Czar himself appears to be convinced that it is temporary, and that the best use he can make of the reprieve accorded to him is to organize the empire on some kind of a representative basis. The reported features of the new plan are unexpectedly liberal. The scheme of representation involves two houses, one-half of the members of each to be appointed and one-half elected by the various classes and organized interests. That is very far short of our idea of suffrage, but it is a beginning, and the lesson of history plainly is that such a movement is bound to go forward when a beginning is actually made.

These features of the plan are of the utmost importance. The sessions are to be public, each house will have the right to question Ministers as to alleged illegal acts, each house will have the right to initiate legislation not affecting the fundamental laws of the empire, such as those relating to the succession. The first and most promising effect of the operation of such a legislative body must be to afford means for adequate publicity as to public affairs and for a certain degree of discussion. That is the beginning of freedom, and is undoubtedly all that the Russian people could at present use.

ETHICS AND ECONOMICS.

The Rev. Charles R. Brown, lecturing in the Lyman Beecher course before the Yale Divinity School, declares sentiments which do his heart credit, and which will find a response in many quarters where, nevertheless, perplexity reigns regarding the practical remedy. Said Mr. Brown: "We do not wish to wear shirts from the bargain counter if made by children who ought to have been studying or playing. We cannot consent to clothe ourselves upon the tears and blood of those who have been robbed and harmed by the effort to produce clothing cheap."

This is not a question of shirts alone. The questions raised go to the bottom of the social organization. Clergymen may dare to raise their voice against the frightful cost to humanity of competition, but no economist dare echo the cry in any legislation. Yet it is futile to demand competition and shrink from the result of competition. The wage earner who would survive must produce more or better than the incompetent. The employer who would survive must sell cheaper than his neighbor. The result is the survival of the unfittest ethically, although economically the most efficient. It is the savagery of competition which has resulted in the colossal trusts, which have wrought their own salvation only by crushing opposition. People demanded cheap products, and they got them, but at the cost of a Frankenstein whose features are only now being recognized.

Mr. Brown's voice is but one of the signs that the people are wearying of competition and may yet come to demand the regulation of competition. Thus in the railway rate debate nothing is clearer than the demand that rebates shall cease. Rebates are signs of competition. Abolition of rebates means so far the cessation of competition. Sentiment recognizes that a fair rate is better than an excessively low rate, which the exigencies of trade competition lead shippers to seek as a means of competing with their opponents. But how much of this economy of production and distribution will be allotted to wage earners? How much will those of Mr. Brown's way of thinking allow to be added to the price of what they buy? And if competition is to be abolished, what other way is there of settling what price shall be paid for anything?

In Congress they are considering fixing the price of railway service by legislation. Is this a step toward the goal fixed by Mr. Brown? Are there enough of us of his way of thinking to embark upon experimentation in State regulation of commerce, thus giving to every producer a larger share of his product, and reducing profits of capital by forbidding "unfair" prices? Granting that ethical weariness with competition has arrived, is the community ready for the economic corollary? We ask a question which we will not undertake to answer, although the affirmative seems to be taken for granted by some newspapers which fail to perceive the distinction between aspiration and achievement, and by some legislators who pass too readily from buncombe to statute-making.

MR. PATTERSON'S SOCIALISM.

After a year of weariness and disappointment as Commissioner of Public Works in Mayor Dunne's administration, Mr. Joseph Medill Patterson of Chicago resigns his office because he has become convinced that municipal ownership is mere paltering with the giant evils that afflict society. It is not even a halfway measure—it "would not be even one-fourth of the way sufficient." Mr. Patterson is now going in for Socialism. He believes in the equal distribution of wealth through the common ownership of "all the means of production and distribution." He will attempt to bring about this change in social organization.

Mr. Patterson graduated at Yale University in 1901. He is 27 years old. It will be seen, therefore, that he is no visionary, no closet thinker, no reformer whose head is stuffed merely with things got out of books. His present views are the fruit of a worldwide experience, a prolonged, an intimate, and a practical knowledge of business, of public affairs, a patient study of the behavior of men and of the play of social forces. Like his coworker in Socialism, Mr. J. G. Phelps Stokes, Mr. Patterson has not become a foe to the existing order because of personal experience of its injustice. There have always been a few spare millions in the family, so it is not the pinch of poverty that has made him a convert. In the case of both these venerable men the inspiration to remodel society and the qualification to undertake the task spring from the same source. While other men have been money-grubbing Mr. Stokes and Mr. Patterson have been observing and thinking. When some men have reached the age of 27 they throw away "the poor squeezed orange of the world." Mr. Stokes and Mr. Patterson are going to reconstruct the orange.

While Mr. Patterson was one year ago a convinced municipal ownership advocate, he has observed that in Great Britain, although municipal trading has been highly and successfully developed, the problem of the unemployed is still one of tremendous and sad intensity. In Germany, too, where the Government owns nine-tenths of the railroads, and where municipal ownership is the rule, he finds that the poor are growing poorer and the rich richer, just as they are in the United States. Municipal ownership, therefore, must be a delusion.

Now this is perplexing. The public would listen with the profoundest respect to the ripe opinions of Mr. Patterson on this subject were it not for the fact that another preacher of this school, and one of equal or greater authority, Mr. Charles Russell, has been picturing forth the beauties and beneficence of the State-owned railroad system in Germany. Mr. Russell's examination of the German Government railroads was published in the January issue of Everybody's Magazine, and the editor of that organ of conservative thought in America describes it as one of Mr. Russell's series of "progressingly powerful studies of economic uplift throughout the world." "The railroad management," continues this editorial note, "is devoted to the convenience, comfort, and safety of the people, and not to private gain." Capital is almost stopped from "playing its game of grab and hold." In the February issue of Everybody's Mr. Russell writes of the Government-owned railroads in Italy, and the exuberant editor says of his "progressingly powerful study" that "the brightest sign of relief is the recent action of the Government in taking over these railroads with the intent to manage them honestly and efficiently." When the doctors disagree like that, what is a blind, groping public to do? We have been taught that municipal ownership would notably increase the sum of human happiness. Mr. Patterson finds the thing to be a blank failure, a bread-pill from which the patient gets no benefit.

Mr. Patterson's picture of the condition of man under the Socialistic régime is alluring. He has hardly read a book on Socialism, he says. He had no need to read books. He has thought the whole thing out with that pellucidity, that convincing logic, and that unconquerable solidity of construction that distinguishes the theories of practical men from the rickety mental bantlings of the dreamers. The reorganization of society must be effected, Mr. Patterson is convinced, through the control of money. He says in his letter to Mayor Dunne:

> Money is power and dominion. It is wine and women and song. It is art and poetry and music. It is idleness or activity. It is warmth in Winter and coolness in Summer. It is clothing and food. It is travel and sport. It is horses and automobiles and silks and diamonds. It is books. It is education. It is self-respect and the respect of all others. No one possesses it, but it possesses everybody. * * *
> In other words, as I understand it, I am a Socialist. I hardly have read a book on Socialism, but that which I have just enunciated I believe in general to be their theory. If it is their theory, I am a Socialist. You will find, and other advanced liberals and radicals who believe as you do also will find, that you are merely paltering with skin-deep measures when you stop short of Socialism.

While we would not presume to criticise Mr. Patterson's plan for an equal distribution of wealth, we may be permitted to remind him that the new condition could be maintained only at the cost of eternal vigilance. In every community there would be a lot of fellows who would be forever trying to get hold of more than their due proportion of the money. It was discovered a good many years ago—even before Mr. Patterson was born—that "the love of money is the root of all evil." The love of money has in history, indeed, been one of the great moving elemental forces in human society. It is doubtful if it can be extinguished altogether by the establishment of the Social Republic. The efforts of the covetous to get hold of money would be supplemented by the struggles of the improvident to get rid of their share. It has always been so. These forces, the one helping the other, would immediately begin to disturb the stability of the condition of homogeneous wealth imagined by Mr. Patterson, and they would make an end of it if they were not sternly repressed. This, indeed, is the trouble with many of the remedies that the new school doctors are so copiously prescribing for present social ills. One and all they conflict with some natural law. These laws are old and stupid and baneful, no doubt, but human experience teaches that they are exceedingly hard to repeal, and the violation of them is accompanied with notable risks.

Sooner or later all municipal ownership men will bring up in Socialism. They are, in fact, there already, although most of them protest against the name. Mr. Patterson runs up the flag like a believer who is not ashamed of his creed.

AN AUTHORITATIVE ASSURANCE.

> Only the philosophic few could have guessed for a moment that Dr. Beard's long and famous researches would ever enable him—as they would indeed appear to have enabled him—to place in the hands of the physician a veritable cure for cancer.—C. W. Saleeby, M. D., in Harper's Weekly.

These are the careful words of an eminent scientist upon the work of Dr. John Beard, Lecturer in Comparative Embryology in the University of Edinburgh. Dr. Saleeby in 1904 expressed the view that there were no cancer bacilli; that the problem was one of malignant cells developing tumors. Dr. Beard has established the remarkable but practical theory that these malignant tumors really represent "a parthenogenetic or asexual stage in human generation"; that is, a wandering human cell possessed of the power of germination finds lodgment, strikes roots into the living tissue, and appears as a devouring offshoot of the parent body.

This is, of course, an all but suppressed stage in the development of the human individual. In most persons it is altogether suppressed. What agent working in the human body has so nearly overcome this latent predisposition? Through his studies of the "critical period" in the development of fish, Dr. Beard has discovered that acid, peptic digestion ceases and the pancreas wakens, producing through an alkaline medium the more powerful digestive, trypsin. This trypsin digests not only the food but the cancerous growths that inhabit all fish at the critical stage. When the pancreatic secretion is absent these growths persist and are nourished with the acid digestion.

The pancreatic alkaline ferment trypsin, then, should be the digester and destroyer of cancer in the human subject, without hurting the surrounding tissues. Now a certain famous cancerous tumor named Jensen's mouse-tumor has been found capable of engrafture upon living mice. Dr. Beard transplanted these growths on mice, treating some of them with trypsin. In ten days, after four injections of the trypsin, a mouse was examined under the microscope:

> Microscopic examination of the tumor showed that every one of its cells was degenerate. Half of them were represented by shapeless masses of particles, while the rest were mere crumbling skeletons of cells. All the body tissues of this mouse were found to be quite normal.

After twenty-two days, of two mice whose tumors were initially the size of a thumb-segment, the mouse not treated was dead—whereas it was the tumor of the "trypsin mouse" that succumbed, and was by that time nearly absorbed. The application of trypsin to human patients as a preventive after operation for cancer has been made by Dr. Shaw-Mackenzie, so far with completely satisfactory results. No slightest indication of a recurrence of the growths has in any case been observed. Of course, this negative demonstration requires time in which to establish its validity. Meanwhile Dr. The [illegible] Saleeby [illegible] victims of "cancer-phobia" that according to present knowledge the growths are not contagious, and probably not hereditary. As regards the cure of cancer he states that the "overwhelming majority of cases of cancer are curable by the knife if taken in time; and the average date of operation is steadily becoming earlier as the public learns wisdom and the profession improves the art of diagnosis." To this he adds the comforting, because authoritative, words which preface this exposition.

JOSEPH'S WHEAT CORNER.

We heartily commend to our readers, especially to those of a casuistical turn of mind, the discussion, continued in the Sunday Magazine of this present issue, of the Biblical story of Joseph and his celebrated corner in breadstuffs. The subject was brought up by a remark of young Mr. Rockefeller to his Bible class, to the effect that Joseph's conduct in relation to his corner in breadstuffs was as impeccable as his conduct at another famous crisis of his career. Possibly nobody, outside the enchanted precincts of the Bible class, paid any particular attention to young Mr. Rockefeller's views on the ethical aspects of the corner in question. Most people assumed that he held an hereditary brief in favor of cornering and corners which would have disabled his judgment, even had it otherwise been respectable. But the weight of Rabbi Silverman's opinion is thrown, in our symposium, into the Josephan scale, while, on the other hand, the weight of Prof. Fagnani's is thrown against the behavior of the representative of Israel at the Court of Pharaoh.

The Scriptural narrative, albeit not entirely clear, and still further mixed up, contrary to their wont, by the King James translators, leaves no doubt whatever that Joseph was a business man. If some man should say that he was a business man to the extent of being a "slick article" we know not the evidence on which we could confute that critic. He had, according to the Scriptural version, a straight tip on the wheat market. Perhaps it would not be fair to call it that. Irrigation was not then, nor, for that matter, is it, in spite of Lord Cromer, even now so far advanced in Egypt as to put the harvests beyond the reach of ordinary and expectable failures in case of adverse weather conditions which were sure sooner or later to occur. Joseph was the only speculator in Egypt wise enough to discount all that. There are not so many equally wise even now, and in the United States. So, while the crops were good, he stored the surplus. He was the only man in Egypt wise enough to do that. It is true that he attributed his own foresight simply to his success in interpreting Pharaoh's dream. But what of that? Is not every successful operator in our time precisely the man who can most accurately interpret the popular dream?

At any rate, the fat years ceased and the lean years came. The crops failed. In that part of the Great American Desert in which irrigation has not yet had its perfect work the custom of the populace, when such a thing happens, is to rise up and howl for a cheap dollar, whether it be of depreciated silver or of "fiat" paper, printed on the back in green ink. In ancient Egypt, where the machinery of credit had by no means been so highly developed as it is to-day, the inhabitants of the back districts where the crops had failed simply roared for something to eat. It was not yet a "currency agitation," it was only a plain plea for food. If Joseph had had no more foresight than these distressed persons they would all have starved to death. But Joseph simply drew on the reserves which he had accumulated in view of precisely such a contingency, and dealt out food to the sufferers. In return he took chattel mortgages and mortgages on real estate. Thereby he managed to keep the stock which would have starved on the hands of the mortgageors. Moreover he managed to strengthen the political position of his boss and benefactor.

This latter fact seems to be the principal ethical grievance of Dr. Fagnani. According to that authority, so far as we can make out, Joseph should have distributed gratis the supplies which he had had the sense to accumulate, and should have left the Egyptian Government to pay the fixed charges and operating expenses of the granaries, at the risk or certainty of bankrupting the Public Treasury, and without taking any security whatever of the suppliants its wisdom had saved from starvation. The little nepotic arrangement of Joseph with reference to his own family, the bit of "honest graft" which he allowed himself, figures largely in the Scriptural narrative. But in fact it cuts more figure than it does ice. As at present advised, we can detect nothing in the general conduct of Joseph incompatible with the "square deal" of a legitimate official and business transaction.

Brethren, "these things are an allegory," and they will bear a good deal of meditating.

A HALL OF SHAME.

A rich old Russian emigré in one of the up-State districts proposes to found an institution to be called the Hall of Shame and to endow it with $100,000, which is all the capital he commands. If he had more he would give it. So deeply is he concerned that the rascal at large shall not be without the formal celebration which is his due. His plan embraces the proposition to have the selected candidates sculptured in marble to the number of five each year and set up in his rogues' gallery to shed forth on society in perpetuity whatever lessons they may have to convey.

The plan is not without its merits, but it lacks scope and a larger capital behind it. Five rascals a year is but a pinched contingent to take in when there are so many and such a competitive press for places. But we need not despise the day of small things, even in the way of a pantheon for rascaldom. It could spread out as it went along, and gradually work up to correspond with the large amount of business to be handled.

The founder's idea is to select for admission those who have been most active in injuring the masses of their fellow-men. The candidate does not have to be dead as a qualification for admission. He can climb into his niche and repose there in marble placidity while his original in the flesh is still flourishing around in his iniquities and making good his claims to that kind of celebration. As to picking out the most deserving among competitors, the founder would have that done by a Board of Directors to be elected by popular vote. This would minimize the danger of favoritism, and go as far as anything could to assure a square deal in the matter of precedence and selection.

Whether the founder's idea that a century's influence of such an institution for focusing public scorn on ill-doers would work a radical cure in the evil of criminal money-getting, and even reclothe morally the whole raft of insurance officialdom, is a question which can only be settled when the experiment is tried. It may be worth the investment and may not. But it is possibly worth the essay, and will at least prove interesting to scoundrels if to nobody else. The idea has a liberal basis, and is inspired by reformatory ardors like those which breathe on the pages of Dante, whose rogues' gallery was the greatest that ever existed, and which glow in the designs of Michael Angelo, who once painted a Cardinal in hell, no doubt to the moral advantage of "the others." There may be important social advantages in setting up the wicked in some enduring form and duly consecrated place for the hand of scorn to point its slow, unmoving finger at, but it is not an expedient to be rashly adopted. Perhaps after all the sooner workers of iniquity are forgotten the better all around, and marble images of them would but continue their evil memories to no useful purpose.

MISSIONARIES AND CASSOWARIES.

The poet who first proclaimed what he would do if he was a cassowary fades as he is sought for in the dark backward and abyss, and seems to get further and further away from recognition the more earnest the effort to corner and identify him. Under examination it becomes clear that what he said was caught up and echoed by other poets all along down the line to our own time. They would all, if they were cassowaries, presumably anywhere, but by force of specific declaration "on the plains of Timbuctoo," eat up the first missionary who came along. They would consume not only his flesh, but his bones also, and after that his hymnbook, leaving not a shred either of the evangelist or any of his paraphernalia.

It is singular that so long a procession of poets should be lighted up from within by the fancy of what they would do if they were the capacious but rather stupid bird referred to. But they don't know what their desires might be under such changed conditions. If "opinion might be held" with Pythagoras, and one of them were thus translated, it is almost certain that he would stalk quietly past the most flagrant and monotonous type of missionary ever witnessed on the plains of Timbuctoo or elsewhere, not even snatching at the ministerial hat or hymnbook. That is, as a bird he would not be bound by any declarations made before becoming one. As a poet he might with some reason object to the missionary because he has such a hard name to fit a rhyme to. That is enough to kindle resentment in the bosom of any bard with the correct feeling of his trade. Moreover, there is nothing poetical in the missionary aspect. The element of imagination may enter into his reports to the home office telling about his converts and their ameliorated conduct, but that is about the only attribute which puts him in any sort of touch with the airy magician whose eye in a fine frenzy rolling doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.

The number of poets who have affirmed this carnivorous and anti-propagandist disposition shows a curious unanimity of sentiment among them, though it is expressed in a great variety of forms. The cassowary comes in every time, and so does the missionary, the balance and echo of the words being an essential poetic detail, but in other respects there is much difference in the versions. It is an unexpected multitude which remembers the stanza. It comes rolling up out of the deep of old memories, where it had long remained hidden and forgotten, and as each person sends his own version of it to the newspapers, the quatrain is getting to the full as much advertising as it deserves. Whether it was Marryat's or Thackeray's or whosesoever to start with, it has taken on so many minute variations of form that it may perhaps now be held to be ascribable to anybody and the quest of its origin called off as hunting a phantom "into profitless regions of fog and bilberries." Give the bird a rest and the missionary as well. They both need it, and with such soothing canticles from the hymnbook as may be thought conducive to the repose of both of them, including the public and the critical emendators, who at the earliest pipe of that awakened desert bird swarmed over the horizon in such unexpected and overwhelming numbers.

JURY TAMPERING.

Great Importance of Following Up the Tillinghast Conviction.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this morning's issue of your paper you print a brief note on the conviction and sentence of Tillinghast for impersonating a juror in street railway damage cases. It seems to me that this is a matter of very great importance, and that the case deserves the watching and interest of the public. I need not enlarge upon the importance of keeping the jury system entirely free from any suspicion of being used for ulterior purposes in the way shown in this case. If Tillinghast is guilty and justly convicted his guilt undoubtedly involves others, and their trial and conviction should promptly follow. He certainly did not act alone or for his own purposes, but must have done so at the request and in the behalf of others. Their trial and conviction are of more importance than those of the tool whom they used.

District Attorney Jerome has been very prompt in other cases to go outside of what many thought to be his proper sphere of prosecution and trial in the courts, in instituting "John Doe" proceedings. I think they could be employed to more effect in this case than in many of the others in which they have been used. Why should not every executive and legal officer of the Metropolitan Street Railway system, from President Vreeland down, be compelled to testify as to his knowledge of any tampering with the jury system, evidenced by the conviction of Tillinghast, and to have any denial of knowledge of such proceedings which they may make made under oath? A Home for Old Horses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some of your readers who have generously contributed to Red Acre Farm, the charitable home for horses at Stow, near Boston, will be interested to know that the farm has recently been incorporated, with Dr. Edward Emerson of Concord as President and Miss Gertrude Bird as Treasurer and manager, and is now prepared to receive bequests as well as gifts.

The farm has been made the custodian of the worn-out fire horses of Boston, which, instead of being sold at auction, as was formerly the case, are now carefully looked after, or, if they are incurably and painfully lame, mercifully killed. Several of these horses, loaned and under inspection, (no horses are ever sold by the farm,) are now doing light work and are in excellent condition, having nearly recovered from their troubles.

Many old, painfully lame horses have been bought during the Winter and humanely killed. The number of such horses, in many cases slowly dying of cold, starvation, and pain, is far greater all over the country than would be supposed by any who had not investigated the subject.

Red Acre Farm is, so far as its friends are informed, the first and only home of the kind in this country. It seems astonishing that a similar institution was not long ago established in the vicinity of New York.

Music Lovers Barred.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter from S. S. Bliss in yesterday's Times will no doubt strike a responsive chord in the minds of a good many people. That speculators can procure the cheaper seats at the box office of the Metropolitan Opera House when outsiders cannot, is plain to all who frequent the place.

The day the seats for the last performance of "Parsifal" were put on sale, some six weeks before the performance, the writer was unable to get a $1 seat at the box office, but found several days later that, by paying a premium, such tickets could be procured from speculators at the front door of the Opera House.

On the day of the performance, Feb. 22, speculators still were selling seats to all parts of the house, and were asking $5 for the $1 seats, from $8 to $10 for the seats in the orchestra and $7.50 for the dress circle. A. B. C.

New York, March 1, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems a pity that people who cannot afford to pay the high prices asked by the Metropolitan Opera House should be barred from that which tends to contribute a good deal toward education and should be treated with so little consideration.

This seems to be another proof that the opera is run more for profit than love of art.

A Critic Criticised.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to ask the "old school woman" whose letter appeared in to-day's issue of The Times if she would feel proud of her husband or her sons if they sanctioned or took part in such treatment of a woman as Mrs. Morris received recently at the White House. I want to say to her that the woman of the new school, whom she criticises so severely and unjustly, is not going to choose a husband from men of that stamp, nor will she give birth to sons who think women are here only to appear at social functions and have "pretty things" said to them by men.

I also want to call the attention of the "Woman of the Old School" to the last clause of your splendid editorial in a recent issue of The Times in reference to this incident, in which you say, after so generously giving the President the benefit of every possible doubt: "If this is to be the end of the incident it will be one long and unpleasantly remembered as somehow or other a mistake of the kind which a public man should never make." I wish you had added "or any other man."

I am sure I voice the wishes of many of my sex in thanking you most heartily for "giving so much space" to Mrs. Morris. By that, as by many other articles which I see in your paper, you are proving conclusively that you are conducting an independent newspaper and have the courage to express your convictions, whether they strike high places or low.

STEEL DUST IN SUBWAY.

Assertion That It Arises from Improper Gauging of Rails.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having read Dr. Philip Hanlon's statement as to "the new peril in the Subway caused by the amount of dust generated by the friction of the shoe on the third rail, and by the brakes on the wheels, amounting to a ton a mile a month," I should state, before commenting on it, that I have had practical experience in engineering and railway matters for over half a century, my father having been chief engineer to the celebrated firm of Bolton & Watts of Soho Works, Birmingham, England, constructors of the first locomotive, (Puffing Billy).

I never experienced such grinding, excruciating, and intolerable noises from the friction of the rails and tires as are suffered in the New York Subway. This nuisance is a great strain on the drums of the ear, to passengers waiting at local stations when expresses pass.

The three doctors who made a report on the subject, not being constructive engineers, have failed to observe what is the chief cause of the steel dust. The only permanent remedy is to move one line of rails half an inch, so as to allow the blocked flange of the tires to run smoothly without friction.

Temporary relief can be obtained by placing a can of common oil on each side in front of the train, having an air-pressure contrivance, so as to sprinkle the oil on the inner edge of the rail, lubricating it, while the dust particles will be absorbed by the oil and fall to the ground, instead of floating in the atmosphere. The men on night duty, as an alternative, could ride on a trolley with an open can of oil, and with a small brush with a long handle oil the inside of the rails. HERBERT W. HART.

"His Glassy Essence."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Answering your correspondent who asks the meaning of "glassy essence" in the phrase in "Measure for Measure," Act II., Scene 2, Mr. Rolfe quotes from Cowden Clarke an explanation as follows:

"That essential nature of man which is like glass from its faculty to reflect the image of others in its own, and from its fragility, its liability to injury or destruction." I. P.

"Municipal Tuberculosis" in 8th Av.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the Mayor has looked over the last of those $3,000,000 sites for the seaside treatment of tuberculosis will he kindly send some representative to prescribe for the Eighth Avenue roadway? This important thoroughfare presents a picture of "municipal tuberculosis" in the third stage, that of excavation and decay. How much money has already been expended in treatment by local political "specialists" is unknown. At present it seems to be getting a good share of the so-called "absent treatment." J. P. D.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see a letter in your paper to-day in regard to the non-delivery of letters. Having lately come to New York, during January five letters sent to me never reached me, two of them having "special" stamps. I complained to the Post Office, and I cannot too highly praise the way in which those letters were traced and delivered to me. It is needless to tell you they had all been incorrectly addressed, and my name not being in the Directory, I could not be found.

From The Los Angeles Times.

Arthur Gookins, a fifteen-year-old boy, whose home is in Antelope Valley, killed a large mountain lion under peculiar circumstances. Gookins lives with his mother and sister on a ranch at Neenach, where he has a fine herd of Angora goats. The family has been troubled of late by coyotes, and in order to catch the wolves Gookins set several traps. On making the round of the traps, accompanied by his sister, the lad saw that one had been disturbed, and following the marks in the sand traced the trap to the bed of a small ravine. Looking over into the gully, young Gookins was amazed to see a splendid fullgrown mountain lion caught by the front foot in the trap, which had become intangled in the bushes. As soon as the wounded lion saw the lad the big cat made a spring for the side of the gully. Gookins is a good shot, and quickly aimed and fired. The ball plowed through the lion's brain and the beast fell dead. Ranchers in the valley had been annoyed by the beast for several weeks. Hogs, goats, and young calves had been killed. The lion measured 8 feet 7 inches from tip to tip.

A QUERY.

If crocodiles could sing
Sweet melodies pathetic,
Would vocal efforts bring
An aspect more poetic
Unto the beasts—or fail to gild
Their violently prosaic build?

If hippopotami
Had wings upon their shoulders
With which to lightly fly
And perch on lofty boulders,
Pray, would their tendency to soar
Bring sonnets on them by the score?

Ah, where does poetry start?
From prose where does it sever?
Are goats and lobsters Art
Of any kind whatever?
Or are they doomed by rhyming foes
To pine—like cabbages—in prose?

W. A. BRADY WHACKS THE CRITICS AGAIN

Makes Two Speeches in His Own Defense and Has More Ready.

AGAINST THE "FUNNY MAN"

Has No Quarrel with Dignified Criticism—The Lambasted Crowd to Hear the Specialty.

True to his promise, William A. Brady, theatrical manager, again pitched into the New York dramatic critics yesterday from the stage of the Liberty Theatre. Mr. Brady appeared in this specialty at both afternoon and evening performances. He said the night before that he was ready to make a speech every night of the production, and after last evening's effort Mr. Brady was still fresh.

When the curtain fell on the second act of the matinée yesterday there were loud calls for "Brady! Brady!" "Give it to 'em again," called a voice.

Presently Mr. Brady stepped from between the heavy leather curtains. The audience cheered and stamped till he raised his hand for silence. When he finally got it he said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I have just heard that a certain great newspaper in this city has ordered twenty seats in different parts of this theatre this evening. They are going to place reporters throughout the house to find out how far the audience is with me in my fight against bad newspaper criticism. [Cheers and applause mostly in feminine tones.] Like Clyde Fitch, I believe in the matinée girl, and I am glad to know she is on my side.

"My fight is against the funny men of the New York newspapers. For the dignified critics I have only gratitude and respect. The proof is that on the morning after the opening night of "The Redskin" I handed clippings of the dignified criticisms from the morning papers to my actors and instructed them to follow the suggestions. With helpful, serious fault-finding that shows us what is wrong so that we may try to fix it, I have no quarrel. But for the kind of criticism that says Mr. Tyrone Powers's rôle is like a cigar store Indian I have no use.

"I have nothing to do with syndicates or anti-syndicates. By my own efforts and in my own way I have tried to produce here in New York players that I believed to be good. If I cannot be treated by the newspapers of this great city in a gentlemanly way as a serious play-manager I will leave New York and go to Chicago. [Cries of "No!" "Stick to it!" from the audience.]

"I was brought up in the theatre," continued Mr. Brady, "I played with all the best actors, Booth, Barrett, Modjeska, Salvini, and the rest, that ever came to California in the old days, when stock companies really taught men and women how to act. I know more about the theatre to-day [with great emphasis] than any dramatic critic in New York."

The audience yelled "Keep it up" until the footlights went down and the orchestra began the Indian music of the entr' acte.

By last evening news of Mr. Brady's special act had become known about town. A large audience was on hand to see the curtain rise. At the close of the second act, when lively times were expected, first-nighters and newspaper writers hurried into the back of the Liberty from other theatres and helped shout for "Brady."

When Mr. Brady appeared it was a full minute before he could make himself heard.

"This acting you have just seen and applauded," he said, "is done by men and women with hearts and souls, thoroughly in earnest about their work. Will you be guided in your judgment of them by critics who can think of nothing better than to compare them to cigar-store Indians? [Cries of "No! Never!"]

"In France and Germany are great publics who love these people behind the footlights who do their best, night after night, to make their audiences laugh and cry. And here in New York we have men who can find nothing to say of an actress save that 'she talks like a megaphone' or 'walks like a dodo.' [Laughter.]

"Let's take this matter seriously. My friends have urged me not to say these things. But suppose I can prove to you that there is a conspiracy on the part of newspapers in this city to cry down my play? Suppose I can prove by affidavits signed by four persons that the representative of one of the greatest newspapers in New York said two weeks before this piece was produced: 'Oh, wait till Brady puts on his new play. We'll put him down and out. We'll fix him.'

"Well," continued Mr. Brady, looking fiercely about the theatre, "gentleman of that newspaper, I am here to be fixed."

"They say I am making these speeches to boom the play. I deny it. I should not suffer if the play went to the storehouse to-night. ["Oh, yes, you would," called a voice from the back of the house.] But if I cannot be treated decently by New York critics, then, by Heaven, I'll go to Boston or Philadelphia, where newspapers send dignified, serious men to criticise plays.

"If I had the right nerve," finished Mr. Brady with a vigorous sweep of his arm, "I'd send that band of real Indians back there"—pointing to the curtain—"down into Newspaper Row to do a little real damage among the funny men."

And he retired amid laughter and cheers from all parts of the theatre.

He said later that he had already received "hundreds of letters from persons in this city and elsewhere," approving his fight and telling him to keep it up.

FUND FOR CRIPPLES NEEDED.

Public Asked to Aid in Hospital Relief for the Helpless.

The annual report for 1905 of the New York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled, whose hospital is at Forty-second Street and Lexington Avenue, has just been issued. The report shows that 963 separate patients were given 69,770 days' care in the hospital, and 44,157 treatments were given in the out-patient department.

This vast amount of work in a hospital of moderate size is made possible by the increase in the use of operative surgery. The hospital cares for children suffering from deformities of the limbs, curvatures, and similar troubles, and maintains a manual training school and kindergarten.

The receipts are quite inadequate to meet the expenses. About $40,000 a year is required. The managers have issued an appeal to the public for subscriptions, which may be sent to the Treasurer, Frederick Sturges, 31 Nassau Street, or direct to the hospital.

BUILT HIS OWN COFFIN.

Just as Good as a Store One, Capt. Wood Says.

Until Capt. H. L. Wood of Port Jefferson, L. I., needs it for a permanent resting place, a coffin he has just completed for his own use will be used in his home as a wardrobe. Wood had heard stories of the costliness of coffins. He is handy with tools, and has some skill at upholstering. He determined to build himself a coffin of the most up-to-date character, upholster it, and have it always ready for use. He kept account of the cost.

"It cost just $6.87," said Capt. Wood, "and it's just as good as any store coffin."

The Captain's Sunday suit is kept in the coffin at present.

WANTED A BIRTHDAY PARADE.

Coler's 9-Year-Old Caller Agrees to Share Honors with St. Patrick.

Borough President Coler was busy in his office in the Brooklyn Borough Hall yesterday when the doorkeeper announced that William Garrison desired an audience with him.

"Show the gentleman in," said Mr. Coler.

To his astonishment a neatly dressed boy walked in and, bowing politely, asked: "Are you the Borough President?"

"I am," replied Mr. Coler.

"Well," said the lad, "my name is Willie Garrison, and I live at 92 Boerum Place. I'll be nine years old next Saturday, and I want you to have a parade on that day."

"A what?" gasped the Borough President.

"Why, a parade," repeated Willie. "Horses and soldiers and music and things like that, you know."

"I'm afraid I can't accommodate you next Saturday, Willie," said Mr. Coler, "but I'll tell you what to do. A week from Saturday there is to be a parade in honor of St. Patrick; couldn't you postpone your celebration and take part in that?"

"Well, I guess that'll do," decided Willie. "I'll march in that parade."

With ceremony the Borough President bowed his small visitor out.

AT THE OPERA.

A Double Bill in the Afternoon and "Lucia" in the Evening.

Notwithstanding the atrocious weather of yesterday afternoon there was an enormous audience at the performance at the Metropolitan Opera House. It was a double bill—"Hänsel and Gretel" and "Pagliacci." There were many children present, and the entertainment is still what it was in the beginning, so far as Mr. Franko's rather rough and ready conducting permits. The gracious and delightful work has taken a remarkable hold upon the New York public. The performance of "Pagliacci" was the second that has been given this season. Mr. Caruso, Mr. Scotti, and Miss Alten took the principal parts in it. Both Mr. Caruso and Mr. Scotti were in superb voice and made some of their best effects, and Miss Alten sang brilliantly.

The weather, or some other influence in the evening, however, resulted disastrously upon the public interest in "Lucia di Lammermoor," (which was substituted for the "Barber of Seville," at first announced.) "Lucia" had already been given once on a Saturday night, and the audience was one of the smallest of the season. Mme. Sembrich, Mr. Dippel, and Mr. Journet were the chief singers.

"THERESE RAQUIN" STAGED.

Miss Kalich Appears in Fiske Translation of Zola's Work.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Miss Bertha Kalich appeared at the Belasco Theatre this afternoon in the first performance of Harrison Grey Fiske's translation of "Therese Raquin."

Mr. Fiske has preserved the force and directness of Zola's pitiless realism, and the result is a play of undoubted power, despite its inherent repulsiveness. It was followed closely by a large audience, but there was absence of anything like genuine enthusiasm in the house. The title rôle affords Mme. Kalich an excellent opportunity for the exhibition of her emotional and temperamental qualities, but not even her cleverness could evoke any warmth of response from her audience.

Henry Kolker had the part of the remorse-hunted Laurent. Jennie Eustace played the implacable Madame Laurent, Leonard Shepherd was the fussy Grivet, Joseph O'Meara the explosive Michaud, and Grayce Scott the ingenuous Suzanne. Mr. Fiske intends to present Mme. Kalich in "Therese Raquin" for special performances during the rest of the season.

NEW PLAY FOR MISS HARNED.

Actress Will Produce It Next Season Under Shubert Management.

A play has been found for Virginia Harned's return to the stage next season under the Shuberts' management. The piece is a four-act comedy drama by Louis Kaufman Anspacher, author of a dramatic version of "Tristan and Isolde." Mr. Anspacher is the husband of Kathryn Kidder, the actress.

The patriotic uprising in the Austrian Tyrol during the early part of the nineteenth century forms the background of the new piece. In it Andreas Hofer and the Archduke John of Vienna are the chief historical figures. Miss Harned will play the part of the heroine, Anne. "Anne and the Archduke" is favored as a title for the play.

Although the Shuberts will be Miss Harned's managers, David Belasco will stage the piece during the Summer. It will be produced early next season in New York.

Gave a Theatrical Party.

A novel entertainment was arranged by the Misses Hettie and Blanche Ottendorff at their home, 135 West 119th Street, on Friday evening. The hall represented the stage of a playhouse. The invitations read that a full dress rehearsal would take place at the Ottendorff Theatre. Theatrical posters flanked the entrance, and "Standing Room Only" and "Tickets Sold by Speculators Will Not Be Acceputed" signs were displayed. Each guest represented a character in Weber's "The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West."

New Luna Park to Open May 12.

Thompson & Dundy announced yesterday that Luna Park will open for the Summer on Saturday, May 12. The big Coney Island playground was stripped bare immediately after the closing last Fall, and it will be an entirely new expanse of the mechanical, electrical, spectacular, and artistic wonders of the world this season.

Triangle Club's New Play.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 3.—The Triangle Club, Princeton's dramatic organization, will present a new play this season called "Tobasco Land." It is a musical comedy of two acts, written by two undergraduates, J. F. MacPherson and H. D. Fish. The first performance will be in New York on April 7. A matinée and an evening performance will be given in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria.

Sidney Drew in Bankruptcy.

Sidney Drew, a brother of John Drew, himself an actor well known to vaudeville patrons, filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday, with liabilities of $3,172 and no available assets. The debts were contracted from 1901 to 1905. Mr. Drew appears with his wife in vaudeville.

The American Academy of Dramatic Arts will give its seventh and final performance at the Empire Theatre on Thursday afternoon, March 8. "The Uhlan," a drama in five acts, by Tola Dorian, will be presented.

EX-GOV. HOGG DIES SUDDENLY IN TEXAS

Had Been Ill for a Year, but the End Was Not Expected.

ONCE WAS A PRINTER'S DEVIL

Trust Fighter a Picturesque Campaigner Whose Ejaculation "By Gatlins" Swept the State.

HOUSTON, Texas, March 3.—Ex-Gov. James Stephen Hogg died to-day at the residence of Frank C. Jones, his law partner.

Mr. Hogg had been in failing health for a year or more. His condition was not considered critical by his physician, and he was planning a trip to Battle Creek, Mich. Gov. Hogg reached Houston last night, and, feeling ill, took to his bed.

Jim Hogg—for he encouraged everybody, especially voters, to call him that—was 6 feet 2 inches in height, weighed very near 300 pounds, and held the Governorship of Texas to the limit of the period permitted by the State Constitution.

He was born near Rusk, in Cherokee County, in 1851, received what education he could get from the country schools of the time, and began his business career as a printer's devil. In time he became editor of The Longview News and The Quitman News, both local papers in small towns. He studied law in spare moments, was admitted to the bar, and in 1873 served as Justice of the Peace in Wood County. He was County Attorney there between 1878-80, District Attorney for the following four years, was Attorney General of the State between 1886 and 1890, and Governor from 1890 to 1894.

He was the chief exponent of "anti-monopolism" in Texas. He began to fight the railroads while he was Attorney General. They formed a traffic association, against which he filed an injunction calling for its dissolution as an unlawful combination in restriction of trade.

At the convention where he was nominated Governor a constitutional amendment was adopted, one section of which called for the establishment of a railroad commission to be intrusted with the powers necessary to prevent abuses and discriminations, and to make, establish, and maintain reasonable rates of railway charges for transportation of passengers and freight within the limits of the State. Texas still has her Railroad Commission.

Another section of the same amendment was directed against the selling of public lands to corporations; the law was in favor of actual settlers.

Hogg was a most picturesque and successful political campaigner. Despte the size of the State, it was his policy to see and talk to "the boys," depending as little as possible on campaign literature and other second-hand means of getting votes. He was the coiner of an expletive which was not only effective in the relief of pent-up feelings and by way of emphasis, but did not come under the ban of Sunday school teachers. "By gatlins" was a combination which he found would answer the direst need at the topmost reach of impassioned oratory, and in the home of the voter at the forks of the creeks. It swept the State, it was so effective and so unprovocative of criticism.

When he left the Governor's chair Jim Hogg took up the practice of law in Austin, the capital city, where he bought a home on University Hill, near the Texas University. He continued his campaigns against "trusts" and "monopolies." When oil was discovered near Beaumont he bought a lot of land and out of his oil dealings made a great deal of money.

TUXEDO SOCIAL ACTIVITIES.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., March 3.—In spite of the disagreeable weather, a large number of persons came out to Tuxedo to-day to pass Sunday. House parties followed by dinners to-night were given by several of the cottagers, and some entertained at the clubhouse.

James Henry Smith arrived this morning on a special train and entertained a house party at Kincraig over the week's end. Among others who opened their villas for the week's end entertainment were Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lanfear Norrie, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman De R. Whitehouse.

Other cottagers who entertained at parties followed by dinners included Mr. and Mrs. Grenville Kane, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lord, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic F. Carey, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Porter, and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis S. Chanler.

Mrs. James Lawrence, who has leased the Adee cottage on Tower Hill, arrived to-day for the early Spring.

The Hon. Hugo Baring and Lady Evelyn Baring are stopping at the clubhouse. Among other arrivals to-day were Frederic J. Dieter, Malcolm D. Sloane, William E. Clow, Jr., William R. Stewart, Jr., T. Suffern Tailer, Stewart Witherbee, Mr. and Mrs. F. V. S. Crosby, and Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Dodge.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Mrs. Roosevelt, according to the well-informed, will observe a quiet Lenten season. No guests at the White House are expected till Easter. This period of rest will be most welcome to all the Presidential household. During the latter part of April Mrs. Roosevelt will, if present plans hold good, give two evening musicales with possibly a large garden party in May, to close her Washington season.

The Belgian Minister and Baroness Moncheur, who were prevented from entertaining earlier in the season by reason of Court mourning for the late Count of Flanders, gave their second dinner party of the week this evening. The guests of honor were the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand, to meet whom were present the Secretary of War and Mrs. Taft, Senator and Mrs. Newlands, Senator and Mrs. Lodge, Senator Kean, Senator Brandegee, Miss Boardman, Miss McMillan, Miss Wetmore, and Representative Gillette.

Mrs. Spooner, wife of the Senator from Wisconsin, entertained to-day at the first of a series of luncheons to be given during March. The Baroness von Sternburg was the guest of honor to-day when the company included Mrs. Hobart, Mrs. Daniel Manning, Mrs. Nicholas Fish, and Mrs. Kean, mother of the Senator from New Jersey. Mrs. Spooner will entertain again on March 10.

Miss Cannon was the guest of honor today at a luncheon given by Mrs. M. M. Parker.

Mr. von Kuelemann, the newly appointed Second Secretary of the German Embassy, has arrived at his post and entered upon his duties. Mr. von Kuelemann, who is a young bachelor, is a welcome addition to society wherein the members of the Kaiser's Embassy have as a rule been most popular.

Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth has suspended her Thursday evening receptions during Lent, but has issued cards for three evening musicales—Thursdays, March 15 and 29, and April 5.

Mrs. J. Sloat Fassett has issued cards for at home Monday, March 12, at 4 o'clock. Representative and Mrs. Fassett are occupying the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. McLenahan, 1,601 Twenty-first Street, which is particularly well adapted for entertaining.

NEW GOULD BABY ARRIVES.

She's the Seventh Born to Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould.

George J. Gould spent the greater part of yesterday in receiving congratulations on the arrival of a new baby at his home, 857 Fifth Avenue. This is his seventh child and fourth daughter. Mrs. Gould had been at Lakewood nearly all Winter, but came here several days ago.

The doctor was called early yesterday morning, and the arrival of the baby was announced before breakfast. Mrs. Gould will probably return to Lakewood as soon as she and the baby are able to take the journey.

The other six Gould children are Kingdon, Jay, Marjorie, Gwynne, George J., Jr., and Helen Vivian. Kingdon, named for his mother's family, (she was Edith M. Kingdon,) is now 19 years old. Nearly all the children were born in New Jersey. Little Helen Vivian, however, was born at sea, off Seabright, on Mr. Gould's yacht Sybarite, in August, 1901. The Summer was the hottest in years, and Mrs. Gould lived on board the yacht for several weeks prior to the birth of her daughter.

Mr. Gould is proud of his large family, and has devoted a great deal of time to the physical training of his children. In connection with his Lakewood estate there is an athletic field, a theatre, a race track, and a swimming pool for their benefit. Mr. Gould plays with them, and he and his two oldest boys are among the greatest polo enthusiasts in the country. The boys have the finest of polo ponies, while the girls have ponies of their own. All have automobiles as well.

RUSSIAN ART SALE.

Paintings, Sculptures, Textiles, and Wood Carvings at Auction.

Exhibits of Russian artists and artisans which were shown at St. Louis notwithstanding the failure of the Russian Government, owing to the Japanese war, to make a strictly governmental exhibition, have been shown for many months on Fifth Avenue, near Twenty-seventh Street. These objects are to be sold at the Silo Galleries on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at 8 P. M.

It may be remembered that a great many artist societies of St. Petersburg, Moscow, and other Russian cities contributed paintings, water colors, and drawings. Among the exhibits is a series of views from the Ural Mountains where jewels are found, and semi-precious stones, such as agate, onyx, and malachite. These views give a good idea of the country and the mines, which include those of gold, iron, and other metals.

Quaint and naïve wooden implements and toys, the product of village industries, form part of the varied collection about to be dispersed. Native colored dresses and linen in many forms with brightly colored and white embroidery, objects in metals and stone, household and nursery fittings lend a peculiarly domestic interest to the sale.

WEDDINGS OF A DAY.

CUYLER—LORD.

The wedding of Mrs. May Nicoll Lord and Cornelius C. Cuyler was celebrated quietly yesterday at 12:30 in the apartments of the bride at the Essex, Madison Avenue and Fifty-sixth Street, by the Rev. Dr. Thomas Hall. De Lancey Nicoll gave the bride away. She, of course, had no attendants. De Witt Cuyler was his brother's best man.

After the ceremony, which was attended by relatives, there was a reception for the intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler. About 250 were asked; many came from Tuxedo, where the bride has spent most of her time the past few years. Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler have gone to Washington. The bride was the widow of James Brown Lord, the architect, who died several years ago, and is a sister of De Lancey and Benjamin Nicoll.

An Engagement.

The engagement is announced of Frederick T. Van Beuren, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Van Beuren, to Miss Jessica Mohlman, daughter of Mrs. James Mohlman of 51 West Fifty-second Street. Mr. Van Beuren is a graduate of Yale, in the class of '98. He lives at 21 West Fourteenth Street, the old Van Beuren homestead.

Dinner in Dr. Seaman's Honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin M. Clarkson of 37 Madison Avenue are to give a dinner on Sunday evening in honor of Surgeon Major Louis Livingston Seaman.

ECLECTIC SPREADS ITS WINGS

Serious Women in It, Mrs. Lyon Says, and Refutes Frivolity Charges.

The Vassar Students' Aid Society gave an experience party yesterday. Mrs. Doré Lyon and the Eclectic Club were the star members. That was because, while other people have given their experiences of Eclectic before, Eclectic has never before had an opportunity to tell what it thought of itself.

Every one knows the long history of Sorosis, the dignified mother of clubs; the big work that is done by the Little Mothers' Aid has been told many times, and even Mrs. Philip Carpenter, President of the New York State Federation, could not say much yesterday that was new about her numerous club progeny.

But Mrs. Lyon's point of view of Eclectic was entirely new. Serious minded club women were apt, she said, to look upon the Eclectic as rather frivolous, but the club members took them very seriously.

"Other club women think," she said, "that we pay much attention to outward adornment, but"—with a sweeping glance over her black gown with its smartly buttoned sleeves—"what you see now disproves that. They think that we are given to elaborate luncheons and big entertainments, but we had a very serious beginning.

"Eclectic really began with a little club called Philosophia, an organization in which we all wrote poems and papers and thought we were something mighty fine. Then later this club was formed of most of the women that were in the earlier club. Eclectic members work for helpfulness and the improvement of each other, and we have a philanthropy clause in our constitution which allows us to do work of that kind."

Mrs. Lyon told of little Maurice Warner, the boy musician, to whom the club is giving a musical education at a cost of from $1,000 to $1,200 a year with money it had raised for other philanthropic purposes. Then she recited verses written to celebrate Eclectic's tenth birthday, telling how the club was brought into existence by "some maids who bore to endless fame a banner with the glorious name Eclectic." They were not without opposition and:

"Oh, stay," some husbands said, "and rest
Your weary heads upon our breasts."
No tears stood in their flashing eyes;
They only said, with mild surprise:
Eclectic.

"Beware conservatism's power,
Beware of critics old and sour,"
This was a dear friend's last "good night";
A voice replied, far up the height,
Eclectic.

Then at last Eclectic having "success, achievement, glory won"—
And all the world came by to stare—
A voice cried through the startled air:
Eclectic.

The Vassar Aid experience party was to have been a large one, thirty-five club Presidents having been invited. Owing to the inclemency of the weather only about half a dozen arrived. There were not many more women in the entire gathering, and only a man and a half—the half being the Vassar President's (Mrs. Louis H. Allen's) little son—to represent the masculine element. The meeting being small, it resolved itself nearly into a social function. Tea was served, and the Barnard girls belonging to the Whittier Hall Ladies' Mandolin Club furnished the music. On Monday afternoon, April 2, the society will give a matinee, with professional talent, for the benefit of its work.

AID FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN.

Orthopaedic Hospital Is in Need of Funds for Its Work.

The New York Orthopaedic Dispensary and Hospital, which is working to reclaim crippled children and enable them to engage in the struggle of life on equal terms with their neighbors, is badly in need of funds. Never in the history of the institution has its field for usefulness been greater, but, owing to the lack of money, the benefits distributed have been more circumscribed than those in charge believe would be the case if the public understood the needs of the institution.

During the year just ended 4,229 patients were treated in the dispensary and hospital, and 3,431 visits have been made by the hospital staff to the homes of patients. This year the expenses will be considerably increased. Owing to the entirely inadequate accommodations for the nurses, it has been found necessary to add to the hospital property a small building on Fifty-eighth Street, which will be used as a nurses' home, and to relieve the congested consulting rooms. Although the property has been paid for by members of the Board of Trustees, the additional running expenses must be met by general subscriptions, which are received by Frederic A. Juilliard, Treasurer.

RIDICULE GRIEVED LANGLEY.

Dr. Bell Says Scientist's Life Was Shortened by Criticism.

BOSTON, March 3.—The body of Prof. S. P. Langley, who died at Aiken, S. C. last Tuesday, was interred in the Forest Hill Cemetery, in this city, to-day. Prof. John Langley of Cleveland, a brother, and Pierpont Stackpole, a nephew, accompanied the body from Washington. Brief services at the cemetery were attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

Among the honorary pallbearers were Richard Olney, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, President Charles W. Eliot, and Prof. Edward Charles Pickering of Harvard, and President Henry M. Pritchett of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Prof. Bell delivered an address, in which he said:

"The newspapers did not treat Prof. Langley with fairness. Ridicule shortened his life. He was not permitted to make his preliminary experiments quietly and in peace.

"His flying machine never had an opportunity of being fairly tried. His perfected apparatus was never launched in the air. It would have flown. We who were his friends know of his anxiety before he passed away to make flight in the air an accomplishment for man. Ridicule, I repeat, shortened his life.

"We have looked upon his face for the last time, but the man and his works will permanently endure."

BURIAL AT ST. PAUL'S.

Body of Ernest Staples Interred in the Old Churchyard.

The body of Ernest Staples was buried in the family vault in the churchyard of St. Paul's Chapel yesterday morning. The funeral services were conducted by the vicar of the chapel, the Rev. W. Montague Geer.

The burial was the first that had taken place in that vault in over twenty years, though there is a burial in the churchyard about once a year. Only those who have vaults are now buried in St. Paul's, and there are no plots for sale. The Staples vault is one of the oldest there.

While the burial was taking place a canvas cloth was hung around the iron fence to obstruct the view from Broadway, and the church bell tolled for several minutes. Ernest Staples was the eldest son of William J. Staples, a descendant of one of the oldest Knickerbocker families. He was educated at Heidelberg. In the year 1866 he was on board the yacht Fleetwing in the famous race of that craft with the Henrietta and the Vesta from Sandy Hook to the Needles.

FOOTBALL REFORM CODE HAS BEEN COMPLETED

Committee Adopts Final Rules at Meeting at Murray Hill Hotel.

GAME TEN MINUTES SHORTER

Hurdling, Holding, and Tripping Defined—Protection for the Catcher—Other Technical Changes.

The American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee has completed its work of reforming the game of football, and the new game is a fact. There may still be one or two minor changes in the rules at a subsequent meeting of the committee, but no further changes are believed to be necessary or desirable. It is the unanimous opinion of the Rules Committee that the work it has done will attain all the objects sought for in the revision and will answer all reasonable objections to the game. There is still required much work in codification and clarification and phrasing before the rules can be put out in a rule book for the use of the college world, but it is expected that this work will all be done by the time the next meeting of the committee assembles. This is scheduled for Friday, March 30, at the Murray Hill Hotel.

The meeting at the Murray Hill yesterday was entirely harmonious. There was no extensive debate, no wide difference of opinions, and no dead-locks such as marked the previous meeting. There was some talk before the meeting of objection to rules by F. Homer Curtis, who represents the Southern colleges, saying the rule eliminating mass plays did not effectually cut them out. If Curtis felt so, he gave no voice to his opinion in the meeting, and joined with the others in expressing entire satisfaction with the modifications previously adopted.

The work yesterday consisted exclusively in the adoption of definitions relating to holding, hurdling, and the like and the modification of one point relating to kicked balls and forward passes that rolled out of bounds. The changes were entirely technical and affected the game in no way from a spectacular viewpoint. The means of providing a central board of officials were also considered, and some recommendations made looking toward carrying the provisions of the sub-committee, submitted at the last meeting, into effect. This done, the meeting adjourned, to await the completion of the codification. The question of a field laboratory did not come up, and will likely be considered when the rules are phrased and finally adopted March 30.

One unexpected development, however, was a decision to shorten the official length of a game to sixty minutes, instead of seventy, as has been the case heretofore.

The formal report of the measures adopted follows:

HOLDING.—That the players of the side that has possession of the ball shall not hold, block, or obstruct their opponents, except with the body. Holding or unlawful obstruction includes:

(a) Grappling the opponent with the hands.

(b) Placing the hands upon an opponent to push him away from the play.

(c) Circling in any degree any part of an opponent with the arm.

(d) Any use of the arms to lift an opponent in blocking.

The only allowable use of the arms in blocking or obstructing an opponent is with the arms close to the body, except that a player running with the ball may ward off an opponent with the hand.

The penalty for holding shall be the loss of fifteen yards.

Note.—The Secretary and the editor of the rules are authorized and instructed to insert illustrations in the official rule book wherever deemed advisable to indicate allowable and unallowable use of hands and arms as permitted under this rule, to elucidate it.

HURDLING.—In the open field hurdling is prohibited, such hurdling to consist of jumping over an opponent who is still on his feet. Hurdling through the line is also prohibited. Hurdling of the line shall consist of jumping or attempting to jump over a player in the line of scrimmage, with the feet or knees foremost, within the distance of five yards on either side of the point where the ball was put in play.

TRIPPING.—Obstructing the advance of a player by striking him below the knees with that part of the leg below the knees, or with the foot, constitutes tripping and is unlawful.

FAIR CATCH.—A fair catch is made when the ball is caught after it has been kicked by an opponent, and before it touches the ground, or in similarly catching a punt-out made by one of one's own side, provided the player making the catch has signaled his intention of making a fair catch by raising his hand clearly above his head, and provided, after making the catch, he takes no more than two steps. It is not a fair catch if the ball after the kick was touched by another of the catching side before the catch.

Opponents who are offside shall not in any way interfere with a player who has an opportunity to make a fair catch. Nor shall the player be thrown to the ground after such catch is made, unless he shall have advanced more than two steps after making the catch.

The point where the catch is actually made shall be the mark, and the side making the catch may put the ball into play from that point either by a free kick or a scrimmage.

The referee shall decide whether a fair catch is made, and as to whether there is interference with the fair catch, and also regarding the throwing of the catcher. He shall inflict the penalties provided for such offenses.

PENALTIES.—A distance penalty that would carry the ball behind the goal line shall not carry the ball past the one-yard line, but it shall be put in play at that point as though the penalty had simply extended thereto. If a second distance penalty be then necessary half the distance to the goal line shall then be given on this and each succeeding offense.

KICKING.—When a ball has been kicked any player of the kicking side shall be on side as soon as the ball touches the ground, but in such case the ball shall not be kicked further or kicked at from its position on the ground or while bounding by any player on either side.

OUT OF BOUNDS.—If a kick or a forward pass goes out of bounds before crossing the opponents' goal line it shall belong to the opponents at the point where it crossed the side line. If, however, it strike any player who is on side and then passes out of bounds, it shall belong to the player who first obtains possession of it.

Rule 12 of the old rules relating to the length of the game was modified to read:

The length of a game shall be sixty minutes, divided into two halves of thirty minutes each, exclusive of the time taken out. There shall be an intermission of ten minutes between the two halves.

Rule 15 of the old rules relating to charging was modified by substituting the words "starting forward beyond the restraining line" wherever the word "charging" occurs.

Rule 9 of the old rules relating to charging and defining it was stricken out.

The report of the sub-committee to provide for a central board of officials was considered and the Rules Committee recommended the adoption of a plan looking toward the instruction and supervision of officials and suggested that the different sections of the country appoint committees that shall be charged with the introduction of such a system as speedily and in so far as may be found feasible.

It was also voted that the sub-committee to provide a central board of officials communicate at once with officials of note throughout the country asking an expression of their opinion as to the most feasible measures to provide for the effecting of the end desired in the adoption of the above recommendation. The sub-committee shall then report to the Central Committee at its next meeting some plan of procedure devised from such suggestions.

It was agreed that the next meeting be held at the Murray Hill Hotel at 7:30 P. M. on the evening of Friday, March 30.

Phillips Exeter Athletes Lead.

BOSTON, March 3.—Phillips Exeter Academy won the seventeenth annual indoor championship meet of the New England Interscholastic Athletic Association held in Mechanics' Building, this city, to-day, under the auspices of the Boston Athletic Association. The New Hampshire School was represented by a team composed of many of last year's men. The points scored in its favor totaled 36½, its nearest competitor being Worcester Academy, with 19 points. No athletes from Phillips Andover were entered.

The feature of the meet was the relay race between Exeter Academy and the Volkmann School of Boston. The latter made a new time for 1,560 yards, 3:13 2-5. Exeter's time was 3:14 1-5.

Free Novice Games for Schoolboys.

Novice runners of the elementary and the high schools and in the College of the City of New York will compete in a series of interclass and inter-school relay races to be held in Madison Square Garden on March 17. Only those who have never won prizes in such competitions will be eligible. The novel plan will be adopted of charging neither entrance fees nor admission, issuing invitations to spectators and defraying the expenses of the meet by contribution from public-spirited citizens.

SCHOOLBOYS MAKE RECORDS.

New Pole Vault and 220-Yard Figures at Barnard Games.

Harry A. Coates of the Seton Hall Preparatory School track team was the star performer at the seventeenth annual indoor games of the Barnard School Athletic Association, held yesterday afternoon in the Eighth Regiment Armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue. He defeated a big field in the half-mile run, which was the feature of a good programme, in the easiest possible manner. The best schoolboy half-milers in the Metropolitan District were entered against him. Raymer of Montclair High School and Elsele of the Newark Academy set out a fast pace, with Coates running easily in fourth place. The men ran in the same positions up to the last lap, when Coates spurted and, passing the leaders in succession, went to the front 100 yards from home, and won by ten yards.

Two new records were made, according to announcement, during the afternoon. F. Clancey of De Witt Clinton High School ran 220 yards in 25 seconds, which is three-fifths of a second better than the best time made last year. In the pole vault A. H. Middleton of St. Paul's School cleared the bar at 10 feet 1 inch, which supplants the old record by one inch.

The point banner was won by St. Paul's School with 25½ points, De Witt Clinton was second with 25, and High School of Commerce third with 21. De Witt Clinton led by 6½ points up to the last event, which was the pole vault. St. Paul's School furnished two entries for this event, and secured first and third prizes, which netted the school 7 points. De Witt Clinton did not have an entry in this event. The summary:

SCOUT RIDER BOAT CLAIMS.

Sportsmen's Show Exhibitors Say Mile-a-Minute Speed Is Impossible.

Exhibitors of motor boats at the Sportsmen's Show at Madison Square Garden scout the claim of H. E. Rider that his new type of boat can travel a mile a minute. One exhibitor offered to wager $500 that Mr. Rider's creation could not sail once around the lake as fast as the little motor boats now demonstrating on the lake. Many bets were offered last night that it would prove a failure if ever tested.

In reply Mr. Rider says that the crowded condition of the lake would interfere with any practical demonstration, and that he would not take any chances to satisfy a few exhibitors. He promises to make a demonstration in Gravesend Bay, near Bath Beach, as soon as the weather permits, and will then prove both the utility and practicability of his invention.

All the makers report good sales yesterday. J. L. Reiss ordered a forty-five-foot cabin motor boat, to be equipped with a six-cylinder Speedway engine, and C. T. McClellan of Mount Vernon placed an order for a thirty-eight foot cruising launch. An interesting programme of aquatic sports was watched by a big crowd of spectators. The summary:

Prize Offer for New Game.

The Public Schools Athletic League wants a new game for girls that can be played indoor by an entire class at one time, and Mrs. Henry Siegel has offered a prize of $50 to the person who can devise it. The idea is to secure a game that will afford considerable exercise, require some fifteen minutes to play it, and will admit of the participation of the entire class of fifty or sixty girls in the limited space afforded by one classroom.

The necessity for such a game arises from the lack of a suitable place out of doors where a school containing 2,000 or 3,000 girls can turn out at once to play the games that are known. Exercise must therefore be provided indoor, and the games that afford it are lacking.

Navy Fencers Beat Cornell.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., March 3.—The Naval Academy fencing team, composed of Dichman, (Captain,) Crenshaw, and Burdick, to-day defeated the Cornell University team made up of Heckheimer, (Captain,) Howard, and Fassett, by a score of 6 bouts to 3. Dichman excelled for the navy, winning all of his bouts, while Heckheimer made the best showing for Cornell. A large audience witnessed the contests.

NO SCULLING RACES AT POUGHKEEPSIE

Quadruple Fours Eliminated from Intercollegiate Regatta.

OARSMEN ON THE WATER

Crews Leave Tanks for Actual Work in the Boats—Poor Outlook in Certain Quarters.

Quadruple fours will be eliminated from the regatta of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association this year. This was determined at the annual meeting of the Stewards, as only two entries appeared possible, those of Syracuse and the University of Pennsylvania, while the Stewards had previously decided that such an event should not be placed on the programme at Poughkeepsie on June 23 unless at least three entries were assured. The Syracuse University authorities, upon receipt of this information, decided to take this crew from their preliminary training, and it is now certain that for this year at least the contest will fall through. James A. Ten Eyck, coach of the Syracuse University crews, is the father of the quadruple four race idea and he would be glad to see such an event.

Information has been received from Wisconsin, Columbia, and Cornell to the effect that they will not undertake sculling next year. Coach Ten Eyck is in receipt of a letter from Coach Dempsey, in which the latter states that lack of material and facility will deter him, although he is favorable to the idea.

Yale, Harvard, Cornell, and Pennsylvania have begun outdoor rowing, and other college crews will quickly follow. With the midwinter examinations over, candidates for crew positions will be able to devote more time and attention to rowing. Outdoor practice is unusually early this year, and as a result the crews should show improved form when the time for the races arrives.

With the best material weeded out from several hundred candidates, Harvard has started her Spring campaign with ideal prospects for a victorious crew. Capt. Filley is rejoicing over the form shown by the men in their work on the Charles River. The Harvard limbering up is the earliest that has ever been indulged in. The Crimson surprised the rowing world last season by giving Yale one of the stiffest battles in her rowing history and by losing by less than half a boat's length. Of last year's 'Varsity crew six veterans remain, and for the two remaining places there are many who are trying. Capt. Filley has decided to follow out practically the same plan used last year. Jim Wray, whose work was entirely satisfactory last year, will again have charge of the crews. Grenville Clarke of New York, now in his senior year at the Law School, will act as graduate coach of the 1909 squad. The system of class rowing will be the same as last year, and there will be class crews and club crews for the three upper classes. The upper class crews will be coached by Rice and Stevenson.

The situation at New Haven is one of uncertainty. The little work indulged in this year has not enabled the coaches to figure with any degree of accuracy on the strength of the crews. Those responsible for the wellbeing of rowing at Yale profess to be very well satisfied with the outlook, and expect to be represented on the water by crews at least up to the average of those of the past decade. Nothing has been done to fill the vacancies in the 'Varsity boat, but there are many promising candidates.

Charles E. Courtney of Cornell is reticent over the rowing outlook at Ithaca. The veteran does not approve of building castles in the air. Cornell is not likely to lose any good men, and as a result she should have good crews on the water this year. There is plenty of material at Ithaca, and nobody is better able to mold it than Coach Courtney. The freshman candidates are more numerous this year than formerly, and the general situation is one of promise. The mild weather has enabled Courtney to get in some preliminary outdoor practice, and the season's plans are well advanced.

Coach Jasper T. Goodwin of Columbia is confronted with a hard proposition. There are only four men in college of last year's 'Varsity eight and it is doubtful whether all these men will be able to row. There are several good men in college with some slight experience in rowing, and the freshman candidates are a sturdy lot, and if appearances count for anything they should render a good account of themselves.

Pennsylvania's decline in rowing has been slow and sure. She finished poorly in all three races at the Intercollegiate Rowing Association Regatta last June, and from present indications there is very little opportunity to improve matters this year. Coach Ward has lost several of his best men, and he will be called upon to develop men from material that is far from promising. He is worried over a stroke, and will have a difficult task to find one, while several other positions must be filled, and with a dearth of anything approaching good material Ward's work will be none too easy.

Perhaps no college is quite as poorly off as Georgetown, where Coach Dempsey will have but two of last year's men in the boat, which will necessitate the development of practically a new crew. Only twenty-two men responded to the call for 'Varsity and freshman crews, and as the college Faculty forbids training tables for athletes, it is not probable that the number of candidates will be materially increased.

Wisconsin will not have outdoor practice before next month, but in the meantime Coach O'Dea is using the rowing machines daily. At present there are about eighty candidates in the rowing squad. Thirty are in the 'Varsity section and fifty in the freshman division. Efforts are being made to purchase a coaching launch, the need of which has been felt for the last three years. The candidates are a most promising lot, and will make a better showing in the East next June if conditions half way favor them.

WEST POINT FENCERS WIN.

Columbia Team Beaten in Six of the Nine Bouts.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., March 3.—In their annual fencing tournament here to-day the cadets defeated the Columbia foilsmen by a score of six bouts to three. Much interest was manifested in the meet on account of Columbia having defeated the Naval Cadets by the score of 5 to 4. The most interesting bout of the day was between Dickinson and Lage, the intercollegiate champion. Lage had defeated both Williford and Humphrey, and the score stood a tie with three bouts apiece when the champion and Cadet Dickinson faced on the mat in the first bout of the final round, Dickinson started in from the start to mix things in a lively manner, and the Columbia man's confidence changed as he realized that Dickinson was outpointing him and he put forth his best efforts, but to no avail.

Williford, although he lost to Lage, put up a good exhibition, and the decision was by a narrow margin.

Columbia was represented by Lage, Kehrlein, and Amond.

The Army by Humphrey, Williford, and Dickinson.

Summary:

First Round.—Dickinson defeated Amond, Kehrlein defeated Humphrey, Lage defeated Williford.

Second Round.—Dickinson defeated Kehrlein, Lage defeated Humphrey, Williford defeated Amond.

Judges were Scott O'Connell, Mr. Kernochan, and Mr. St. Gudens of the Fencers Club.

Prizes for Home Trainer Races.

The Racing Committee in charge of the home trainer races for the championship of the United States and Canada, which will be held at Schwaben Hall, Myrtle and Knickerbocker Avenues, Brooklyn, have announced the following list of prizes One mile championship race, for clubs, silver loving cups; one mile individual championship race, seven prizes, consisting of a gold watch, clock, and tires; half-mile championship race, for Century Road Club of America members only, three prizes, a high-grade bicycle being the first prize.

INTERNATIONAL BILLIARDS.

Five of the Leading Players in the World Entered for Championship.

Five competitors are assured for the international championship professional billiard tournament at eighteen-inch balk line, two counts in balk. The list of entrants includes George F. Slosson, Jacob Schaefer, George F. Sutton, William F. Hoppe, and Louis Cure. The latter is rated as one of the most expert of the French professionals. Sutton will arrive in this country from Paris, where he has been playing with Vignaux at the latter's academy, on March 12. Cure will arrive on March 24, two weeks in advance of the beginning of the tournament, which will be held in the Madison Square Garden Concert Hall April 9.

The list of contestants is certain to be added to from Ora Morningstar, Albert G. Cutler, and Harry Cline of Philadelphia. Possibly only two of these may enter, although Morningstar is the only one who classes with the five entrants assured.

Slosson, Schaefer, and Hoppe are all busily engaged in practicing for the tournament, although Slosson and Hoppe are at present devoting their efforts to perfecting their game at eighteen-inch balk line, one count in balk, for their coming match for the world's championship. This match will in a sense prove to be an appetizer for the tournament to follow, and will be played in the Grand Central Palace March 27.

The big tournament will carry a prize of $3,000 with it, in addition to the championship emblem, which will be subject to challenge. The matches will be of 500 points, and should furnish the best of sport. At the close of the tournament the prize money and entrance fees, $250 for each contestant, will be divided among the players on the scale of 40 per cent. to the winner, 25 per cent. to second, 15 per cent. to third, 12 per cent. to fourth, and 8 per cent. to fifth. The tournament will be the first meeting of the top-class professionals in this city since the tournament at eighteen-inch balk line, one count in balk, which was won by Schaefer in December, 1901.

HOPPE NEARLY BEATEN.

C. T. Peterson came within two points yesterday afternoon of defeating World's Champion Willie Hoppe at Hoppe's Billiard Academy. He scored 498 points at the eighteen-inch balk line, two shots in balk, while Hoppe was gathering 468 at eighteen-inch balk, one shot in. He had a difficult double-cushion carrom to make for his 499th point and missed, and the wonderful little champion ran out the string with a 32 unfinished run. Hoppe ran away from his opponent at the start and was 200 points ahead at one stage of the game, when Peterson put on 97 and 65 in two successive innings, and shortly after took the lead. It was a close fight from then until the finish. The 97 was Peterson's best effort, while Hoppe made 89 in his best attempt. The two averaged just over 16 in the 31 innings.

In the evening game between the two Willie Hoppe again ran away from his opponent at the start, and, as they played but 300 points, won hands down, with Peterson's string showing only 138. Hoppe put on one run of 100 and another of 78, while Peterson's best was 30. Hoppe averaged exactly 25, making his total in 12 innings. The score by innings was:

Peterson—1 3 21 0 30 10 27 6 28 6; total, 138.

Col. Perry, the wonderful finger billiardist, said to be the greatest in the world, will give an exhibition of his skill on March 11.

LIKE POGGENBURG'S CHANCES

Billiard Players Here Believe He Will Win National Championship.

Amateur billiard players of this city believe that this year the National championship will be returned here. They base their calculations upon the fact that two ex-champions of the Class A division, J. Edward Poggenburg of the Liederkranz Club and Edward W. Gardner of the Acquakanonk Club of Passaic, N. J., have entered for the tournament that will begin in the gymnasium of the Chicago Athletic Association on March 12. It is certain that only three other competitors for the honors will strive against the two Easterners, these being H. A. Wright of San Francisco and Charles F. Conklin of Chicago, who won the title last year, and Calvin Demarest of Chicago. It is barely possible that Mortimer Rolls of the Union League Club, Philadelphia, may enter, as he expressed his intention so to do in a letter received by Poggenburg yesterday. Rolls is a player of much skill, and has been doing splendid work in a tournament in Philadelphia.

Poggenburg, upon whom the New Yorkers pin their hopes, has been showing the best of his game at the fourteen-inch balk line method. He has practiced steadily with George F. Slosson and Maurice Daly, and against the latter counted a run of 225 carroms. Gardner has practiced much of late with Slosson, and his averages have been uniformly around fifteen, while his best run has been a cluster of 106 carroms with which he finished a 300-point game.

The two New York representatives will not leave for Chicago until next Thursday. Wright has arrived in Chicago and is busy practicing with the professional, Jacob Schaefer. Wright has not shown any phenomenal speed, however. Conklin has played in this city so often that his speed is known, and while a nervy finisher his skill has shown little of the improvement which has been noticeable with the other men. Demarest, the last of the five contestants, is said to be the unknown quantity.

At a meeting of the National Association, held at the Liederkranz Club a few days ago, it was decided that a professional referee would be engaged for the tournament and thus do away with the controversy that arose last year. Semple of Chicago will probably officiate in this capacity.

BRITISH MARKSMEN COMING.

Queens Westminsters Will Meet 7th Regiment at Creedmoor in October.

The return rifle shooting match between the Queen's Westminster Volunteers and the Seventh Regiment will take place at Creedmoor, L. I., early in October. Col. Daniel Appleton has received notice from Col. Trollope of the crack British regiment that they were ready to defend the Vincent Challenge Trophy, which they won from the Seventh Regiment at Bisley, England, last July, and were willing to shoot in this country. The contest is looked forward to eagerly by the Seventh, owing to the narrow margin of victory secured by the English marksmen last year, the score being 1,490 to 1,480.

The Queen's Westminster Volunteers is one of the leading military organizations in England, and has the same reputation for marksmanship enjoyed by the Seventh in America, so that last year's match in England was in many respects the most interesting international rifle competition ever held between America and England. Sergt. Fulton of the victorious British team won second prize in the British championship contest for the King's Prize, and nine of the 100 honor men of last year's individual championship were members of the Westminsters. The Seventh Regiment has only about one-half the enlisted strength of the Westminsters, and the fact that they were defeated by the narrow margin of ten points for the trophy donated by Sir Howard Vincent won for them the greatest respect in England.

The conditions for the match will be the same as last year—teams of six men, each shooting fifteen shots at each of four ranges, 500, 600, 800, and 1,000 yards. The Seventh will use the "American Krag" rifle, with which the National Guard has recently been equipped, and will be a little better acquainted with it than in last year's match. The Britishers will probably use the Lee-Metford gun.

Elaborate arrangements will be made for the entertainment of the visiting marksmen. When the Seventh Regiment team visited England last year their entertainment included a private audience with King Edward at Buckingham Palace and several banquets, receptions, and luncheons.

Schoolboy Skating Races.

The weekly schoolboy skating races were held yesterday at St. Nicholas Rink. Julian Rice, with fifteen yards' handicap, won the junior event, and Clyde Martin, who started from scratch, won from a big field in the senior half-mile race. The summary:

440 Yard, for Schoolboys Under 14, Handicap.—Won by Julian Rice, Ethical Culture, (15 yards;) Lewis Moore, Public School No. 165, (15 yards,) second; J. Stearns, Syms School, (scratch,) third. Time—1:02.

880 Yards, for Schoolboys Under 18, Handicap.—Won by Clyde Martin, Polytechnic, (scratch;) T. Rice, Ethical Culture, (120 yards,) second; Alfred Ingold, High School of Commerce, (30 yards,) third. Time—1:48 3-5.

MORE AUTO TROUBLES FOR JERSEY MOTORISTS

Senator Frelinghuysen Preparing to Introduce New Bill.

STILL HOSTILE TO TOURISTS

Reckless Drivers, Using Roads for Record Runs, to Blame for Legislative Opposition.

New Jersey automobilists are looking forward with anxiety to another automobile fight which, it is expected, will begin at Trenton to-morrow night. The demonstration made by the motor car owners of New Jersey before the Legislature two weeks ago, when a hearing was held on the Frelinghuysen bill, carried so much weight that the result was to a large extent a victory for the automobilists. Senator Frelinghuysen, realizing that his original bill was in danger of radical changes, has prepared a new bill somewhat more moderate in tone than the former one. One of its greatest changes is in respect to the licensing of cars. Instead of adhering to the methods of the former bill, which authorized a tax according to horse power, the new bill will fix a tax or annual license of $3 on every machine under thirty horse power, with an additional $1 for the chauffeur, while for cars exceeding thirty horse power the license will be $5, with $2 extra for the chauffeur. The speed regulations, limiting the rate to a mile in seven minutes in town or village districts, will probably not be altered.

The Associated Automobile Clubs of New Jersey, which has taken a fairly active part in combating the Frelinghuysen bill, is making plans to attack the provisions in the proposed new bill that are still objectionable. Both sides are in earnest, but the credit for the greater activity rests with the anti-autoists, drawn largely from the farming community.

"Yes," said a prominent New Jersey automobilist yesterday, "the clubs and the automobilists themselves in New Jersey are outdone by the anti-motorists. The legislators who are fighting the motorists have established an endless letter chain system, and one Senator stated that in one day he received over 200 letters from different parts of the State. This means something. It produces results, and is bound to have its effect upon the legislators when the facts are presented in the house."

The grievances complained of by the farmers are to a large extent grievances of the careful, law-abiding automobilists as well. Hence, among motor users themselves there is a division. Speed laws, courtesies of the road, and other legal requirements have been violated in New Jersey with boldness. New Jersey roads have been frequently used for record runs from New York to Philadelphia, while the road from Camden to Atlantic City is constantly being used as an automobile race track.

The reckless automobilists have brought down not only upon themselves but upon the considerate drivers the wrath of the natives in the rural districts, and this fact is contributing to the difficulty of the fight. The law-abiding automobilist recognizes the fact that he is in danger from these reckless record makers.

Winthrop E. Scarritt, Vice President of the New Jersey Associated Clubs, said yesterday:

"The Frelinghuysen bill contains none of the friendliness extended toward automobilists, as is the case in the laws of New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and other States. In these States it is stipulated that if the owner has complied with the registration requirements in his own State he need not be compelled to pay an additional registration fee simply because he happens to be touring in a neighboring State. The bill also requires every driver of a motor car to be a licensed chauffeur. An owner may not drive his own car unless he has passed the same examination required from a professional chauffeur. Even a woman cannot drive an electric runabout unless she holds a State certificate showing that she is a duly licensed chauffeur. Owners driving their own cars are of all motorists the most careful drivers, and if an ignorant owners takes out his car with his family and meets with an accident the consequences are usually detrimental to him alone. The very element of personal safety forces an owner to understand his machine and drive carefully."

According to the present bill, if an automobilist should be so unfortunate as to be arrested and not have his license in his pocket, any county Justice has the power to send him to jail until the license is produced or a satisfactory reason adduced for its absence. The severe penalties that the bill permits local Justices to mete out to offending motorists, even if they evade the law in its slightest detail, are considered too sweeping in character. Several of these heavy penalties for light offenses will be eliminated in the new bill, and in this way Senator Frelinghuysen expects to gain more support from those automobilists who believe that a reasonable law should be enacted to prevent the roads of New Jersey from being used as speed tracks.

FOR VANDERBILT CUP RACE.

Three Frayer-Miller Cars Being Constructed for Big Event.

American automobile manufacturers are showing renewed interest in the prospects of the coming Vanderbilt Cup race, since the announcement from William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., that the event would surely be held in America. There will evidently be no lack of entries, and in more than one factory work on fast racing cars has been started. One of the new cars that will surely be seen in the event will be the Frayer-Miller car. Manager Knepper of the New York branch has just returned from the Columbus factory, and he gives the interesting news that three racing cars are now in process of construction. Whether the three cars or only the best one will be entered in the race depends entirely upon the speed qualities of the cars. They will be thoroughly tested before the race. One of the chief principles of construction will be to make these cars of the lightest possible weight and yet of the highest available horse power.

The Frayer-Miller car made an excellent reputation last year in the six-day endurance run at Long Branch, and it also made a creditable showing in the economy run held by the New York Motor Club. W. E. Frayer, who has designed the racing cars, and W. Moskovics, both of whom drove the Frayer-Miller cars in the six-day contest last Summer, will probably drive the new cars when ready for racing.

RUGBY GAME FOR COLUMBIA.

Physical Director Meylan Forming Team to Play English Football.

That Columbia will take up the English game of Rugby football as a college sport is now a practical certainty. Many reports to that effect were spread about, especially after the game between the New Zealanders and New York on Washington's Birthday, and the favorable reports by Prof. Kemp and Dr. Meylan, who witnessed the game as representatives of the Faculty Committee on Athletics. Both expressed themselves as being decidedly more in favor of the English than the American game of football, but it was not until J. T. Johnstone, who played for the New Yorks, attempted to organize an amateur league that the Columbia authorities took any action.

It is now understood that at the instance of Mr. Johnstone, Dr. Meylan, physical director at the Morningside institution, has definitely taken up the scheme of forming a Rugby team, or at least getting the Columbia men interested. That the Blue and White athletes will take to the scheme is not at all unlikely, inasmuch as the abolition of football has made a big gap in Columbia's sporting season, and it is believed the students will favor a Rugby team to meet the deficiency.

GASOLINE CARS.

COLUMBIA CARS represent a lavish expenditure of time and money on the part of their makers, whose aim is to produce perfect automobiles. The success that has attended all grades of COLUMBIA cars is proof that this object has been achieved, numerous sales attesting public approval of the admirable workmanship in what to-day are America's leading motor vehicles. HUCKLEBERRY INDIANS DINE.

Annual Banquet Held at New York Athletic Clubhouse.

The annual banquet of the New York Athletic Club Huckleberry Indians was held last night at the city clubhouse, Fifty-ninth Street and Sixth Avenue. One hundred and sixty members of the organization and guests contributed to the evening's enjoyment. The small dining room was tastefully decorated with Indian blankets, Southern palms, and magnolia trees. The diners were seated at twenty tables, and each man wore a wide red band around his head, with three feathers stuck in the back making the headpiece. The dinner was served at 7 o'clock, and two hours later the pow-wow began and kept up until long after midnight. A vaudeville entertainment formed a part of the programme. State Senator P. H. McCarren and Controller H. A. Metz were guests. When the former entered the dining room he was greeted with Indian yells from every part of the room He was quickly arrayed in the club regalia, which consists of the headpiece and a tomahawk, and escorted to a seat on the dais on the left of Little Chief E. F. Haubold. The other guests of the evening were John R. Van Wormer, President of the New York Athletic Club; Congressman C. A. Towne, William Murray, Secretary of the Larchmont Yacht Club, and Capt. Thomas Franklin, United States Army.

After the dinner speeches were made by Messrs. Metz, McCarren, Towne, Stewart, Gen. F. C. McLewee, President Van Wormer, Capt. Franklin, and others.

Fordham to Play Holy Cross.

Manager Thomas Mansfield of the Fordham University baseball team, Manager Quinn of the Holy Cross College baseball team, and Clark, Doughan, and O'Mara, representing the Knights of Columbus, met in the Malley Building, New Haven, on Friday to discuss the details of the game between Fordham and Holy Cross, to be played at Yale Field on June 7. The Knights of Columbus committee offered two propositions to both Fordham and Holy Cross. One was that each team receive 50 per cent. of the net proceeds, and the other that each take one-third of the gate receipts, or, in the case of rain, that both teams receive $125 as a rain guarantee. Both managers thought the first proposition more feasible and accepted it.

On the morning of June 7 the Knights will give their fourth degree parade, and in the afternoon go to Yale Field to witness the ball game, at which it is expected 25,000 persons will be present. Yale has offered the field to the baseball teams gratuitously, and it is the first time in her history that she has ever given up the grounds to outsiders.

Yale Leads Princeton at Chess.

Yale's chess players came to New York yesterday afternoon to encounter a team from Princeton in the annual match between these universities and treated the men from Old Nassau to a Waterloo, the score being 8 points to 2. Yale's quartet finished second to the Harvard champions in the last intercollegiate tournament during the Christmas holidays, and the New Haven boys were naturally the favorites yesterday. That they should win by such a score, however, was quite unexpected, and Capt. H. C. Richard and his men went back to New Jersey quite crestfallen over the defeat meted out to them. The score.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

Charles H. Taylor, Jr., of Boston, Mass., has sold his Herreshoff 30-footer Notos to Robert C. Mitchell, Commodore of the Sachems Head Yacht Club. Louis Bacon of Boston, Mass., has also sold his Herreshoff 30-footer Gamecock to E. Q. Trowbridge of the same club.

The auxiliary yawl Possum has been sold by Albert L. Pope of Hartford, Conn., to E. F. Noyes.

The auxiliary yawl Umbrina III. has been sold by John P. Elton of Waterbury, Conn., to John P. Wayland. The Umbrina is considered one of the handsomest cruising yachts of her length in the N. Y. Y. C. fleet.

Commodore E. Walter Clark of the Philadelphia Corinthian Yacht Club has pledged his support to the proposition for the Philadelphians to join the Atlantic Yacht Club in their annual cruise. The Seawanhaka-Corinthians, who were also invited by the Sea Gate yachtsmen, have not yet replied.

There will be some mighty good racing for the big schooners this year. Several big special events are talked of.

The Atlantic Yacht Club will hold its annual regatta on June 12 and make a special effort to arrange a race for the three seventies—Yankee, Mineola, and Rainbow—and a race for the new sixties against Weetamoe and Neola. E. W. Clark, who is building the new Herreshoff sixty, has declared he will hunt out F. M. Smith's new Gielow designed Effort on every occasion possible. He will get plenty of opportunity.

Lawley is building a new twenty-footer for an Atlantic Yacht Club yachtsman whose name is withheld, to go after the Class Q boats, new and old, on Gravesend Bay. With More Trouble, Saetta, Cockatoo II., Ojigwan, and Quest, and the two new Crane boats building for Mendon Chubb and W. A. Barstow, there will be plenty for the new boat to beat.

The new eighteen-foot one-design boats, of which thirty are to be built for the Sound yacht clubs, could very readily be slightly modified in order to qualify for the German-American races. Their water line length, 21 feet; breadth, 7 feet 6 inches, and draught, 5 feet 3 inches, when added together, exceeds the limit for that race very slightly.

The Old Mill Yacht Club has announced racing fixtures for June 17, July 15, Aug. 12, and Sept. 9. The latter will be a race for the Commodore's Cup.

The difficulty in providing enough Saturdays to go around on Gravesend Bay and satisfy all the demands of the clubs wishing to hold races this year is likely to be repeated in the case of the Long Island Sound clubs.

There is still no word from the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club about that new challenger that will appear in time to save the Manhasset Bay Cup from passing into history as the permanent possession of Commodore Trenor L. Park through a third victory of Mimosa III.

There have already been several additions to the new handicap yacht class, organized at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday last. There will certainly be enough yachts enrolled by the time the season opens to insure three divisions of ten to twelve boats each.

New Rochelle yachtsmen claim there will be eight starters at least in their long ocean race to and around Montauk, to and around Northeast Lightship, off Cape May, and back to Gravesend Bay in contests for the Brooklyn Cup.

There is no great demand for motor boat racing this year among the Sound yacht clubs. The activity in the sail craft has overshadowed the power boats.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

The customary Tuesday night lecture at the Automobile Club of America this week will be delivered by Frederick Moore, who will talk on "Brigand Life in the Balkans." Mr. Moore will illustrate his lecture with over 100 stereopticon views, showing incidents of his travels through that country.

According to W. W. Burk the total sales in New York of motor cars of all sorts have been 50 per cent. greater during the first two months of this year than during the same period of 1905. Mr. Burk is the manager of the Electric Vehicle Company's New York branch, from which the biggest record of sales in the city was made last year.

Motorists who have trouble with their water connections should substitute wire armored rubber hose for the metal pipes, making the joints by means of twisted wire clips. The rubber hose accommodates itself to vibration and curvature and strains the unions but little.

Not only will the road information and touring departments of the American Automobile Association be greatly enlarged this year, but members will find a string of hotels and garages all about the country where they will receive special attention. It is probable, also, that under the new regime the organization will have much greater influence in legislative affairs.

One of the tendencies of the coming season that is appealing to users of motor cars, and particularly to manufacturers of electric cars, is the increasing popularity of light electric vehicles. The demand for these cars for city use is said to be larger than ever before. The victoria phaeton type is particularly popular, as it makes a convenient and comfortable machine for ladies to manage.

The managers of the Wayne car intend to enter the car in as many endurance tests as possible this season. A six-day non-stop run has been planned for a Wayne car in the streets of New York, and arrangements are being made to hold the test early in the Spring. In addition, a Wayne car will be entered in the Easter races at Atlantic City, and provided the Wilkesbarre hill climbing contest is held this season a Wayne car will be entered there. It is also probable that a Wayne car will enter the hill climbing contest to be held late in May by the Worcester (Mass.) Automobile Club.

A two-cylinder Reo light touring car won the Pasadena-Altadena hill climbing contest in California a few days ago. The car won the event open to automobiles costing $1,500 and under. Nearly every make selling within that price was entered and the affair attracted wide attention among the California autoists.

The Glidden Touring Committee is receiving plenty of advice from motorists who would like to have a hand in selecting the course. There are grave objections to the Canadian trip. Benjamin Briscoe has come forward with a plan for making a Canadian tour from Buffalo to Detroit by way of Canada. Better roads will be found in this route, contends Mr. Briscoe, than in the trip laid out from Buffalo to Montreal.

Efforts are being made to use the motor cycle for delivery purposes. A Chicago merchant has recently kept a careful statement of his expenses with a motor cycle to which was fitted a delivery wagon attachment. He ran it for twenty-five days, beginning Dec. 6. During that time the motor cycle made seventy-five trips, covering a total of 727 miles, and delivered 2,273 packages. The average daily expense for gasoline and oil was 10 cents. The actual running time of the machine was a trifle less than 119 hours.

A remarkable record in automobile driving is being made by Frank Brazel of Hartford. He has been using for several weeks a forty horse-power Columbia car to test the new Hartford Dunlop tires. Brazel makes it a point to drive at least 100 miles a day, no matter what the weather may be. He has covered up to date about 17,000 miles with his car, but only 8,000 miles of this has been done in his recent tire-testing contest.

H. L. Bowden, the prominent amateur racer of Boston, whose Mercedes car held the mile record at Ormond a year ago, is said to have been initiated into the delights of motoring through the ownership of a Columbia car. That was about four years ago, but since that time Mr. Bowden has had several high-powered automobiles, most of them of foreign make.

Among the early New York tourists who are planning an extensive automobile trip through Europe this season is Walter J. Currie, a Wall Street broker. Mr. Currie intends to tour through France, Germany, and Italy in a six-cylinder Frayer-Miller car.

Colgate's New Football Coach.

HAMILTON, N. Y., March 3.—The Colgate University football team has secured William J. Warner of Buffalo as coach for the coming season. Warner was graduated from Cornell in 1903, and coached the University of North Carolina team last season. His brother, Glenn Warner, is Cornell's present coach.

PRINCETON'S ATHLETES LAND FORDHAM'S MEET

Tiger Team Captures Majority of Events in Armory Games.

PENN'S RELAY TEAM WINS

Policeman Eller Makes Game Effort to Take 70-Yard Novice—Parsons's Easy Victory.

It was a veritable intercollegiate athletic meet that Fordham University held last night in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory and in which a big team of Princetonians scored the majority of the points. A close second to the "tigers" was Yale, and in all of the events the contests were exceptionally keen. Parsons, the great Yale runner, won the Amateur Athletic Union championship at 600 yards. His time was the fastest indoors, being 1:14. Pennsylvania received a body blow in having her champion hurdler, Amsler, beaten, but later recouped somewhat by winning the two-mile relay against Columbia and Princeton. Altogether the games produced the best sport seen indoors this Winter and kept a great crowd of enthusiasts highly interested.

Princeton's team of track athletes began by scoring a victory in the novice seventy-yard dash. L. P. Simons breasted the tape easily in advance of his field, with Robert Eller, Irish-American Athletic Club, second, and E. F. Healy third. Eller is the athletic policeman who ran down and captured three burglars earlier in the week. Eller made a game effort to overtake the Princetonian, but failed. Another wearer of the orange and black, J. H. Nuelle, ran in the final heat, but finished fourth. The time was 7 3-5 seconds.

Again the Tigers' colors leaped to the front in the seventy-yard handicap as R. A. Gamble romped to the thin red line. Gamble showed a fine long stride, and proved very fast, there being a wide gap between him and V. C. Koch, Xavier Athletic Association, who finished second. The time was excellent, being 7 2-5 seconds.

Parsons, holder of the intercollegiate half-mile championship and record of 1:56, made a runaway race of the 600-yard Amateur Athletic Union championship. Charles Bacon of the Irish-Americans and Paul Pilgrim, New York Athletic Club, made plucky efforts to get up with Parsons, but they were at all times yards behind. The Yale man held the field safely and footed around to the tune of 1:14. This was announced as a record. Bacon and Pilgrim finished almost together, respectively second and third.

Something in the way of a sensation was brought about by the result of the seventy-yard high hurdle race. In this event W. M. Armstrong of the Princeton team won, clearing the hurdles splendidly and beating E. S. Amsler, the intercollegiate champion hurdler of the University of Pennsylvania. For the first three hurdles Amsler led, but Armstrong, who promises to make a strong bid for intercollegiate honors, led on the fourth jump, and beat the champion to the tape by nearly a yard. By a strange freak of circumstances the judges overlooked Amsler completely, and at first he was not placed, Northridge being announced as second, with Eller, the athletic policeman, third. Northridge, however, did the sportsmanlike thing, and declared that he was not entitled to a place, as he believed he had come in behind Eller. After some controversy Amsler got the place he was entitled to. The time was 9 3-5 seconds.

Yale showed a promising runner in J. F. Williams, who won the 600-yard novice event. Williams got out in front from the pistol shot and he was never headed, although several challenged him. Two of the Princetonians, Bergland and Power, tried to overhaul Williams, but they pumped themselves out and failed to get placed. Smith of the Mott Havens finished second by three yards, and Fuerst of the Mohawks third.

Yale, with P. White, handicapped at 3 feet, managed to get second place in the shot put. His put of the 12-pound ball was 48 feet 11 inches, and he fell second to J. J. Foley, New West Side Athletic Club, 7 feet, with 45 feet 11 inches. In this event L. E. J. Feuerbach of the New York Athletic Club, the scratch man, put the shot 49 feet 8½ inches.

Two places in the pole vault went to Princeton, as L. Goodrich and H. L. Moore, the scratch man, were placed respectively second and third. Goodrich cleared 9 feet 6 inches and Moore 10 feet. Perry of Brooklyn Central Young Men's Christian Association won, clearing 10 feet, and had a handicap of 14 inches.

Pennsylvania and Columbia practically had it out alone in the two-mile intercollegiate relay race. At no stage did Princeton figure, and her last runner out was beaten by a scant half lap. For the first two relays Brodix and Marsh of Columbia and Root and Haskins of Pennsylvania ran, with the wearers of the light blue and white in front. Then Jones forged into the lead for Pennsylvania, and Terry held to that position, winning in the time of 8:17, which is within 10 seconds of the record. The summary:

70-Yard Dash, Novice.—Won by L. P. Simons, Princeton University; Robert Eller, Irish-American Athletic Club, second; E. F. Healey, unattached, third. Time—0:07 3-5.

70-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by R. A. Gamble, Princeton University; V. C. Koch, Xavier Athletic Association, second; W. J. Keating, Irish-American Athletic Club, third. Time—0:07 2-5.

Half-mile Run, Handicap.—Won by George Lyon, Central Congregational, (48 yards;) William Van Thun, Xavier Athletic Association, (30 yards,) second; H. T. McQuigan, Mott Haven Athletic Club, (50 yards,) third. Time—2:02 2-5.

600-Yard Run, Amateur Athletic Union Championship.—Won by E. B. Parsons, Yale University; Charles Bacon, Irish-American Athletic Club, second; Paul Pilgrim, New York Athletic Club, third. Time—1:14.

300-Yard Run, for Catholic Athletic League, Handicap.—Won by T. J. Sullivan, St. Ignatius Boys' Club, (11 yards;) John Lee, Annunciation Athletic Association, (5 yards,) second; P. Cunningham, St. Ann's Athletic Club, (10 yards,) third. Time—0:35 3-5.

70-Yard High Hurdles, Scratch.—Won by W. M. Armstrong, Princeton University; E. S. Amsler, University of Pennsylvania, second; John J. Eller, Irish-American A. C., third. Time—0:09 3-5.

JOCKEY CLUB WINS FIGHT.

Can Use Starting Barriers in Races Without Infringing Patent.

By a decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, handed down yesterday, the Metropolitan Jockey Club can use barriers in races without infringing any patent. The case has attracted much attention, and is a signal victory for The Jockey Club. Patrick Ryan made an application to have the Metropolitan Jockey Club, Patrick McCarren, William H. Reynolds, and Christopher Fitzgerald held liable for an infringement of the plaintiff's race track barrier. The Circuit Court of Appeals sustains the finding of the United States Circuit Court, which held that The Jockey Club and the other defendants had in no way been guilty of infringement.

Justice Coxe in his opinion says that the essential principle of Ryan's gate shows that it hung on pivots between two posts, with springs to hold each gate, nominally elevated, but with levers to depress the gate or barrier as it hung between the posts, with a mechanism to release the gate when so depressed.

The gate or barrier used by The Jockey Club, the opinion states, is in reality not a barrier at all, but thin tapes that snap like gossamer when released, and not designed to stop the horses, but merely to secure their proper alignment before starting. Furthermore, Judge Coxe states, the gate used and complained of is not pivoted between two posts so as to swing down below them, but is attached to one post only, and swings downward or upward through the arcs of a circle. The two gates are, therefore, the higher court says, entirely different, and the gate or barrier complained of is in no way an infringement upon the Ryan barrier or patent.

Ryan contended in his suit that the barrier used by The Jockey Club in starting races at the many tracks under its control was an infringement upon his patent devise. Had he been sustained by the United States Court he could have collected many thousands of dollars damages.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals being adverse, this ends the litigation, the Court of Appeals, in patent cases, being the court of last resort, unless Mr. Ryan can show that some of his constitutional rights have been violated.

"PHIL" FINCH'S HANDICAP.

Capt. Williams's Colts Were Only Opposed by Goldblatt Pair.

NEW ORLEANS, March 3.—Capt. Williams's pair, Phil Finch and Ram's Horn, had the Oakland Handicap feature of to-day's card at the Fair Grounds at their mercy. The colts, coupled in the betting, were at 1 to 4. Their only opponents—the Goldblatt pair, Monaco Maid and Rainland—were at 3 to 1. Ram's Horn made the pace for a mile, and Phil Finch, which had been selected to win, was then sent to the front, and the two cantered home a neck apart, with the Goldblatt pair three lengths away. The race was worth $1,490 to the winner.

Lens was a decided favorite in the betting, and won easily by three lengths. Canadian Offer Pleases Horsemen.

The proposition of J. F. Ryan, manager of the Montreal Jockey Club, that he would allow horsemen in good standing to subscribe for stock in small amounts in the track made a strong impression on the horsemen at the Crescent City Jockey Club track, New Orleans, and $25,000 worth was quickly sold. No encouragement was given to big investors who were after a controlling interest. Among those who got in on the ground floor were William Shields, James M. McCormick, "Tom" Mannix, M. J. Daly, Charles R. Ellison, P. M. Civill, Arthur Phillips, and J. W. Fuller.

Baseball Diamond in Three States.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST LIVERPOOL, Ohio, March 3.—The Klondike Baseball Club of this city has laid out its new diamond at State Line Corner, and in one respect at least it is the most remarkable in the world. It is situated right at the junction of the State lines of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia. A foul tip that gets away from the catcher has to be chased into Pennsylvania. A home run hit to left field is recovered in West Virginia. Ordinary singles go into Ohio. Hereafter the rooter who becomes enthusiastic will call for "West Virginia" when the home team is at the bat and shout "Pennsylvania for yours" at the opposing team batter.

Yale Easy for Dartmouth.

HANOVER, N. H., March 3.—Dartmouth defeated Yale at basket ball to-night, 44 to 16. The Dartmouth men led the visitors from the start. In the scoring of goals from the floor Gribenstein of Dartmouth and Murphy of Yale, right forward and left forward on their respective teams, did noteworthy work.

MILLIONS DISTRIBUTED IN RACING LAST YEAR

Coney Island Leads with $571,300 for 180 Events.

COMING SEASON PROMISING

Entries for Stakes Indicate That the "Sport of Kings" Will Have an Unparalleled Year.

Entries for the various stakes to be competed for this year on the race tracks throughout the country, especially in the East, point to a remarkably successful season.

An exhaustive and complete résumé of the amount of money distributed to horsemen in the United States and Canada last year, which has been compiled from advance sheets of Goodwin's Official Turf Guide, shows an interesting state of affairs. Cups and plates have not been considered in the calculations. In all $5,477,952 was paid out by the different jockey clubs and racing associations. The sport received a death blow in Illinois, Missouri, and Indiana, in consequence of which the Washington Park Club, the Chicago Jockey Club and the Harlem Jockey Club of Chicago failed to hold meetings last year, and the associations in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Indianapolis were short lived. Had there been no interference, about $1,250,000, according to the report, would have been added.

An interesting feature of the compilation shows the total of races run at one mile and under against those over a mile. Out of a total of 7,763 races on the flat—steeplechases and miscellaneous races eliminated—there were over 5,500 at one mile and under, or 75 per cent. of the whole.

There were 337 events "over water and timber," or cross-country affairs, showing a growing interest in this branch of sport. This is traceable to the turf authorities in the East, not only through their personal influence, but also by reason of the large amount of money added to many of these events, making them almost princely in value.

The result in its entirety is indelible proof that horse racing is indorsed by the masses and not by the few, otherwise there would be no continued annual increase in attendance. The throwing into circulation of the five and a half millions of dollars, thereby contributing to the financial pulsation of commerce, is made possible only by the patronage and thereby approval of the masses. What the Associations and Jockey Clubs receive annually they in a large measure give back by making the prizes more valuable and by adding to their programmes such new and attractive features as were likely to meet public demands.

According to the figures which will appear in the Official Turf Guide as representing the money distributed at the Metropolitan tracks last year, the Brighton Beach Racing Association in its twenty-eight days of racing gave away $325,495, which included $25,800 in second and third moneys not guaranteed. The Brighton Handicap was worth $22,000, then there was one race of $12,500, two at $12,000 each, four at $6,000 each, twenty-three at $1,200 each, sixty at $1,000 each, and fifty-five at $900 each, in all 170 races.

The Brooklyn Jockey Club had 102 events in its thirty days of racing, during which $249,165 were distributed, including $35,550 for second and third moneys not guaranteed. The races included the Brooklyn Handicap of $20,000, one at $11,020, one at $10,275, one at $9,750, one at $6,250, twenty-eight at $1,200, ninety-nine at $1,000, and nine at $900 each.

The Coney Island Jackey Club in its thirty days of racing distributed $571,300 in its 180 races, which included a race worth $33,740, two at $25,000 each, three at $20,000 each, one at $17,285, one at $15,000, one at $12,675, one at $12,425, one at $10,000, two at $8,000 each, thirty-six at $1,200 each, sixty-four at $1,000 each, and fifteen at $900 each.

The Westchester Racing Association, Belmont Park, had thirty days of racing, and during that time distributed $375,900 in 180 races. There was one event worth $15,420, one worth $11,870, one worth $10,300, one worth $10,250, one worth $10,000, sixteen worth $1,200, and seventy worth $1,000 each.

The Queens County Jockey Club at Aqueduct distributed $126,950 in 122 races, the richest being worth $7,200; the Metropolitan Jockey Club at Jamaica gave away $129,800 in 138 races, the highest value being $6,350; the Saratoga Association distributed $283,840 among 132 races, the highest value of a race being $50,000, and the Washington Jockey Club at Benning awarded $118,530 to winners and second and third horses in 209 races.

The Narragansett Breeders' Association gave ninety-two races to the value of $49,400, while the Buffalo Racing Association had 186 races, in which $85,850 were distributed.

New York Athletes Win at Washington

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Melvin Sheppard of the Irish-American Athletic Club of New York was the star to-night at the annual indoor games of Georgetown University. Starting from scratch in the mile handicap, he gradually wore down his opponents, and won in the fast time of 4:23. The other New York athletes made an excellent showing. Seitz of the New York Athletic Club won the 50-yard open handicap from scratch, and finished second to Dean of Pennsylvania in the 50-yard collegiate invitation event, and Mulligan of the Irish-American Athletic Club was first in the quarter-mile handicap.

PENN FIVE IN ROUGH MATCH.

Champion Basket Ball Team Easily Defeats Signal Corps.

Roughing tactics predominated last night in the basket ball match, in which the champion five of the University of Pennsylvania defeated the team of the Second Signal Corps of Brooklyn. The final score was 24 points to 15, but the real feature of the contest in the armory on Dean Street, near Washington Avenue, Brooklyn, was afforded by the more than strenuous work of the players.

Colton of the Signal Corps was repeatedly penalized for his violent tactics. On fouls he alone was the cause of the Pennsylvanians scoring eight points on free throws for the basket. Bigelow, also of the Signal Corps, at times used more strength than skill in following the ball. In one of the scrimmages for the ball he tore the jersey from his opponent, Stringle, and the game had to be stopped until the Pennsylvania player had rehabilitated himself.

The intercollegiate champions outplayed their opponents at passing and in throwing the ball into the basket. They proved so clever that only the tactics pursued by the Brooklynites prevented their score from being larger. Colton, Rogers, and Rose accomplished some excellent work for the Signal Corps team during the first half, and they played the ball very rapidly from one end of the field to the other and all scored field goals. The score for this half ended 13 to 9 in favor of the Signal Corps.

Pennsylvania made three changes in her team for the second half, and the Signal Corps found it more difficult to score. Then they began to rought it and delay the game, but their attempts were futile, as the Pennsylvanians played around them and piled up a good score on the work of Stringle, McCrudden, and Kiefaber. Line-up:

Pennsylvania.	Position.	Signal Corps.
Flint, Sprague	Right forward	Rose, Barnum
Keinath, Stringle	Left forward	Bigelow
Fitzpatrick, Ehlers	Centre	Bradley

Yale Second Beats De La Salle.

The Yale second team beat the De La Salle School five at basket ball last night in the De La Salle gymnasium on Fifty-ninth Street after as hard fought and pretty a contest as has been played there this season. The Yale team was a bit more lucky in its throwing for baskets than De La Salle, but in the main the two fives were very evenly matched. Thorp and McGuire for De La Salle played a splendid game, getting five goals apiece, while Fowler and Mixter led Yale at all times. Fowler basketed no less than eight goals. The teams lined up as follows:

De La Salle, 28.	Position.	Yale 2d, 31.

The annual wrestling championships of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union will be held Thursday and Saturday, April 5 and 7. The bouts will be held in the gymnasium of the new building of the Boys' Club, Tenth Street and Avenue A. The contests will be in all classes, the preliminaries being held on Thursday night, with the finals reserved for Saturday, allowing a day to intervene as usual. From present indications all of the old champions will be on the mat, with a lot of promising new aspirants for championship honors.

Since McChesney arrived at the Elmendorf Stud in Kentucky he has taken on flesh, and is now the perfect picture of health. Last week he was mated to his first mare at the stud, and he will in the next two months be bred to a number of royally bred young matrons there.

Kate Pelletier, which has been located in Kentucky since W. W. Darden of Nashville, Tenn., purchased her, is barren this season for the first time since her retirement to the stud. She was bred to St. George last Spring. Kate Pelletier is the dam of A. D. Gibson, Monsieur Beaucaire, Ivan the Terrible, and Silk Maid. The latter is also a brood mare, and will drop her first foal this season. She was mated to Pirate of Penzance last Spring.

Peter Wimmer, the trainer, has decided to breed his young mare Penury, by Knight of Thistle, dam Perfidy, by St. Blaise, to High Order, J. B. Haggin's young stallion now in the stud at Elmendorf. Penury is now in foal to J. E. Madden's Kentucky Derby winner, Plaudit. Wimmer trained High Order for Eastin & Larabie, and has always regarded that horse as the best two-year-old he ever handled.

Alforton, J. A. Bennett's young stallion, is now located at J. L. Tarlton's Allendale Farm, but the son of Handsel will not make a public season this year, his stud services being limited to three mares owned by the New Yorker, which raced in his colors on the metropolitan tracks.

"Tim" Donohue, the steeplechase rider, will leave for Washington to-morrow, and will work hard to get in condition by the time the Benning meeting opens. Donohue weighs only 136 pounds, and expects to be able to ride at 130, the minimum weight in steeplechases.

Barney Schreiber, leads the winning owners at the Oakland (Cal.) track. His horses have won almost $30,000 so far, while Walter Jennings is an easy second, but still under $20,000. Jennings and Charlie Henshall, with $4,000 to his credit, are the only Eastern horsemen who have won more than $2,000 there.

WORK STIFFENS GIANTS IN SOUTHERN TRAINING

Vigorous Pushball Exercise Has Its Effect on Players.

THREE MORE MEN REPORT

Manager McGraw Pleased with New Innovations—"Colts" and "Vets" Play Next Saturday.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 3.—Roger Bresnahan, the catcher; Capt. Dan McGann, and Claud Elliott, pitcher, were the new arrivals at the New York National League team's baseball camp to-day. Bresnahan came from Toledo, and Elliott from his home at Pardeeville, Wis. McGann has been taking a training course at the Hot Springs, Ark.

No storms disturbed the practice of the champions to-day. The weather was warm, and they pushed and shoved the pushball morning and afternoon. At the conclusion of the day's work Trainer Harry Tuthill found the demand for liniments and soothing medicinal properties greater than in former days. "Jeff," the colored rubber, enjoyed his busiest four hours' work of the new year.

The crisis has arrived with that division of Giants who acted in good faith with Manager McGraw by adhering to his orders to report on March 1. The stiffness in genuine doses has arrived. The long Winter rest, which had a tendency to permit muscles to lapse into a state of softness, has caused "Christy" Mathewson, "Billy" Gilbert, and others to take their annual vows that in another off season they will never allow themselves to go without some sort of daily exercise to offset work necessary for the next season's work.

But McGraw is smiling, and to-day he enthusiastically announced he would never again permit his athletes to pursue the old-fashioned methods of running or walking to get into physical shape for the championship race. He is tickled with results of innovations he introduced by the medicine and push ball. He assures his men that the soreness will disappear in another forty-eight hours as suddenly as it appeared. His hobby is to induce the "subs" as well as veterans to forget they are in training. In order to do this he is paying more attention right now to the push and medicine ball than to baseball.

The champions' first game is slated for next Saturday. The "colts" and the "vets" will meet in a contest, owing to the many appeals for baseball from the Memphis populace.

AMERICANS READY TO TRAIN.

Griffith and Men Leave To-morrow for Birmingham Training Grounds.

Manager Griffith of the Greater New York Club of the American League completed preparations yesterday for the journey of the members of the team to the training grounds at Birmingham, Ala., and the work that will be required on the trip. In all, twenty-five men will report for duty when they are called out for their first exercise, and there will be but one absentee, "Dave" Fultz, who has concluded that on account of pressure of business he will be unable to take the trip.

At 12:55 to-morrow afternoon Manager Griffith, Pitchers Chesbro, Clark, and Le Roy; Catcher Ira Thomas, "Pat" Dougherty, "Willie" Keeler, and Trainer "Mike" Martin will leave by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and they are due to arrive at Birmingham at 9:15 on Tuesday night. On the way the party will be reinforced by Conroy at Philadelphia, Williams at Washington, and "Smiling Al" Orth at Lynchburg, Va. The balance of the team have been ordered to report to Manager Griffith upon his arrival at Birmingham, and on Wednesday morning, when the men will be called out for practice, the following should be present:

Pitchers—Chesbro, Orth, "Doc" Newton, Clark, Le Roy, "Noodles" Hahn, Hogg, Keefe, Whalen, "Tom" Hughes, and Manager Griffith.

Catchers—McGuire, Kleinow, and Thomas.

Infielders—Chase, Williams, Elberfeld, Laporte, Moriarty, and Yeager.

Outfielders—Keeler, Conroy, Hahn, Dougherty, and Delehanty.

According to the schedule exhibition games will be played with the Birmingham Club on every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday until March 31. Then the team will play with the Atlanta Southern League Club on April 2, with Georgia School of Technology at Atlanta April 3, with the Macon (Ga.) team on April 4, then returning to Atlanta for games on April 5, 6, and 7. The other dates are: 10, Lynchburg, Va.; 11, Providence Club at American League Park, and 12, with Newark of the Eastern League at home.

It is the belief that Manager Griffith has already settled upon the complexion of his team for the championship season as follows: Pitchers and catchers above mentioned; Chase, first base; Williams, second base; Elberfeld, shortstop; Laporte, third base, and Conroy, Hahn, and Keeler in the outfield.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LADS IN FIRST ANNUAL MEET

OVER 600 BOYS COMPETE

Half-Mile Winner Disqualified in Fourteenth Regiment Armory—Fun in Obstacle Race.

Over 600 energetic and lively young athletes, representing more than 40 Sunday schools in Brooklyn churches, took part last night in the first indoor meet of the Sunday School Athletic League of Brooklyn. The games were held in the Fourteenth Regiment Armory, Brooklyn, and owing to the exceptional number of entries, necessitating many heats in the dashes and longer distance races, it was close to midnight before the point trophy was awarded to the Sunday school club scoring the largest number of points. The prize was captured by the Central Congregational Church School after a close fight with the St. Mary's representatives. Up to the last race, the senior one-mile relay, Central Congregational led by 1 point. St. Mary's had no team in that relay and the Congregational runners got second, the Greene Avenue Presbyterian team winning, and the additional three points gave the Central Congregational athletes a comfortable victory.

The half-mile run brought out a small army of lads and before one lap was finished they were strung out in a long line extending nearly half the circuit of the track. Although well contested by the leaders, the race was unfortunate in its ending, as the judges were compelled to disqualify both the first and third men. D. Wickes of the Cuyler Chapel led the field by about three yards, but he was disqualified, as it was found he had previously competed and won a prize as a representative of the Prospect Y. M. C. A. His time was 2:08 1-5. Fortunately for his church club, the second man, L. Meyer, who got the prize, was also from the Cuyler Chapel. L. E. Halsey of the Central Congregational Church was disqualified from third position due to cutting across corners.

The obstacle race at 220 yards for boys from 15 to 18 years of age brought to the track sixty-eight enthusiasts of all sizes, some being diminutive enough for the midget class. Four heats were needed in weeding out the eligible material for the final. During the running of each heat the young athletes on the floor and the spectators in the galleries were practically on the verge of pandemonium. The barrel obstacle presented the greatest difficulty for the young athletes, while furnishing the greatest fun for the crowd in the galleries. L. Walden of the Fennimore Street Methodist Church had this down to a science, however, and his clever sliding through the barrel gave him the victory.

MIDSEASON AT PINEHURST.

Monkey Team Golf Match and College Bridge Tourney Amuse Visitors.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 3.—Midseason is at flood tide here, and the hotels are finding it difficult to provide for the many who desire to come and enjoy the beauties of early Spring. Several of the hotels have already established the usual waiting lists.

One of the merriest frolics of the week was a nine-hole medal play "monkey" team golf match for women, four teams of six each, and captained by Mrs. Myra D. Paterson, New York; Miss Mary Dutton, Boston; Miss Ethel S. Check, East Orange, and Mrs. I. C. B. Dana, Great Barrington, Vt., competing. Mrs. Paterson's and Miss Check's teams tied for first at 80 each, Miss Check winning the play-off. Miss Dutton's team made 81 and Mrs. Dana's 89.

The make-up of the teams, and the assignment of clubs was by lot, each team playing one ball, the requirement being that each player should use the same club throughout, and in order, the brassie playing first; the cleek second, midiron third, niblick fourth, mashie fifth, and putter sixth. Some very amusing situations resulted as a natural consequence, such as driving with niblicks and putters, and putting with brassies and niblicks. Cleeks and putters were also called into use in sand pits and bunkers, but the players enjoyed it all hugely.

A "College Bridge" tournament was given at the Carolina the other evening. Two sections representing seven colleges, Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Columbia, and Dartmouth, participated, play being conducted after the manner of military euchre, each college represented by four players, who alternated in playing other colleges and defending honors at home, college flags in colors being the trophies. Cornell carried off the honors of the evening in Section 1, and Princeton in Section 2, each securing nine flags out of a possible twelve. Princeton was second in Section 1, with eight, and Columbia second in Section 2 by the same score.

There were trophies for the members of the winning team in each division. The make-up of the winning teams include the following: Cornell—Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Lee, Binghamton, N. Y.; Mrs. J. W. Robe, Albany, and Mr. H. T. Converse, Albany. Princeton—Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Hollander, Boston.

Among the informal affairs of the week were card parties given by Mrs. George S. Hill of Marblehead, Mass., and Miss Campbell of Milwaukee. Mrs. A. P. Thompson of Honesdale, Penn., entertained with two at homes.

Among the arrivals from New York are Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Lockwood, Mr. and Mrs. F. Gordon Brown, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Fiske, Miss Virginia Fiske, Dr. William H. Price, Mrs. L. V. Boyd, Miss Lily D. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Duffy, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Van Riper, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Busby, E. Yorke and Miss Yorke, Salem; Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. De Lamater, Westfield; Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Carey, Montclair; Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Connley, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Parker, Paterson; Mrs. Charles Wilkinson, Miss Wilkinson, and Mrs. C. P. Silleck, Ridgewood.

The winners received the liberal handicap of 17 holes. The contest was close, three pairs tying for third place.

Steeplechase, or continuous, golf was a feature of the week, prizes being awarded for the three best net scores. Teeing up was permitted only on the first hole, the entire course being played around, with the finish on the home green. T. E. Jacobs, Wollaston, won first prize; F. M. Zittell, New York, second, and D. E. Little, Wollaston, third.

Walter J. Travis played a thirty-six hole best ball match with J. D. Foot of Apawamis, and Allan Lard of Columbia. Travis was badly off in his game and suffered defeat in both rounds, six and five in the morning and six and four in the afternoon. Summary:

MOTORISTS DON'T MAKE SOCIALISTS, THEY SAY

Not Pictures of Arrogant Wealth, as Dr. Wilson Charged.

MANY FARMERS OWN CARS

"The Poor Man In His Runabout" and His Richer Brother Are Fellows, Mr. Scarritt Says.

The newest charge to be made against automobilists is brought by President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton University, who accuses them of encouraging the spread of Socialism. President Wilson's statement was made before the dinner of the North Carolina Society. "Nothing," he said, "has spread Socialistic feeling in this country more than the use of automobiles. To the countryman they are a picture of arrogance of wealth with all its independence and carelessness."

John Farson, the Chicago banker who was elected to the Presidency of the American Automobile Association last month, said yesterday that he believed if President Wilson would take a flying trip through the farming regions of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and other Western States he would take a different view of the influence exerted by automobiles upon the countryman.

"The very opposite of President Wilson's statement is practically true in the farming districts of the West," he added. "The small machines that have been built in such large numbers recently and that may be purchased for from $750 to $1,250 are being used to a large extent in the West, and the discovery by the rural residents that these cars can be relied upon fro hard usage has occasioned a more friendly feeling toward automobilists in general.

Farmers Own Their Motor Cars.

"Scores of well-to-do farmers are now automobile owners, and where three years ago the horseless vehicle was regarded with suspicion, entirely different sentiments are entertained now. Just as soon as any class of people realize that the automobile is useful for the ordinary work and duties of life apart from its pleasurable attributes as a touring car, it will be regarded with favor, and this feeling is growing all the time in the agricultural parts of the West."

Similar sentiments were expressed by Asa Goddard of Worcester, Mass., a Director of the American Automobile Association, and who has just returned from the big automobile shows in Chicago, Detroit, and Cleveland. "I think," said Mr. Goddard, "another side of the question should be looked at. Those who say that automobiles have encouraged Socialism should try to realize what the automobile industry has done for the commercial prospects of the country.

"The popularity of automobiles has stimulated the manufacture of countless necessities in the automobile trade. The expansion of the big factories in the West is something phenomenal. Thousands of persons find steady employment and at good wages in the manufacturing plants of automobiles. An enormous amount of money is thus finding its way directly into the hands of the workers. Because a few reckless drivers exceed the bounds of courtesy and propriety it is hardly just to place all motor car owners in the class of persons who are exemplifying the arrogance of wealth."

A prominent New Jersey automobilist who made a long trip through the backwoods of Maine more than a year ago said yesterday that in several sections where he did not expect the people would know what an automobile was he found cars in use.

Why They Were Interested.

"I remember one long, dreary stretch of road over which I traveled with some difficulty, not far from the Canadian border," he said, "where there were only eighteen houses in about fifty miles. I was pleased to see that these backwoods residents exhibited considerable interest in my machine, but I soon ascertained the reason. The owners of eleven of those eighteen homes kept automobiles. One of the most intelligent residents owned an old-fashioned second-hand car that he had bought somewhere down in Maine, but he kept it in good repair and had found it much cheaper than horses.

"'Well, you see, it's like this,' he said to me, 'nearly every house on the road is a sort of sportsman's headquarters, and there's nothing that catches the Summer resorters so much as to tell them we will meet them at the station a dozen miles or more away with an automobile. It tickles their fancy and makes good business. Then, when my automobile is not at work, it stands in a shed and costs nothing to keep.'

"Not much Socialism in that up in Maine. I could cite scores of cases in New Jersey where farmers who two years ago could not say enough against automobiles are now motor car owners themselves."

Winthrop E. Scarritt, ex-President of the Automobile Club of America, and who has always urged the practical and considerate use of automobiles, said yesterday:

"It is always embarrassing to differ from so able a thinker as President Wilson, but I feel that he is wrong in his conclusions. In fact, the very reverse is true. No doubt the rich, reckless automobilist by his misbehavior on the highway stirs up wrath and indignation not only from the poor, but from other well-to-do users of the highway as well. It is a matter of criticism for the individual who misbehaves.

A Cause of Good-Fellowship.

"Automobiling more than any other sport I know tends to break down class distinctions and brings the poor man with his small runabout into close sympathy and fellowship with the rich man who owns a high-powered and expensive machine. In other words, they have a common ground upon which they can stand. If the runabout meets with a mishap on the road, the touring car owner does not hesitate to stop and offer such assistance as he can in the lending of tools to make temporary repairs, the supplying of gasoline, or other ways that may be necessary. In short a touch of automobiliousness makes the whole world kin, and the sport tends more and more to draw the divergent classes together."

E. S. Partridge, Vice President of the Decauville Automobile Company, discussed the Socialistic tendencies of automobiles yesterday briefly from the manufacturer's viewpoint. He said:

"I trust that President Wilson will not request us to abandon a pastime that has practically revolutionized traffic and done so much for the commercial world. We have become accustomed to the outburst from time to time of occasionally discontented minds not familiar with the subject of automobiling, and have allowed these attacks to go unanswered, but as a matter of cold fact, if any one will investigate he will find that there are not as many crazy drivers of automobiles as there are crazy drivers of horses, bicycles, or other vehicles."

LENTEN DAYS AT LAKEWOOD.

Athletics and Outdoor Life Taking the Attention of Guests.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, March 3.—Boating on Lake Carasaljo was enjoyed by many visitors this week.

The sport of riding to hounds is enjoying a revival. Henry Lloyd Herbert is arranging with P. F. Collier to bring the hounds of the Monmouth County Hunt to Lakewood for a run. It has been planned to hold a meet each Saturday for the rest of the season.

In honor of Mrs. Charles L. Lindley, who has returned from abroad, Mrs. Arthur B. Claflin gave a reception at her home at the head of Lake Carasaljo on Tuesday.

Mrs. Nellie Baldwin and Mrs. Alice Corey of New York have taken apartments at the Lakewood Hotel.

Indoor tennis and squash are the favorite pastimes of the score or more young women of New York who are spending Lent at the Lakewood Hotel. Bowling is more popular than ever before at the alleys at the Lakewood Hotel and the Laurel House.

To celebrate the tenth anniversary of their wedding, which occurred this week, Mr. and Mrs. Harlan F. Robinson of New York invited several friends to a dinner in the palm room of the Lakewood Hotel. Tin plates with old-fashioned yellow handled knives and forks were set, and tin cups took the place of goblets. Two members of Berger's Orchestra started to play the "Wedding March" from "Lohengrin" with tinwhistles as Mr. and Mrs. Robinson and their guests entered the dining room, but they were suppressed.

The Sisters of St. Joseph, who have recently established a hospital here, are to hold a fair and bazaar in the ballroom of the Lakewood Hotel on March 15 and 16.

BEACH SKYSCRAPER OPEN.

The Marlborough-Blenheim Filling Up—Boardwalk Crowded.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, March 3.—The Dennis was reopened last Saturday, and is entertaining a large quota of Lenten visitors. The Hotel Islesworth, at Virginia Avenue and the beach, was reopened today.

One feature of the new $200,000 hotel to be erected at Longport will be the roof garden and sun parlor, which will overlook the ocean and Great Egg Harbor Bay. The Pennsylvania Railroad will beautify the grounds surrounding its Longport station.

The new Marlborough-Blenheim was opened on Thursday with accommodations for 1,100 guests. The Blenheim, which is the new part, is twelve stories high on the ocean front, and built of steel and reinforced concrete. The building, which occupies 150 feet on the ocean front, added to the Marlborough front, gives a total frontage to the Marlborough-Blenheim of 350 feet upon the Boardwalk.

The Lenten season and Easter holidays will break all records for similar periods at Atlantic City. More than 100,000 visitors were here for Washington's Birthday, and the places of those who returned home have been rapidly filled. The Boardwalk is crowded day and night. The city officials have men at work preparing the Boardwalk electric festoons. They were turned on a night or two ago, and will burn nightly until after Easter Sunday.

The contract for construction of the new building at Tennessee Avenue and the beach for the Childs Restaurant Company has been awarded to a local firm for $75,000.

A progressive euchre was held a few evenings ago at the Hotel Rudolf for the benefit of the Atlantic City Hospital under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of that institution. A thousand persons participated, and a large sum was realized. The different tables were termed forts, and each named after a hotel or avenue of the city.

Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, is occupying a suite at the Brighton.

The Delft Café at the Hotel Wiltshire was thrown open for the season last Thursday. Berkshire Inn, on Virginia Avenue, was opened last Thursday.

James E. Prindle of New York, of the Norfolk and Western Railway, spent the week at the St. Charles.

AUTOS AS CARRIERS ON ROADS IN AFRICA

Experiments to Do Away with Present Costly System.

FAILURE IN SOME PROVINCES

European powers have been hastening railroad construction to serve their interests in Africa. Over 14,000 miles of lines are now in operation. Most of the roads in tropical Africa connect navigable parts of rivers, so that by combining land and water transportation steam connections are secured between the coasts and districts far inland.

Improved transportation in the hotter parts of the continent, however, is advancing too slowly for commercial needs; and in their anxiety to do away with the slow and costly system of carriage on the backs of men the powers are in several places trying to introduce the automobile as a freight and passenger carrier.

The experiment is succeeding better in some regions than others. It is as yet most successful in Madagascar. It has been introduced only in the past few months in the Katanga Province of the Upper Congo and promises well there. It has been almost a failure in the French colony of the Western Soudan for reasons that should have been obvious from the first; and it has been anything but a brilliant success in German Southwest Africa.

Automobile transportation in a commercial sense can be only a temporary expedient, for cheap transportation cannot be secured by dividing freight, often of small value in proportion to bulk and weight, into small automobile loads. It is as true in Africa as elsewhere that cheap freight carriage can be secured only by the concentration of a large bulk of merchandise in large loads moved by the most powerful means of traction.

The trouble with the automobile in the French Soudan is that the authorities have not been willing to expend the large sums required for good roads, and in the tropics where the Winter rains are often of extreme violence, poor roads are torn to pieces in a day and cannot be made usable again for automobiles without great loss of time and large expense. So the two automobile roads in the French Soudan have been nothing but impassable quagmire four months at a time.

It has been proved in Madagascar and Katanga that good roads can be built and kept in order with little or no interruption. The automobile route from the east coast of Madagascar to the capital, Antananarivo, about 120 miles inland, has revolutionized transportation. As late as 1901 the cost of moving freight between the sea and the capital was $75 per ton. The new road, completed in 1902, was finely built and well drained. For the first year wagons hauled by men superseded porterage on the backs of men, and now automobiles have largely taken the place of wagons, and freight rates have been reduced three-fourths. A daily service of automobiles for passengers and freight is maintained between the Indian Ocean and Antananarivo. The people are happy over the great change, but the automobile will resign in favor of the railroad in 1908 if the line now started is completed in contract time.

An equally remarkable development is in progress in the heart of Africa, where automobile freight wagons are now running over the savannas and through the forests. From Stanley Pool there is steamboat transportation for about 1,000 miles up the Congo, the Kasai, and Sankuru Rivers to the head of navigation on the Sankuru, at the western edge of Katanga Province. Katanga is one of the newest parts of the Congo State, but it is rich in rubber, minerals, and agricultural products.

It was desired to provide better means of transport than human porters across the province from the last steamboat landing on the Sankuru to the foot of Lake Mwero, where one of the finest stations in the State has been developed. The distance in a straight line is about 400 miles, and for nearly half the way navigable waters may be utilized.

It was decided to fill in the gaps between these rivers with automobile roads, and this work is now in progress. At last accounts fifty miles of road had been completed to the first navigable waterway leading in the desired direction. Bridges have been thrown across rivers; a rock-ballasted road with perfect drainage has been built in the best European manner, and the automobile service is in operation. The prospect of complete success is so promising that the second section of the road is being pushed forward, and another and more northerly road has been started toward a freight collecting and distributing centre, where it is proposed to keep parties of porters to carry the auto-freightage in various directions.

Thus the automobile has already become a factor in the early stages of African development; and there is reason to hope that wherever decent roads are provided for the machine, it will do its work fairly well till railroads take its place.

DOUBTS HEATHCOTE'S LOSS.

A Creditor Says He Thinks Jeweler Hid Missing Diamonds.

Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed William D. W. Miller receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of Edwin C. Heathcote, wholesale jeweler of 7 Maiden Lane, who says he lost $12,000 worth of diamonds while in a Brooklyn Bridge car. The receiver was appointed on the application of David Mayer, a creditor for $1,870.

Mr. Mayer stated in his application that he does not believe Mr. Heathcote's story of the loss of the diamonds, but believes that Mr. Heathcote has secreted them.

The stock on hand is estimated by Mr. Mayer at $2,000.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

NEWMAN SOFRANSKI.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Newman Sofranski, manufacturer of cloaks and suits, at 114 West Seventeenth Street, by these creditors: H. A. Caesar & Co., $420; Boesneck, Broessel & Co., $259. It was alleged that he is insolvent, has made preferential payments of $10,000, has transferred merchandise and accounts of $10,000, and removed a large part of his property. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed Josiah T. Newcombe receiver of the assets on the application of Myers & Goldsmith, attorneys for the petitioning creditors, who stated that the liabilities are $20,000 and assets in sight only $200 or $300. His stock, valued at $10,000, it was said, suddenly disappeared the last week, and he has also disappeared from his place of business, taking his books with him. Mr. Sofranski began business in 1898, was in partnership with his brother Henry from Jan. 1, 1900, to March 17, 1904, when they dissolved, Henry continuing the business. Newman was then for a while in the auction business, but gave it up, and in July last started in the cloak business again at 4 West Sixteenth Street, using the style of the Manhattan Garment Company, supposed to be worth $60,000. On Feb. 1, 1906, he moved to 114 West Seventeenth Street, where he occupied a large loft, part of which was also occupied by Henry. Newman did a mail order business there, and said he purchased his goods from Henry and another firm. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against Henry on Feb. 3, 1906.

GREENSTEIN & HIRSCH.—Greenstein & Hirsch, composed of Joseph Greenstein and Kalman Hirsch, builders, of 55 East 117th Street, have filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $115,988, and nominal assets of $123,000, consisting of real estate, 16 to 20 East 103d Street, valued at $120,000, on which there are two mortgages and liens aggregating $109,471, and a bond and mortgage of $3,000, which is in litigation. Among the secured creditors are Adelstein & Avenstine, $55,528; D. L. Einstein, $21,000; Benjamin Stern, $12,500; William T. Hookey, $2,000; Bell Brothers, $673, and the Builders Stone Contracting Company, $500. They began building operations on Oct. 1, 1904.

JAMES W. CARROLL.—James W. Carroll, clerk at 366 Lenox Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $4,857, contracted in 1901, and no assets.

JOHN H. DARROW.—John H. Darrow, liquor dealer of Poughkeepsie, has filed a petition in bankruptcy here with liabilities of $2,260 and no assets.

WILLIAM BEVERLY HARISON.—William Beverly Harison, school-book publisher, formerly of 65 East Fifty-ninth Street, has received a discharge from bankruptcy from Judge Holt of the United States District Court. A creditors' petition in bankruptcy was filed against him on March 23, 1904, and his liabilities were $14,111, and assets $11,980. He went through bankruptcy once before, in 1899.

M. LEWIS & SON.—Schedules in bankruptcy of M. Lewis & Son, importers of fur skins, at 41 East Ninth Street, show liabilities of $22,911 and nominal assets of $31,940, consisting of cash in bank, $8; stock, $300; fixtures, $200, and outstanding accounts, $31,432. Among the creditors are David Greenfest, Brooklyn, $8,000, secured; William H. Fleet, $2,000, secured; A. Hollander & Son, $2,459; Edgar Lehman, $2,226, and E. Rump, $1,617.

Out of Town.

BOSTON.—William R. Dean, a lawyer of Taunton, filed a petition in bankruptcy this morning. His liabilities are $61,913.89, and his assets $49,855.48.

SAVOY HOTEL

LONDON.

OVERLOOKING THE RIVER AND EMBANKMENT GARDENS.

Never has the Press of England shown greater unanimity than in its praise of the additions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel, London, upon which have been spent upwards of one million pounds sterling.

Elegance and artistic character are everywhere. Nothing has been omitted that could conduce to the comfort and content of the visitor. Ladies' Field.

The most beautiful hotel in Europe.—Outlook.

An ideal home for twentieth century London—Queen.

The great pile of buildings included in this latest addition to the architectural sites of London forms a combination of luxury and beauty which cannot be surpassed in the wide world. The New Savoy is a vast palace of a thousand splendours, of a thousand surprising and delightful innovations. Nothing that could contribute to the comfort, the smoothness, and the joy of life is wanting which the inventive genius of America and Europe could supply, or that the taste and skill of the world's schools of art in all its branches could furnish. The place is, in its way, a very triumph of genius. Its match is not to be found in London, nor in Paris, nor, indeed, in any capital of this little planet. To do it justice in a necessarily brief article is impossible. Having rambled through its glorious salons and galleries, and ante-chambers, up and down marble staircases of noble breadth, beneath panelled ceilings, adorned in relief with exquisite golden tracery, one feels that all this royal magnificence, this opulent beauty, might well inspire a volume which should be bound in white satin and gold.—Western Mail.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT.—A break of nearly 2c a bushel marked the trading in wheat yesterday, representing the lowest prices of the season. The market was under heavy selling pressure all day, including considerable on stop-loss account, although the operations by shorts were more than usually aggressive. Practically all the news was bearish. Liverpool closed partly ⅛d net lower, Paris declined 5@15 points, and Budapest 4 points, while Berlin was partly ¼ mark higher. At 1 o'clock, when prices reached their lowest level, May was quoted 85c, July 84⅞c, and September 83⅞c. The cash market in New York closed as follows: No. 2 red, 84¼c, elevator, and 87c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 89c, free on board, afloat.

CORN.—At the opening corn was steady, and a shade higher. Its influences were the advance of ¼@⅜d at Liverpool, and wet weather in the Ohio Valley. Subsequent declines were based on the declines in wheat and liquidation. At 1 o'clock the market was quoted in New York as follows: May, 48⅝c; July, 49¼c, and September, 49¾c. The cash market was easier, closing as follows: No. 2 corn, 49c, elevator, and 47½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 48½c, and No. 2 yellow, 47½c, free on board, afloat.

COTTON.—The cotton market was active and firm during yesterday's short session, on the advance in Liverpool, the big spot business in the English market, bullish week-end figures, and over-night buying orders attracted by Friday's ginning reports. The close was steady at a net advance of from 6 to 15 points.

The market opened firm at an advance of from 7 to 13 points on the cables. There was active buying for scattering account, but there was also very heavy realizing, and the market during the early session was irregular, easing off to about 10.75 for May and 10.90 for July. Later, however, the market firmed up on the continued buying through wire and commission houses, as well as support from local bulls, and prices worked up to a new high point for the session, with May selling at 10.82, or about 42 points above the low level of the week. The close was within a couple of points of the top. Contract prices ranged as follows:

SAYS FLYNN IS INSOLVENT.

Creditor Files a Bankruptcy Petition Against Former Trolley Magnate.

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed here against Patrick H. Flynn, a well-known contractor, trolley magnate, and capitalist, formerly of Brooklyn, who now resides at Livingston Manor, Sullivan County, N. Y., by Rose & Putzel, attorneys for John H. Gallagher, of Boonton, N. J., a creditor for $1,666 on a judgment obtained in New Jersey on Jan. 17, 1904, for work. An attachment was issued in that suit, and a levy was made on two actions of Mr. Flynn against the Jersey City Water Supply Company, which actions were appraised at $10, but nothing was realized thereon.

It was alleged as acts of bankruptcy that Mr. Flynn at Jersey City between Nov. 3 and to date permitted to be sold and removed a part of his property, transferred property to creditors to prefer them, suffered creditors to obtain preference through legal proceedings, paid $4,516 cash to Peter Hume, a creditor, on Nov. 4 last, and admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts.

A few years ago Mr. Flynn was reputed to be a millionaire. He was formerly President of the Nassau Street Railway Company of Brooklyn, was interested in other trolley lines there and in the Bronx, was a Director in banks and trust companies and various other corporations. In 1899 he was a leading spirit in the Flynn Syndicate, which organized the Jersey City Water Supply Company, which was to build reservoirs and aqueducts to bring water from the hills of Northern New Jersey to Jersey City, the contract for which was over $7,000,000. Since then there has been much litigation over the matter.

Last year several judgments were obtained in this city against Mr. Flynn and others, among them being one in favor of Russell Sage for $108,862, another in favor of Mr. Sage for $54,951, and one in favor of the General Electric Company for $39,911.

Ramie Underwear Assessed at High Rates—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Marion De Vries, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a claim filed by the Bingheim Schlichten Ramie Manufacturing Company of New York regarding the classification of ramie knit hose and underwear. The merchandise was assessed for duty at various rates, and was claimed to be dutiable at 45 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of ramie.

In a decision by Judge Somerville, the board sustained a protest filed by C. D. Bunker & Co. of San Francisco. The action of the Collector in levying a 20 per cent. duty on oil cake meal was reversed and the merchandise accorded free entry.

Other importers' claims sustained were filed by Charles T. Howe & Co., New York; the Ogdensburg Coal and Towing Company, and the George Hall Coal Company, Oswego, N. Y.

The board denied claims filed by Park & Tilford, Balfour, Williamson & Co., F. Casimano, and Sahadi Brothers, New York; Castle, Gotthell & Overton, Philadelphia; the Port Huron Shipbuilding Company, Port Huron, Mich.; Wilfred Schade & Co., St. Louis, and H. C. Smith, Bangor, Me.

SAY MAID IS A THIEF.

Detectives Find Many Pawn Tickets in Marie Peddrone's Possession.

Marie Peddrone, 18 years old, who had been employed as maid by several wealthy families, was a prisoner in the Tombs Court yesterday on a charge of grand larceny. A pawn ticket for a diamond ring valued at $600 was found in her pocketbook. The ring had been pawned for $25.

Mrs. Ruth Lancaster of Manasquan, N. J., was in court and identified the ring as her property, and Marie Peddrone as her former maid.

Detective Sergts. Gargan and Tinker told Magistrate Steinert that the prisoner had been lady's maid to families in England and this country and had traveled all over the world. The detectives said that they found in her possession scores of pawn tickets representing rings, pins, and other feminine ornaments. Among those who have employed Marie Peddrone are Mrs. Lewis, 38 West Eighty-seventh Street; Mrs. MacCameron, 256 East Avenue, Rochester, and Mrs. Jarenski, 50 East Seventy-fourth Street.

Magistrate Steinert remanded her until Monday.

TARIFF WAR OVER CLOWNS.

They're Toys, Say Germans—"Manufactures," Appraisers Decide.

The ingenuity of German manufacturers of toys is responsible for the latest tariff controversy between Germany and the United States. The trouble all arose over the action of an importer, who attempted to enter figures of dressed clowns at the rates of duty provided for "toys." The figures, about twenty-two inches in height, were affixed to a platform, and fitted with springs, so that the clowns did a variety of "stunts." The New York Custom House officers promptly listed the things as "manufactures of metal" at 45 per cent. As "toys" the figures would pay only 35 per cent.

The foreign manufacturers instructed importers on this side to bring suit. Yesterday the Board of General Appraisers, in a decision by I. F. Fischer, denied the contention of the importers for duty under the toy schedule. Counsel for the importers said that the Custom House authorities were taking the clowns too seriously. The Federal Circuit Court will be asked for a verdict.

MARCH 1906

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular—Banks Report Small Cash Loss.

Loans Heavily Reduced — Copper Shares Fall Again.

Under the influence of the announcement that $10,000,000 of Government funds were to be deposited in National banks to better the money situation and helped by the higher range of quotations from London, together with the Pennsylvania's annual report, showing that nearly 10 per cent. has been earned on the company's stock, the stock market displayed general strength at the opening of yesterday's short session and for an hour or more prices rose with considerable vigor. With the publication of the bank statement, which proved a much more favorable document than had been generally expected, a selling movement directed against Amalgamated Copper and Reading developed and the sharp declines which followed in these issues led to rather general unsettlement, lasting to the close, in the course of which all the active stocks lost a large part of their earlier gains, while some of them fell to figures below those obtaining on Friday night. The declines in the two issues mentioned were entirely unconnected with any developments of the day, and were to all appearances due mainly, if not wholly, to the operations of professional speculators. Union Pacific, the most heavily traded in stock of the session, at its best sold nearly a point above its closing price, which represented only a fractional change from the previous close. The Metropolitan shares were once more strong, while Norfolk and Western, following the publication of its January statement disclosing an increase of $296,000 in net earnings for the month, rose substantially, although Pennsylvania, with the same source of inspiration, ended the day at a slight loss. United States Rubber shares were once more active at advancing prices, the purchases coming from the same quarter which has provided the activity marking these stocks for some days. Trading was on a largely diminished scale and the distribution of business was unusually poor.

As a result of the interposition of foreign lenders and the stock market liquidation of the week, the banks were able to report yesterday a decrease of $8,463,000 in loans, and this change, together with a cash loss some $2,000,000 less than the $3,300,000 maximum loss indicated by preliminary estimates of the week's currency movements, led to a reduction of only $116,975 in surplus reserves, the item standing now at $5,008,750, which compares with $8,389,700 in 1905, $29,943,350 in 1904, and $606,975 in 1903. The influence of the deposit of Government funds with the banks was minimized yesterday by general expectations that, owing to the method used in the distribution of this money and the disposition on the part of bankers at this time to prefer the demands of trade, the transaction would prove of only nominal service to the stock market. However this may turn out, the relief to the money market should be important, and local banks are altogether likely to benefit through a curtailment of demands from centres where the money is placed. Foreign markets were strong yesterday, that of London being helped by the better tone in the Kaffir stocks and by the purchases in that market of American securities for Paris account.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS

Trust Companies Pay on Nearly All Accounts.

HIGHEST AVERAGE RATE 2.99%

This Paid by One of the Large Institutions—Showing of Newer Companies in Matter of Interest Payments.

Supt. Kilburn in his annual report to the New York State Legislature on the condition of the trust companies in the State, said in reference to the interest allowed on deposits by the trust companies:

"The one feature of the companies' expense items which stands out as seeming to demand thoughtful consideration is the very high proportion which interest requirements bear to total outgo. No less than 71 5-10 per cent. of the whole expense account of these institutions consists of interest paid on deposits. The price so paid for interest is too great, and the companies ought to institute a reform in this regard."

The payment of excessive interest by the trust companies has frequently been referred to as the chief evil in the trust company situation by those who in the long-standing rivalry between the banks and the trust companies have taken the bank side of the question. Supt. Kilburn indorses this criticism to a certain extent when he says that the trust companies ought to institute a reform in the matter of the payment of interest on deposits.

The recently published quarterly statements of the trust companies give figures which make it possible to show in the case of each institution what proportion of its total deposits carry interest and what in each case is the average rate of interest. The showing is an interesting one in many ways. The figures for a score or more of the New York City trust companies whose reports have come to hand are given below:

	Total Deposits.	Deposits Bearing Interest.	Av'ge Int. Rate.
Bowling Gr'n Trust.	$21,085,329	$19,497,943	2.72

Van Norden Trust	8,984,450	7,492,871	2.86
Windsor Trust	10,187,774	10,007,330	2.75

The trust companies organized in recent years are those which have been most frequently censured on the ground that they were allowing unusually high rates of interest on deposits for the purpose of building up a large business in a short time. In view of these strictures it is interesting to note that the highest average interest rate allowed by any of the trust companies included in this list is the 2.99 per cent. paid by the Mercantile Trust Company, while the Van Norden Trust Company shows an average rate of 2.86 per cent., the Mutual Alliance an average of 2.81 per cent., and the Broadway Trust Company an average rate of 2.491 per cent. The United States Trust Company, a conservative among conservatives, reports an average interest rate of 2.90, and even higher rates are paid by the Metropolitan and the Colonial Trust.

Analysis of the character of the deposits carried by the several institutions, however, requires some modification of the impression gathered from these figures at first sight. The United States Trust Company, for instance, is enabled to pay a high average rate for the reason that a very large proportion, considerably more than one-third, of its deposits are held against time certificates of deposits while the Van Norden Trust Company, as an illustration of the newer companies, carries only a very small amount of time deposits—$222,350 out of total deposits of $8,984,450. On the other hand, the Mercantile Trust, which pays the highest rate of all, has time deposits of only $1,325,564 out of a total of over $45,000,000, but a special factor in this case is the relatively large amount of funds held in trust amounting to more than $3,800,000.

It is to be noted that very few of the trust companies have more than a trifling amount of money upon which no interest is being paid. Here and there in the list are institutions which have from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 out of a total of ten to twenty times those sums, which are not credited with interest. The only notable exception is the Knickerbocker Trust Company, which out of total deposits in excess of $66,000,000 has about $6,000,000 upon which no interest is being paid.

Much interest would attach to a statement by the banks showing the amount of their deposits upon which interest is paid and the average rate of this interest. It is, of course, safe to assume that the average would be lower than that paid by the trust companies inasmuch as the banks are known to carry very large amounts of deposits upon which no interest at all is paid. At the same time it is more than probable that the large banks which carry heavy deposits of out-of-town institutions, all of which carry interest, would show very heavy expenses under the head of interest paid on deposits.

In his report Supt. Kilburn shows that the interest paid by trust companies amounted to 47¼ per cent. of their gross earnings, and to 71½ per cent. of the total expense account of the trust companies. This, he says, is entirely too large a proportion. What the solution may be does not clearly appear. A general agreement among the trust companies to lower their rate of interest would doubtless accomplish the result. Such action, however, could be effective only if unanimous, and the probability is that it would be found extremely difficult to secure a general agreement on this point among the trust companies.

The same result might be brought about by the trust companies adopting a rule to pay interest only on accounts which carried a relatively large balance, so that interest would be done away with on the numerous small accounts which are now carried by the trust companies, the relative expense of which is large and the earnings upon which are necessarily small. Some of the trust companies, however, have built up a business on the payment of interest on precisely such accounts, and in considering such a plan these institutions would doubtless be governed by the fear that these accounts, if interest were stopped, would be transferred to the banks.

The figures reported to the Superintendent of Banking contain no open suggestion of the 4 and 4½ per cent. rates of interested advertised by some of the trust companies. It is an admitted fact that in many cases some of the newer trust companies go to extremes to secure business. This is clearly shown by the promiscuous solicitation of accounts and the promise of previously unheard-of interest rates on ordinary deposits. Some of the newer trust companies even offer to send collectors around to receive the deposits of their customers, who are thus to be relieved of the necessity of calling at the trust company's office. The desire for increased business seems in some cases to have extended to the old-line trust companies. One of the largest recently sent out circulars requesting deposits, and followed these written requests by personal solicitation of accounts. In this particular case the Directors of the institution shortly put an end to this innovation, but the incident illustrates the modern desire for increased business, which in some quarters has led to the abandonment of conservatism.

BANK'S CAPITAL INCREASED.

Coal & Iron National to Issue $200,000 More Stock.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Coal and Iron National Bank has been called for April 2 to vote on a proposed increase of the capital stock from $300,000 to $500,000. All but 10 per cent. of the new stock will be offered to shareholders at 220. The 10 per cent. withheld from subscription, together with fractional shares, will be sold, according to the plan, at not less than $250.

The bank has been designated by the Superintendent of Banks as a reserve agent for State banks. The bank's last report to the Controller showed a surplus of $180,000 and undivided profits of $75,935.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Lessening in New Business Stops Increase of Unfilled Orders.

New orders for steel products have begun to show the diminuation which always is looked for at this, the dull, season in the selling branch of the steel trade. Consequently reports of record increases in unfilled orders are no longer heard from.

A representative of the United States Steel Corporation is quoted as saying:

"Not in history has the outlook for steel been so bright. There is very little steel that has already been contracted for that will not be specified against. Consumers are satisfied with conditions, and the same applies to the producers. Pig iron is a trifle weak, but more of it is being consumed than ever before, which indicates that buyers cannot hold off for any great length of time."

TO BE CALLED HUDSON TRUST

Company Will Succeed United National Bank, If Stockholders Agree.

The new trust company, which, if the stockholders agree, will succeed the United National Bank, will probably be called the Hudson Trust Company. Shortly after E. R. Thomas and a number of his banking associates purchased a controlling interest in the United National Bank, circulars were sent to the stockholders by the new officers in behalf of a plan to change the bank into a trust company.

It was learned yesterday that O. F. Thomas, E. R. Thomas, W. L. Moyer, and John Gerken, the latter, President of the United National, have taken steps to incorporate the Hudson Trust Company.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 3.—New York Exchange was 15c discount. Time and call loans, 5@5½ per cent. A report in La Salle Street to-day had it that one reason why Swift & Co. shares have been firm since the successful flotation of the new stock issue in January is that the stock will be listed on the New York Stock Exchange ere long. Such men of the street as gave credence to the report suggested that it might mean a much broader market for the securities, a thing greatly needed in view of the expanded capital of the company.

Furthermore, it might mean something of a shifting in the ownership of the stock which up to the present has been rather well concentrated. Prices of the shares to-day were little changed.

In other quarters local trading was dull. Match improved to 138, Subway sold between 45 and 46. National Carbon jumped 5 points, to 95.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 3.—The market was dull and draggy. In a good many stocks only a single transaction was recorded, and that for an odd lot. With very few exceptions, there was only one price made, even for some of the stocks which are usually leaders of the market in all important movements. Commission houses were complaining of the dullness but thought it preferable to their customers loading up with so much uncertainty regarding the money outlook. Total sales 11,058 shares.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Dullness and Weakness Caused by Heavy Slump in Kaffirs.

South African Mine Stocks Lower Than at any Previous Time for Years, Owing to the Government's Course — General Despondency Even Affects Americans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, March 3.—The stock markets have been dull and weak since last Saturday, and the chief cause of this condition is believed to be the deplorable state into which the mines department has been led by the new Government's course respecting South Africa.

All Kaffirs are lower than at any previous time for years, and a large number are lower than ever before. The uncertainty as to what will happen in South Africa, coupled with the fact that the uncertainty is likely to be prolonged for many months, has caused realization sales, and as they have proceeded prices have fallen. The sales this week have resulted in heavy losses to hundreds who have sacrificed their shares and in an enormous shrinkage in the value of the holdings of those who have made up their minds to hold on.

A slight easing of money rates has kept consols and other gilt-edged stocks from succumbing to the adverse influences of the Kaffir market and to the rather unfavorable trend of international politics, but other departments have not fared so well. British rails, for example, have shown a downward tendency in spite of the fact that traffic reports are fairly satisfactory.

Americans have also been neglected, with the exception of one or two stocks, and this not simply because of bearish reports from New York, but also because of the general despondency induced by the Kaffir situation.

Foreign Government stocks have attracted little notice. Naturally depressed by the news from Algeciras and St. Petersburg, there was nothing in the conditions in the London market to help them in the slightest degree.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, March 3.—Money was in quieter demand in the market to-day and supplies were more plentiful, owing to Government disbursements. The demands next week, apart from the Stock Exchange settlement, will not be heavy, while $10,000,000 in Treasury bills will be redeemed March 7. Discounts were quiet.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was quiet, and the market had a better tone. Consols improved and home rails hardened in places.

Americans opened irregular, moved to well above parity, and became strong on New York support. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were the features. A moderate amount of business was transacted, and prices closed firm. Grand Trunk at the opening was in good demand on the traffic returns, but later it sagged somewhat.

Foreigners were upheld and Japanese were bid up. Anacondas and Rio Tintos were wanted on the copper position.

Kaffirs frequently improved.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 103¾.

Bullion amounting to £539,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £100,000 was withdrawn for shipment to South America.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 16.60; Lisbon, 4.50.

A LIMITED OFFERING OF Northern Iron & Steel Co.

6 per cent Preferred Stock at $60 Per Share,
NETTING THE INVESTOR 10 PER CENT

The Northern Iron and Steel Plant at Collingwood, Ontario, comprising steel open hearth furnaces, power house, rolling mills, hydraulic plant, &c., is now complete in every detail. The equipment is new throughout and includes all necessary appliances for the most economic handling of the product.

$300,000.00 NET PROFIT PER ANNUM

or 12 PER CENT on the company's comparatively small capitalization of $2,500,000, is conceded by experts to be an extremely conservative estimate.

"The plant is new and in first-class condition, and should be a good money-making proposition, and I consider the estimate made by you of the possible earnings a modest one."—ARJA WILLIAMS, late Assistant Comptroller, Lackawanna Steel & Iron Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

"Under existing conditions, it is unquestionable that the output of this mill, no matter what channels would be adopted, would find ready and quick sale at remunerative prices, and would insure to the investor early and profitable returns, and in view of the fact that they have a customer at the door for a large proportion of the output, any further items of this mill will be proportionately advantageous. As far as the financial results, as given in the prospectus are concerned, I wish to state that I consider them below the level of conservatism, as the plant should show far in excess of this amount given."—ALBERT L. SCHULTZ, C. E., Mem. Am. Soc. C. E., Pittsburg, Pa.

"I have been for four years superintendent of Hamilton Steel and Iron Co.'s plant and am well posted on the various plants throughout the United States and Canada. Speaking from my knowledge of other plants, and my practical experience as a steel maker, I have no hesitancy in saying that, with the modern mills you have at Collingwood and the well designed layout you have there, you should be able to turn out finished steel in the form of small shapes, bars and rods at about one-half the labor cost of any other mill in Canada."—F. B. McKUNE, Hamilton, Ont.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Stockholders of the Quaker Oats Company have been called to a special meeting to be held in Jersey City on March 17. The meeting will vote on the question of authorizing an issue of $1,000,000 additional preferred and $500,000 common stock.

The Buffalo & Susquehanna Railroad Company has applied to the Stock Exchange to list an additional $1,000,000 of preferred stock.

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

The only reason for selling stocks on Wednesday of last week which had not existed on the preceding Monday was that at mid-week prices were falling rapidly. Everybody who might be interested knew on Monday that the Great Northern's ore deal with the United States Steel Corporation had fallen into difficulties, and the limitations of the money market had been apparent to careful traders for some time, but because stocks were very strong at the beginning of the week speculative holders of securities hoped for the best and waited. On Tuesday the same aggressive Western contingent which had been bidding up prices turned abruptly to the bear side of the market and openly sold stocks on a heavy scale. As soon as prices began to break all of the bearish factors which had been minimized on Monday—notably the blocking of Mr. Hill's ore deal and the tightness of money—assumed command of speculative thought, and the result was a general selling movement, under which prices broke violently.

Heartbreaking declines occurred in the Hill stocks. These had been advancing very rapidly in anticipation of a handsome distribution to follow the closing of the ore deal. At the lowest prices last week Great Northern preferred showed a decline of 42½ points and Northern Pacific a decline of 26¼ points from the high prices of February. Consolidated Gas continued in its downward course, touching 152, a quotation which, theoretically, could be justified only on the supposition that the dividend will have to be reduced. These movements, it will be seen, were due to special causes. The extreme weakness of smelting stocks and "coppers" was a matter of more general interest. The bear crowd addressed itself industriously to "coppers," making a target of Amalgamated, American Smelting and Refining and National Lead, the Guggenheim stocks so-called, broke violently. In these issues there was a stale bull account which became vulnerable as soon as the pool support hitherto extended to both securities was withdrawn or lowered.

In the general list the bear crowd made headway more slowly, and toward the end of the week it began to look as if the expenditure of effort required to influence fresh liquidation was out of proportion to the results achieved. Perhaps the best support seen anywhere in the railroad list was that accorded to Union Pacific on the decline to 149⅞. The stock was twice driven down to 149⅛ and stopped there, and on Saturday it recovered to 152⅜. It closed the week at a decline of only one-half of 1 per cent. On both Friday and Saturday the bear crowd hammered Amalgamated Copper, with a view, apparently, to unsettling the general market and facilitating purchases of Union Pacific and other stocks for short account.

As a 6 per cent. stock, with enormous liquid treasury assets, and with a reasonable prospect of going upon a 7 per cent. dividend basis at the next semi-annual period, Union Pacific has a way of looking cheap below 150, and shrewd market critics would be greatly surprised to see any bear combination make commissions out of it under that figure. It is interesting to know that while you can buy puts on Union Pacific under 150, on close terms, calls between 150 and 160 are very hard to buy. The stock holds a very commanding position in the market. Considering the extent to which bullish speculation has converged upon it in recent months, its resistance to selling pressure of any origin whatsoever is remarkable. On several occasions it has stood up under inside selling until those who had supposed that they controlled its market were compelled to retrace their operations at a loss. The miscellaneous bull account was put to a pretty fair test last week, and was found to be much less vulnerable than bearish speculators had supposed.

The bear crowd had evidently intended to make as bad a market as possible in Saturday's short session, as it is good bear tactics to force a weak closing at the end of the week in order to influence outside selling on the Monday, but its plans were upset by the announcement made after the close of trading on Friday that Secretary Shaw would deposit $10,000,000 of Government money in National banks. This news took the bear party completely by surprise. Some very prominent bankers were equally surprised, having had not the slightest hint of Mr. Shaw's intention. The market opened up sharply on Saturday, became dull, sagged a bit, and closed without special feature, barring the weakness of Amalgamated Copper. The bear crowd pursued its programme in that stock, selling it aggressively from above 107 down to 104¼. The prediction had been made that it would be closed under 104. It closed at 104¼. The bear crowd whose operations so dominated the speculative situation last week is believed to be heavily committed to the short side of Amalgamated Copper.

The question of paramount interest at present is whether the decline that has occurred since the culmination of the January boom is but a reaction in a bull market or the beginning of a general readjustment. It may be said with considerable assurance that banking opinion in Wall Street is strongly in favor of the view that it is but a reaction in a bull market, and that a resumption of the advance may be looked for as soon as conditions, notably money market conditions, are more favorable to an active speculation. Owing to the extremely active employment of money throughout the country, bankers expect interest rates to hold up for an indefinite time, but they believe not only that there will be enough money to go around, but that a little later, say in April, a considerable amount can be spared for the stock market. In the meantime the immediate situation has been greatly eased by the action of Secretary Shaw. It matters little what proportion of the $10,000,000 is deposited here. If all of it were deposited outside the effect would be to lessen the demands of the interior upon this centre, and thus to reduce the Spring outflow of currency.

The conclusion seems almost irresistible that a majority of the larger financial interests, so-called, have been willing to see the stock market seek a lower level. They began last week to support it with scale buying orders as they had not done since the end of January. Speculative sentiment has been running strongly to the bear side for a fortnight or more, and the indications are that the active list is somewhat oversold. The short interest does not reflect itself in the loan crowd from day to day, because houses through whom the bear crowd has been operating are long of stocks. It is not necessary for them to borrow stocks to make deliveries on contracts of short sale. Under the circumstances, a demonstration against the bear account seems probable in the near future. A violent recovery at the expense of the short interest alone would not be likely to hold. Careful operators believe, however, that it behooves traders from this time on to lean their speculations toward the bull side, buying stocks on the declines preferably to selling them on the bulges. The latter procedure, many think, has lately become rather too popular with the rank and file of small traders. The commission house element has begun to trade on the bear side. Clients who formerly were wont to ask their brokers if stocks were not weak enough to buy, now ask if they are not strong enough to sell.

An operator like Mr. Keene could put 5 per cent. on the market in a few days if he had permission to do so. He would probably relish doing it if he thought the Gates crowd had become extended on the bear side. The technical position of the market as a whole must have been strengthened by last week's liquidation. The bank statement reported a decrease of nearly $8,500,000 in loans, but the full reduction in loans was not reflected owing to the fact that the bulk of the speculative liquidation occurred at mid-week.

GREENE CONSOLIDATED COPPER

Is being discussed in a series of analytical articles now running in Walker's Copper Letter every Saturday in the Boston Commercial.

It was three and one-half years ago that Walker's Copper Letter began presenting facts, figures and logical deductions to convince its readers that we were then running into the greatest bull market in the coppers and the metal that the world had ever witnessed. Since then the price of copper has advanced from 11⅝ cents to 18½ cents per pound, and nearly three hundred million dollars has been added to the market value of copper mining stocks. Did you get your share of this advance?

The advice given in Walker's Copper Letter is not prophecy, prediction or guesswork, but the findings of a student-specialist who keeps in close touch with the financial and metal markets, analyzes every scrap of copper mining news and all available statistics, who knows the mines and keeps posted on developments through frequent personal visits of inspection and the employment of trained correspondents.

The tens of thousands who read Walker's Letter regularly will tell you of the remarkable record it has made. It urged the purchase of Anaconda at $15, Atlantic at $7, Bingham at $20, Boston Consolidated at $8, Copper Range at $38, Granby at $3, Isle Royale at $11, Mohawk at $40, Michigan at $6, North Butte at $25, Osceola at $45, United Copper at $25, Utah Consolidated at $20, and Wolverine at $60. It will have other equally interesting and valuable advice for copper share investors in the future, and you can get it every week in the Boston Commercial.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 3.—United Railway income bonds were fairly active and stronger to-day. The sales of the free incomes amounted to only 16,000, but $106,000 of the Baltimore Trust certificates were traded in. The free bonds opened at 73¾, an advance of ¼, while the certificates touched 72¼, an advance of ⅝.

The belief seems to be general that if the legislation asked is obtained some step will be taken which will benefit the income bondholders. Virginia deferred, Brown Brothers certificates, advanced ⅝. Money is tight in Baltimore, and in a few instances institutions have found it necessary to call loans during the last few days. The prevailing rates, however, are still 5@5½ per cent.

The market closed firm, but dull. Sales, bonds, $145,500; shares of stock, 243.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 3.—The money market continues firm. Call loans, 6 per cent.; time loans on collateral, 5@6 per cent.; time loans on mercantile paper, 5½ per cent.; Clearing House loans, 5 per cent.; New York funds, 10c discount and par; clearings, $28,572,217; balances, $1,199,284; Sub-Treasury debit, $17,739.

For the week: Clearings, $162,287,907; balances, $9,574,928.

The stock market was dull and heavy. A renewal of activity in Granby, which has been neglected for a long time, was almost the only feature of the day. Trading was extremely dull, and the coppers as a class were neglected.

MARCH

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Headed by the sale of the Bennett Building for $1,000,000 and including a score of deals of more or less importance in the midtown business district, the reports of the week have only served to emphasize the great scope of the present market. As to the mere volume of current business, with its almost countless number of small deals in flats, tenements, and vacant properties, any comment would be little more than tiresome iteration.

Even the auction market provided a transaction of unusual interest in the purchase of the block front on the west side of Eighth Avenue, between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets, by the City Investing Company. That this property is one of great future possibilities was, perhaps, best indicated by the active competition for it, shared in by a number of prominent speculative interests, and the only surprise of the auction sale was that the bids did not go to a higher figure. At the price paid, $656,000, it seemed to be the general opinion after the sale that the buyers had embarked upon what is likely to prove a very profitable operation. This is the first large purchase reported from the Pennsylvania section in some time, but there is, meanwhile, no decline in the volume of smaller speculative buying all around the railroad's great hole in the ground.

The market for dwellings, both on the east and west sides, moves along with apparently a large number of prospective buyers in the field, despite the fact that dealings in residential property have been a conspicuous feature of the news for six months. So strong is the demand east of Central Park that it has occasioned the return to that section of at least one firm of speculative builders, who abandoned it in favor of the west side when, in 1903 and 1904, there was a very poor crop of steel and other capitalists looking for fine houses in the upper Fifth Avenue section. The steady eastward trend of the residential district was shown in the sale of several old properties on Park Avenue, including a large corner plot at Seventy-first Street—all of these deals being preliminary to the erection of new dwellings.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

The German-American Insurance Company has bought from J. M. Mossman 68 to 74 Maiden Lane, running through to 5 to 11 Liberty Street, a plot 111.7 by 61.7 by 84.11 by 35, now covered by old four-story buildings. These properties make up the greater part of the triangular block bounded by Maiden Lane and Liberty and William Streets. The only other properties in the block are the Wolfe Building on its William Street frontage and a small parcel at its easterly end, owned by the Northern Insurance Company.

It is understood that the German-American Insurance Company, which now occupies quarters at Liberty and Nassau Streets, will erect on the plot just purchased a new building for its own occupancy. The Cruikshank Company negotiated the deal.

Large Purchase on the Heights.

A syndicate, consisting of the Fleischmann Realty and Construction Company, Mayer S. Auerbach, and Joseph Hamerschlag, has bought the McCormick tract of about 130 lots, fronting on Fort Washington Avenue, Riverside Drive, Haven Avenue, 172d Street, and 173d Street. E. C. Williams was the broker. The property has frontages of 400 feet on Fort Washington Avenue and 373 feet on Riverside Drive. Its width from east to west is about 800 feet.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

There is apparently no limit to the ability of the present auction market to absorb tenement property. On Wednesday and Thursday of last week Auctioneers Day and Kennelly both offered long lists, made up almost exclusively of this class of holdings, but on neither day was there any lack of buyers, and in only one or two instances was the withdrawal of the property made necessary by the failure of bids to reach an adequate figure.

An estate sale, announced by Peter F. Meyer for Wednesday, will bring into the market two parcels, in the region just north of the bridge terminal, that are likely to command speculative attention. These are the four-story building at 43 and 45 Centre Street, running through to Elm Street, and a small plot on the opposite side of Elm Street, between Duane and Pearl Streets. Other holdings of the estate, to be offered at the same time, include the tenement 1,990 Third Avenue, near 109th Street, and the dwelling 274 West Seventy-first Street, near West End Avenue.

On Tuesday, Samuel Goldsticker will sell, in foreclosure, the Hotel Woodward, at the southeast corner of Broadway and Fifty-fifth Street. A plot, 50 by 100, on the north side of 113th Street, 225 feet west of Broadway, will be offered on Friday, under partition decree, by Joseph P. Day.

A large sale, involving 292 lots in the Twenty-sixth Ward of Brooklyn and the Fourth Ward of Queens, will be conducted on Tuesday at the Brooklyn Real Estate Exchange by the Jere. Johnson, Jr., Company. The property is situated on Liberty, Glenmore, Pitkin, and Drew Avenues, Ruby and Centre Streets.

At the Court House, New Brighton, S. I., Joseph P. Day will sell on Wednesday two large properties on Van Pelt Avenue, near Washington Avenue, Mariners' Harbor.

DOLLARS-AND-CENTS SIDE OF FORTY-STORY TOWER

Gigantic Structure to be Built Primarily as a Money-Maker.

SINGLE TENANT TO A FLOOR

Estimated Amount of Rentable Space—Another Downtown Building of Towerlike Proportions.

Among real estate men and builders there has been a disposition to regard in a somewhat skeptical spirit the proposal to erect a forty-story tower in connection with the improvement of the Singer Manufacturing Company's holdings at Broadway and Liberty St.

Not that there is any engineering difficulty in connection with the project which modern methods cannot overcome—indeed, as one skyscraper builder of much prominence remarked: "With an adequate foundation the number of stories in a modern building is little more than a problem in addition or subtraction, so far as mere structural possibilities are concerned." But the fact that such undertakings have never advanced beyond the "paper" stage, and the other fact that the whole idea of extremely high buildings on very small lots has been so persistently "pooh-poohed," have no doubt led to the many expressions of doubt regarding the present enterprise.

Still another view of the matter is held by those who say that even if the tower is actually put up it will be with the idea that it will justify its cost in its advertising value, rather than that it will yield any adequate annual income.

In discussing these phases of the project yesterday an officer of the Singer Manufacturing Company said:

"The tower is going to be built—please make no mistake about that—and it will be built strictly as a business proposition and with strict regard to its possibilities as an income producer. It would, of course, be idle to deny that it will have some value in attracting public attention, but this has been a secondary consideration. All talk to the effect that the tower is to be erected solely through motives of display is bosh. It is as much a dollars-and-cents undertaking as any office building or apartment house ever erected in the city."

Nothing of an authoritative character as to gross annual rental to be derived from the tower is yet available, but some idea on the subject may be had from the plans now in the hands of De Selding Brothers, the Singer Company's agents.

The structure's outside measurements will be approximately 65 feet—covering an area of 4,225 square feet. After making even a liberal allowance for the four elevators, stairways, lavatories, walls, and partitions, it is estimated that there will be at least 3,000 square feet of rentable space on each floor. At $3 a square foot, which is a fair average of rentals for the best of downtown buildings, this would mean $9,000 a floor. The tower will rise thirty stories above the main building, the four topmost stories forming a dome, so that on a basis of $3 a square foot the total annual rental of space in the tower is likely to be at least $250,000. Nothing has been announced as to the extra cost involved in its erection, but there is no reason to suppose that it will reach any such amount that $250,000 will not show a satisfactory rate of net income.

"The idea is," said Herman De Selding, "to rent the floors to single tenants, and we are confident that the demand for this sort of space will far exceed our expectations. This idea of one tenant on a floor is growing in popularity every day, and the number of firms and individuals who are seeking to make this kind of an arrangement is surprising. Not only in some of the smaller buildings of limited floor space, but in some of the larger structures recently erected, such as the Kuhn-Loeb Building, at Pine and William Streets, the number of 'floor tenancies' is steadily increasing. There is an element of privacy and individuality growing out of this arrangement, and the area of the floors in the proposed tower is such as to bring them within the needs of a large number of firms and individuals."

The elevator equipment of the tower is a question which has also occasioned some expressions of doubt as to its practicability, but a little figuring shows that the structure, with four elevators, will come within the generally recognized requirement of one car for each 25,000 square feet of floor space. So far as speed is concerned, there are at present in operation in the city hydraulic elevators which travel 600 feet a minute, so that if a plan to operate the cars without too frequent stops can be carried out the time consumed in a trip to the top of the tower should not prove a serious drawback.

Another downtown project which has attracted fully as much attention in its way as that of the Singer Company is the one recently announced involving the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall Street. So often has the opinion been repeated, by those qualified to judge, that this lot, containing about 1,200 square feet, could never be profitably improved with a tall building that this view has come to be regarded as final, yet the owners of the property, the Mercantile Trust Company of St. Louis, are preparing to go ahead with the erection of an eighteen-story structure there.

The Singer operation has attracted all of the attention that would naturally centre in the highest structure, with one exception, in the world, but it may well be asked: "Which is more of a tower—eighteen stories on 1,200 square feet, or forty stories on 4,200 square feet?"

LONG ISLAND ACTIVITY.

The Bellcourt Land Company has sold during the last month 250 lots at Bellcourt, Bayside, Borough of Queens. H. Low bought twenty-two lots in Block 30 and N. B. Smyth ten lots in Block 17. Many other buyers acquired plots of from four to eight lots. Among the purchasers were C. F. Potter, H. Goldman, H. W. Dennett, William Rockwell, A. L. Campbell, and L. Van Sant.

The Diamond Realty Company has sold for a client a tract of forty-four acres at Manorville, L. I. The buyer is a Brooklyn investor.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company has sold during the week thirty-one lots at Amityville, L. I., for a total of $4,895.

Title has passed for the transfer of the Douglas estate, consisting of 180 acres at Douglaston, L. I., to the Douglas Manor Company, of which E. J. Rickert is President. This property will be developed this Spring. The sale was made through the office of S. Osgood Pell & Co.

Maxwell S. Mannes has sold a plot of lots on Steinway and Jackson Avenues, Long Island City, to a client of the John M. Thompson Company.

NEW MARKETS IN THE BRONX.

One at Port Morris, the Other on Brook and Bergen Avenues.

James S. Maher has bought from various owners, through A. M. Johnson and J. Clarence Davies, almost the entire block bounded by Brook Avenue, Rose Street, and Bergen Avenue. On this property Mr. Maher will erect immediately a new wholesale market to accommodate the butchers who are about to be driven out of their old location by the improvement of Westchester Avenue and the extensive enlargements planned by the New York Central Railroad to its property along the route of its Port Morris Branch.

The Brook Avenue front of Mr. Maher's purchase faces the railway tracks, and on it will be built a brick structure to receive the meats and provisions that come in from the West. Tracks will be run directly into the building, and a great plant for refrigeration and ice manufacture will be one of its features. The new building will have a frontage of 300 feet on Brook Avenue, and will be three stories in height. Work is to be started at once.

Palen Tully & Hoppock have sold for the Port Morris Land and Improvement Company and the F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Company to interests identified with the Port Morris Market Company, the two blocks between 133d and 135th Streets, Walnut Avenue, and the tracks of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. These blocks together with those already improved by the market company command both sides of 134th Street, the approach to the College Point Ferry. The two blocks adjoining the railroad will be improved by the erection of such buildings as may be required by wholesale produce merchants, beef packers, or market men, who require direct railroad facilities for the receipt or shipment of merchandise.

THE NEW YORK TIMES REACHES THE HOME SEEKER and THE INVESTOR

Two Recent Testimonials:

THE NEW YORK TIMES:
Last week we inserted an "Ad." in the Real Estate Columns for the sale of one of our houses.
It might interest you to know that we received nearly three hundred replies to same, not only from real estate dealers, but from private investors, and as a result our house was sold within two days after the "Ad." appeared.
This, we believe, is attributable to your wide circulation among those interested in Real Estate.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:
I thought it might interest you to know that I recently advertised a house in three prominent papers, including THE NEW YORK TIMES.
From one I received no replies, from another several letters, which proved to be from brokers, and from THE TIMES two replies.
As I sold the property to one of the latter I certainly was well repaid for the expenditure for my little "Ad." in THE TIMES.
Trusting I may be equally fortunate in the future, I remain
Yours very truly,

QUEENS. FOR SALE. | QUEENS. FOR SALE.

A few weeks ago we asked the question,

the present value of which is $80,000 or more, to point an object lesson?

Do you appreciate fully what has caused the tremendous increase in values throughout this section? It was purely a question of transportation. Population and improvement always follow the natural outlet where the easiest, quickest and cheapest transportation facilities exist. The same forces which have made values on 125th Street are now shaping values in Queens Borough, especially at Elmhurst Square, Woodside and Flushing, which are in the line of the new routes of transportation—the three passenger tunnels and Blackwell's Island Bridge. Here prices are still nominal, out of all proportion to the prices maintaining in Manhattan at any point equidistant from Herald Square. Every precedent must prove false if the buyers of property now in Elmhurst Square do not make large profits, because when Tunnels and Bridges are completed this section will be closer to Herald Square than 125th Street is to-day, with every accommodation for travel which genius backed by untold millions can provide.

ELMHURST SQUARE,
16 minutes from 34th St., 5c. fare,

is relatively nearer Herald Square in actual measurement than 125th Street, and lots can be bought there now for $1,000 and less, with sewers, water and gas, sidewalks, curb and gutters, all city improvements and no assessments. The best and cheapest addition in the Borough.

Elmhurst Square is in the direct line of the projected improvements, and every dollar that is being spent must necessarily add to its value.

Write or call for Booklet No. 6, with maps and views, and see the property yourself.

FLORAL PARK
LONG ISLAND
THE HOME OF THE FLOWERS

20 Minutes From Broadway

On Completion of the Pennsylvania R. R. Subway and nearer the Hub of New York than the Bronx is to-day.

History in Real Estate Developments Repeats Itself.

YOU KNOW what happened in the Bronx a little over a year ago, when the Subway was opened and the public suddenly realized that the basis of all real estate values outside of the congested centres of Manhattan is Transit Facilities.

FLORAL PARK is right in the centre of all the gigantic transit developments of Long Island, and as soon as these new transit facilities are in operation residents of FLORAL PARK will be able to reach Herald Square in less time than residents of the Bronx do now.

And the History of Bronx Real Estate will then be repeated in FLORAL PARK.

FLORAL PARK is one of the garden spots of Long Island's home section. It is on the edge of Greater New York, midway between the Sound and the Ocean, less than fifteen miles from New York City, on the main line of the Long Island Railroad. On this line, electric trains are now being operated from the Flatbush Avenue Station in Brooklyn. The present service consists of 40 trains a day, with a commutation rate of 13 cents.

The place is famous for its rich, well-drained and fertile soil, and its mild and equable climate—the reason why it has been selected by a number of prominent seed and flower growers, who have their gardens and greenhouses here.

All property in FLORAL PARK is restricted against nuisances or undesirable developments. The streets are graded and water and gas are supplied to every home. It has one of the finest public schools on Long Island. Its churches comprise the leading denominations. It has a Fire Department with all the latest apparatus. It has excellent hotels and many good stores.

We have developed one of the finest sections of land within a couple of blocks of the railroad station, and are offering, for a limited time only,

500 choice building Lots for $300 each $10 $5 Down a month.

TITLES GUARANTEED BY THE TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST CO. OF NEW YORK.

As soon as the Spring opens these prices will be advanced at least twenty-five per cent.

In taking advantage of our present offer you secure lots at original development prices and in the choicest section of the PARK.

COME TO FLORAL PARK the first pleasant day.
We furnish maps, free R. R. tickets and all particulars at our offices.

SHORE FRONTS.
65 ACRES
10,000 Feet Shore Front.

65 acres of land forming three beautiful points and connected with the mainland by a causeway 200 feet wide above high tide, known as Duck Island, and wooded almost to the water's edge. All exposed spots are protected by granite walls. There is

A SUPERB HARBOR

with 15 feet of water at low tide. Elevations up to 100 feet, commanding fine views of NORTHPORT HARBOR, DUCK ISLAND HARBOR, HUNTINGTON BAY, LONG ISLAND SOUND AND THE CONNECTICUT SHORE. There is a fine bathing beach of white sand and there are no mud flats. This property can be purchased at reasonable price on terms to suit and within two years it will probably be worth twice as much. Available and desirable shore-front properties are becoming very scarce and there is nothing exactly like this on the north shore of Long Island. It is Lake George and the Thousand Islands at your door. There is a water front of ten thousand feet on this property. For further particulars address

SUPT. MAXWELL PLANS MORE SCHOOL NOVELTIES

Classes for Non-English-Speaking and Backward Children.

COOKING AND CARPENTRY

Educators Throughout the Country Awaiting the Results of the Experiment.

Supt. Maxwell issued instructions yesterday to the Principals of the elementary schools to guide them in their organization and management of special classes for non-English-speaking, over-age, and backward children, that are to be established in the elementary schools. The Board of Education approved these classes at its meeting on Feb. 14.

The plan provides for classes to afford non-English-speaking pupils an opportunity to acquire speedily the ability to speak, read, and write the English language; to accommodate pupils who are soon to be 14 years of age, who desire to obtain employment certificates and who have no prospect of completing the elementary school course and to afford pupils over the normal age in the grades below the first class of the seventh year an opportunity to make special preparation for admission to this particular class and by so doing to shorten the time necessary to complete the work of the elementary school.

Dr. Maxwell says the subject matter of instruction is for the present left largely to the judgment of the Principals, but under no circumstances are drawing and physical training to be eliminated. He advises that all girls 12 years of age and over should have instruction in sewing and cooking and all boys 12 years of age or over instruction in woodwork and the use of tools.

Supt. Maxwell advises that no child, of whatever age, should be placed in the class for non-English-speaking pupils unless he needs to learn to speak the English language. Every pupil placed in such grade should be removed from it as soon as he has acquired sufficient speaking vocabulary to take up the work of another grade, and should be placed in accordance with his attainments and prospects either in one of the regular grades or in one of the other two special classes. Teachers should be guided in giving instruction in the non-English classes for non-English-speaking pupils, he says, by the syllabuses on the teaching of English to foreigners prepared for evening schools.

Admission to the classes for the pupils who are soon to be 14 years of age should be only for those pupils who are going to work as soon as employment certificates may be obtained. Children who are beyond the normal age in the grades below the first class of the seventh year, and who do not desire employment certificates at the earliest possible moment, may be placed, at the discretion of the Principal, in the special classes provided for such pupils who need an opportunity to make special preparation for admission to the first class of the seventh year. The upper limit of the normal age in the regular grades below the first class of the seventh year, says Dr. Maxwell, shall be as follows: First-year classes, 9 years; second year, 10; third, 11; fourth, 12; fifth, 13, and sixth, 14.

These special classes are regarded as a most interesting experiment in modern education. They have excited the interest of prominent educators, who will watch their progress carefully. They are the conception of Supt. Maxwell, and for this reason are regarded as another of the so-called fads and frills which he champions.

CHAUFFEUR PUT IN IRONS.

Jealous Youth Made a Lot of Trouble on a Clyde Liner.

The jealousy of a young man who said he was a New York chauffeur and had been working on the Florida east coast, caused a lot of trouble on board the Clyde liner Apache last Thursday and Friday. The Apache got in from Jacksonville and Charleston yesterday morning, and the passengers told the friends that met them of the conduct of the chauffeur, which was so obstreperous that Capt. Staples, the Apache's commander, had to put him in irons.

From Jacksonville to Charleston the chauffeur, who said he was Walter McDowell of this city, but whose name does not appear in the Directory, behaved all right. Thursday morning, soon after the Apache left Charleston, his manner changed. He got the idea that another passenger, also a young man, had superseded him in the good opinions of one of the women passengers. McDowell straightway took to the war path, and for the next twenty hours there was trouble on the Apache.

The chauffeur ran about the boat like a wild man, vowing vengeance on the other man. Finally his ravings took him into the smoking room, where the men passengers were playing whist. McDowell denounced everybody in the room, and then, according to one of the passengers, tried to kick a Dr. Muhler of Pittsburg. Dr. Muhler dodged and the next moment McDowell was sprawling on the floor as a result of an upper cut that the doctor landed.

When the chauffeur regained his feet he started in again, and this time he became so violent that several passengers subdued him. Then Capt. Staples and six big sailors appeared and took the young man in charge. They escorted him to the forehold, where he was put in irons and told that he would remain there until he cooled off. At the end of twenty-four hours McDowell had had all he wanted and was released. He was the mildest man on the boat the rest of the voyage.

BONDSMEN STRIKE A SNAG.

Professionals Barred Hereafter in Tenderloin, Hodgins Says.

Acting Inspector Hodgins of the Tenderloin Station says he is going to suppress the professional bondsman, and he has tackled the problem in earnest. While forty women were locked up at the station on Friday night only about ten were released on bail, and these were bonded by non-professionals.

Ike Levy, a real estate owner, appeared before Sergt. Corbett and said he wanted to give bond for two women who had been taken in.

"Do you come here often?" asked Corbett.

"Occasionally," replied Levy.

"Did these women send for you?" was asked.

"Yes," replied the bondsman, "both of 'em."

Corbett rang for the matron.

"Have those two women," indicating their names," write the name of the bondsman they've sent for," directed Corbett. A moment later the matron returned with two slips bearing names neither of which was Levy's.

"Can't accept you," said Corbett.

"Oh, yes—" began Levy.

"Get out!" said Corbett.

"I'll have you—" persisted Levy.

"Get out or I'll lock you up," said Corbett.

Levy disappeared. An hour later he came back with another man, who said his name was Flam.

He offered $500 cash bail for one of the women, but as it did not appear that she had sent for him it was refused.

"Levy," said Flam, "show the Sergeant your deed." Levy laid a deed on the Sergeant's desk.

"Take it away," said Corbett. "Both of you had better get out."

"You'll hear from this," remarked the visitors as they went out of the door.

TWO $1,000 BONDS STOLEN.

Two negotiable coupon bonds of $1,000 each disappeared from the office of C. B. Richard & Co., bankers and foreign forwarders, before the closing hour Friday, and the financial district detectives are sure they were stolen.

It was nearly time to quit work for the day when Cashier Simmons handed C., B. and Q. Bond No. 75,655 and a Long Island Railroad bond, numbered 14,563 M, to the French correspondence clerk to be forwarded to Paris. According to the clerk, he wrote the letter and laid it with the two bonds to be inclosed on top of a pile of letters in his basket. Two minutes later, when he turned to the basket again, the bonds were gone.

Richard & Co. employ about seventy clerks, all in one big room, and a great part of them are foreigners. When the bonds couldn't be found there was great excitement among the French, Spanish, and Italian clerks. Their several dignities wouldn't allow them to submit to the personal search which the police and, the American clerks agreed was the best way to make sure no employe had the bonds. Finally the firm decided that they couldn't insist on searching their men, and everybody went home except a hunting party, which devoted the hours until midnight going through waste paper, books, pigeonholes, and crevices. The bonds weren't found, and the firm believes the thief has got away with them.

LITTLE ART IN FERRY PLAN.

Commission Against the Whitehall Terminal—Slaps Horgan & Slattery.

Plans for the new Whitehall Ferry terminal, which were prepared in December under the supervision of Dock Commissioner Maurice Featherson, have been disapproved by the Municipal Art Commission. The body reports that the designs are "better than some and not so good as the best," and it is suggested that a structure "of a character distinctly more dignified and monumental" be erected.

The plans were submitted to a committee which has just made its report. This report has been placed on file, and a resolution adopted formally disapproving the plans, but "without prejudice to reconsideration."

The commission also has administered a rebuke to Horgan & Slattery, architects of the Hall of Records, in rejecting the firm's designs for mural decorations in that building. The designs, according to the commission, are "too elaborate and in bad taste."

JUSTICE DEUEL TO HANG ON.

Won't Quit Bench While Supreme Court Hears Removal Charges.

Justice Deuel, contrary to expectation, has decided to sit in his judicial capacity while the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court is investigating the charges made against him by District Attorney Jerome, James W. Osborne, and Edward M. Shepard in a petition for his removal.

Justice Deuel sent a letter to his colleagues on the Special Sessions bench yesterday saying that he will be on hand to-morrow to preside in that court, "according to the schedule." The letter, it was said, was the reply to offers by Justices Wyatt and Zeller to sit in his place, should he want to devote his time entirely to his defense.

No statement as to the charges or his plans of defense could be obtained from Justice Deuel yesterday.

PRINTERS MAY BOYCOTT, BLANCHARD DECIDES

Modifies First Injunction in Butterick Company Strike.

BUT MUSTN'T INTIMIDATE MEN

Force Has Been Used, Court Finds, and Prohibition Against This Is Continued.

Another decision rendered by Supreme Court Justice Blanchard against the members and officers of Typographical Union No. 6 was handed down yesterday. This time Justice Blanchard modifies the form of the injunction he granted recently against the printers on strike against the Butterick Publishing Company. But he does not restrain the printers from boycotting the Butterick concern.

"The preliminary injunction," says the court, "in so far as it restrains the local unions and individuals from resorting to any species of threats, intimidation, force, or fraud in their relations with the employes of the Butterick Publishing Company or their customers, must be continued. But picketing, argument, reasoning, and entreaty must not be so practiced or carried on to such extremes as to become in effect intimidation, threat, coercion, or force. The jeering of pickets, it is said, may, under some circumstances, constitute intimidation. Even persuasion and entreaty may be used in such a manner, with such environments as to constitute intimidation; their use then becomes a violation of law. Upon the affidavits before the court it appears that the proper bounds of reasoning and entreaty in dealing with the plaintiff's employes have been so exceeded by the defendant local unions and their members, and that the repetition of threats, intimidation, coercion, and force, with the resulting damage to the plaintiffs' business, is so likely that a continuance of the injunction, in some respects, must be granted.

"The right of the defendant to maintain pickets is well established, provided, however, that such picketing is not accompanied by acts expressing or implying threats, intimidation, coercion, or force."

Continuing, Justice Blanchard blames the local unions, and not the International Union, for any trouble that might have occurred from the picketing of the Butterick place. He says that members of the local unions have thronged the streets with such crowds as to interrupt traffic and to scare the employes. Continuing, Justice Blanchard says:

"The defendants [the local unions] are free, within the limits already indicated, to make any requests or give any advice or resort to any persuasion for the purpose of winning support, and in so far as the preliminary injunction is inconsistent herewith it is vacated. The defendant local unions, through their representatives, have sought to dissuade customers who are not under contractual obligations, and persons who might otherwise become customers, from purchasing publications and patterns published or printed by the plaintiff. Circulars, letters, placards, and posters have emanated from the defendant local unions containing several innuendoes of possibly libelous character. The court is asked to restrain the further publication of the written and printed matter above mentioned, on the ground that it contains innuendoes of a libelous character. Without in any particular restricting the direction above made restraining dissuasion, amounting to fraud, whether in the form of written or printed publications or otherwise, the court must refuse to restrain the publication of written or printed matter which is merely libelous. A court of equity will not enjoin a libel against property when the plaintiff, by reason of his inability to prove special damages, has no remedy at law. The defendants were within their legal rights in publishing circulars setting forth the circumstances of the strike and requesting their friends to withhold their patronage from the plaintiff."

RUSSELL SAGE LOSES SUIT.

Judgment was entered in the County Clerk's office yesterday for $17,000 against Russell Sage and in favor of Robert D. Vroom, a Wall Street broker, who has been after Mr. Sage since 1901. The judgment was entered after the Court of Appeals had sustained a verdict rendered in the Supreme Court and which had been upheld by the Appellate Division. If Mr. Sage does not pay it now an execution can be issued against him and the Sheriff may levy on some of his property.

The judgment is the outcome of a legal fight which began on what was known as the Northern Pacific corner day, May 9, 1901. On that day Vroom found that the "put" price, or, in other words, the price at which he was privileged to deliver certain stock to Sage, had depreciated heavily, and Mr. Vroom decided to put the stocks to Mr. Sage, as there was a good profit in so doing. Vroom called upon Sage later in the day to get a report, and a check for what he claimed was the amount due him, but Sage reported that he, Vroom, owed Sage $3,750. Vroom repudiated the action Mr. Sage had taken in the stock and demanded the return of his privileges in accordance with what he claimed was the agreement between them. Sage contended that there was no limit fixed by Mr. Vroom as to the prices at which Mr. Sage was to buy the stocks, but that the order was to "buy at the market," which order he had executed. Suit followed, and a jury in the Supreme Court gave Mr. Vroom a verdict for $14,603.50, which, with interest, brought the amount up to the sum for which judgment was entered yesterday.

IS A TAME DUCK A BIRD?

It's Poultry, Says the Government—Court Hears Chinaman's Egg Plea.

Sun Kwong On, a prosperous merchant of Pell Street, says that the Chinese boycott is by no means one-sided. In the course of business Mr. On was indiscreet enough to import several thousand ducks' eggs, which he had figured would be free of duty under the provision in the Dingley tariff law for "eggs of birds."

His chagrin, therefore, was great when Collector Stranahan levied duty on the importation at the rate of 5 cents per dozen, under the schedule for "eggs not specially provided for." Ordinarily a difference of 5 cents in the duty one way or the other would be of small consequence, but in this instance On saw his profit completely swallowed up by the Treasury Department.

Yesterday On's lawyer appeared before Judges Lacombe, Wallace, and Coxe in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and argued that the tribunal should hold that ducks' eggs are "eggs of birds" within the meaning of the tariff schedules and therefore free of duty. Assistant District Attorney Wise maintained that the ducks in question were domesticated, and should be classed as "poultry," inasmuch as the Federal courts in construing the provisions of the tariff have held that poultry cannot be deemed "birds." The court reserved decision. The litigation has lasted two years.

DARLINGTON TO BARNEY.

Says Smoke Nuisance Criticism Was a "Mass of Inaccuracies."

Health Commissioner Darlington issued a statement yesterday in reply to Mr. Charles T. Barney's criticism of the smoke nuisance. He said he doubted whether Mr. Barney would have given out for publication "such a mass of inaccuracies" if he had been on friendly terms with the Interborough Rapid Transit Company.

In regard to Mr. Barney's charge that the Inspectors were idle, Dr. Darlington said that Recorder Goff had ruled that the Board of Health could not delegate its authority to its subordinates, and that, as the board only met at long intervals, nothing could be done in the matter. He went on to say:

"It is unfortunate, perhaps, that Mr. Barney is not presiding in the criminal courts, but as matters stand the Board of Health is bound by the rulings of the sitting Judges. The Advisory Committee has been working for months to reach a satisfactory solution of the problem, and I believe that it has succeeded. Its report will be presented at the next meeting of the Board of Health.

"The question is not a small one, and despite the criticism of Mr. Barney, we have deemed it best to make haste slowly."

RIDABOCK OUT OF THE GUARD.

National Guardsmen were surprised to learn yesterday that Lieut. Col. Henry G. Ridabock of the Eighth Regiment had been placed on the retired list at his own request after seventeen years' service.

Aside from being one of the best-known officers in the National Guard, Col. Ridabock had an international reputation as an oarsman. In 1878 he was a member of the famous Columbia College crew which was sent to England. He pulled No. 8 oar, J. T. Godwin was stroke, E. E. Sage was bow, and Cyrus Edson No. 2. This crew captured the Visitors' Cup from Jesus College, Cambridge, and won the first and only victory ever obtained by an American college crew at Henley.

Lieut. Col. Ridabock, who leaves the Eighth Regiment for business reasons, joined it in October, in 1888, as a Quartermaster, with the rank of First Lieutenant. He was promoted Major in February, 1896, and served with the Eighth New York Volunteers in that rank in 1898. He was promoted Lieutenant Colonel in March, 1899. He was graduated from the School of Mines, Columbia College, in the class of 1879, and, while a student, also won an intercollegiate record at hammer-throwing. He is a Mason, and also a member of several military societies.

7TH'S CENTENNIAL PLANS.

They Include a Parade, Review, and a Dinner to 2,000.

Arrangements for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of the Seventh Regiment by active and veteran members are nearly completed. It will be held on Saturday, May 5, and will be a very elaborate affair.

Veterans from all over the United States will be present, and in addition to the heads of the army and navy, the Adjutant General of every State and Territory will be invited. Graduates from the ranks of the Seventh are to be found as officers in many organizations in New York, as well as in other States, and also in the regular army. It is probable that the commanding officers of all the National Guard organizations of New York will be among the guests.

There will be a parade of the veterans, under escort of the active regiment, up Broadway and a part of Fifth Avenue, and a review, possibly by President Roosevelt. After the parade the veterans, the active regiment, and special guests will go to the armory, where there will be a dinner, to which about 2,000 persons will be invited. To arrange for this feast, long tables will be set up in the drill hall and three kitchens will be provided in addition to the elaborate kitchen which is a permanent feature of the armory.

HARLEM EDUCATIONAL PLAN.

Jews There to Erect a Building Like the Educational Alliance's.

There is a movement in Harlem to erect a five-story building for educational uses like those advanced by the Educational Alliance. In the past four years the congested conditions and the lack of proper quarters in Harlem have created the same demands that gave rise to the building of so many different institutions on the lower east side. It is with this purpose in view that the Jews of Harlem have purchased a plot on the north side of 111th Street, between Park and Lexington Avenues, 107 feet in front and rear, and 100 feet deep.

Upon this ground they intend to erect a five-story building, consisting of an auditorium on the ground floor, and class and meeting rooms on the other floors. There will also be installed a gymnasium and baths. The cost of the building is estimated at $200,000.

To aid in raising sufficient funds for the erection of the building the organization known as the Young Folk's League of the Uptown Talmud Torah will hold a fair at Terrace Garden. It will open March 27, and will continue during the afternoons and evenings of March 28 and 29. On the last evening there will be an entertainment and dace.

FREE LAW FOR EAST SIDERS.

Outside Help Needed for Growing Work of Legal Aid Bureau.

A meeting of those interested in the work of the Legal Aid Bureau of the Educational Alliance on the lower east side was held last night at the Alliance. The bureau was started four years ago to furnish disinterested advice to possible litigants who cannot afford to pay for legal service. Its prime endeavor has been to adjust small cases by means of conferences between the disputant parties.

Starting with the maximum of ten to twenty cases a day, the work has now grown until at present as many as 125 to 150 cases a day are handled. With only one regular attorney in charge, there has arisen the need for volunteer attorneys, who may devote one night a week to the work. The Legal Aid Bureau has gained the confidence and respect of the east side people, who flock to it for adjustment of most intimate family and personal relations.

Last night steps were taken for the formation of an advisory counsel to enlist the co-operation and assistance of lawyers and laymen in the work.

DIAMOND RING FOR RESCUER.

Young Woman Whom He Saved Rewards Longshoreman Olaf.

Oscar Olaf, a longshoreman employed on the Hamburg-American piers at Hoboken, and known among his fellow-workmen as "the Big Swede," because of his stature and strength, was rewarded by a woman with a diamond ring at the pier yesterday for having saved her life. She was making toward the stairs leading to the upper floor when a team of horses, that had become unmanageable, dashed toward her. She was in a corner, and would have been crushed had not Olaf pushed the wagon tongue aside and caught the fractious team by the bridles. After a tussle he forced the horses to halt, and the young woman escaped to a place of safety.

When her fright had subsided she sought Olaf at his working place and, taking a diamond ring from her finger, urged him to accept it. He declined, but she droped it into his pocket and went away before he could give it back. [illegible]

BINGHAM SEEKS JEROME TO AID POLICE INQUIRY

Consults Claiche Girl's Prosecutor About Revelations.

CONFLICT IN TESTIMONY

Police Witnesses Except Morton Called to Jerome's Office—Grand Jury Case Likely.

Belief grew stronger yesterday that the revelations concerning police methods in the Tenderloin which have formed so conspicuous a feature of the trial of Berthe Claiche would result in a searching investigation by Commissioner Bingham, with the assistance of District Attorney Jerome.

Commissioner Bingham called yesterday at the District Attorney's office. Finding that Mr. Jerome had gone to Lakeville and would not be back until Monday, he asked for Assistant District Attorney Ely, who is prosecuting Berthe Claiche. The eagerness of the Commissioner to carry out whatever purpose had taken him to the District Attorney's office was shown by the fact that he waited for nearly an hour until Mr. Ely arrived. They withdrew to Mr. Ely's office, where, after a while, they were joined by Assistant District Attorney Corrigan. Mr. Corrigan is credited with knowing more about the police than any one else among the District Attorney's assistants, and on one occasion shortly before the department changed its head, his help for the prosecution of police graft was solicited by Commissioner McAdoo.

The talk between Col. Bingham and the two Assistant District Attorneys lasted more than twenty minutes. On leaving, the Commissioner said that he was disappointed at not finding Mr. Jerome in town. He would say nothing about the object of his visit, and no information could be obtained from Mr. Ely or Mr. Corrigan.

All the policemen figuring in the trial of the Claiche woman, with the exception of Henry Morton, were about the District Attorney's office yesterday. Their presence gave rise to the report that proceedings were contemplated before the Grand Jury that convenes to-morrow.

This report received substantiation from the news that Felix Horwitz, cashier in a little French restaurant at Seventh Avenue and Twenty-seventh Street, would be put on the stand by the prosecution to testify that Gendron could not speak English at all and that he had discussed his ignorance of the language several times in the hearing of the witness. One of the moot points in the trial is whether Gendron uttered any threats to the Claiche woman after his arrest before she shot him.

The testimony on this point has been very conflicting. But the witnesses best able to know—namely, the policemen, have all, with one exception, testified that the man said nothing. Morton was the single exception, testifying positively, both before the Coroner and before Justice Davis, that Gendron turned about and yelled to the woman behind him:

"If you have me pinched I'll kill you when I get out."

These words, according to his testimony, were uttered by Gendron in English, with slight accent, but perfectly intelligibly. Some other witnesses have testified that he said something in French that they could not understand. Morton has contradicted himself in regard to a detail that would seem very slight were he not so positive in his testimony even when cautioned most carefully. Before the Coroner he said that Gendron's first words were: "If you get me pinched."

On the stand Friday he said they were: "If you have me pinched."

When the discrepancy was pointed out to him by Justice Davis himself Morton replied that his later version was correct, and in reply to an additional question he said that he remembered the actual words more clearly than before. Asked by Mr. Ely what had served to refresh his memory, Morton rejoined:

"That I knew you were going to question me about it."

Martineau, one of those who arrested Gendron, showed much concern while waiting around the Criminal Courts Building yesterday. He walked excitedly up and down in the corridors and pulled at his hair. He said that his wife was threatening to sue him for divorce on account of a false statement in court about his relations with the Claiche woman. He asserted that he never saw her until the evening of the shooting, and he thanked Heaven that his connection with "the bunch," meaning the other policemen involved, had been brief.

The hearing on the charge against Policeman Cody of making a false statement concerning the Claiche case, which was to have gone on before the Commissioner yesterday, was postponed for a week. James W. Osborne, counsel for Cody, says that his client is the victim of a conspiracy on the part of Martineau and Bellafer to clear themselves.

A JOKE ON THE BURGLARS.

Schechter Said He'd Put $400 in the Safe, but He Didn't.

Unidentified burglars, hearing that Sam Schechter had just collected a large sum of money and put it in his safe overnight, broke into Sam's butcher shop at 66 Seventh Street some time on Friday night to rob him. Schechter says the joke's on them. He rents almost the entire tenement under which he has his shop. Friday was rent day. He announced late in the afternoon that he had collected nearly $400.

"What are you going to do with it?" asked one of the loungers in the neighborhood.

"My poy," he answered, "I pud it py der safe, vere it iss goot und safe." Then Schechter laughed at his joke.

The safe entered into the proceeding when Patrolman Rohlan of the Union Market Street Station saw its dim outlines through the misty morning air as he was on his post at Fifth Street and Avenue B. The 400 pounds of iron was standing in the middle of the avenue, and after an examination he called for the reserves, and the big metal box was taken to the station house. There it was found to be the property of Schechter. It had been opened with a pick at the bottom wall. The combination lock was intact.

Ben Fechtel, Schechter's assistant, sleeps in the butch shop, and his bed is separated from the safe by only a thin wooden partition, but he said he didn't hear the burglars when they entered and carted the strong box out of the front door, bundled it into a wagon, and drove off. When Schechter was informed of his loss he laughed.

"How about the $400," asked one of the policemen at the station. "Didn't the burglars get it?"

"Ged id? Ged oud!" answered Schechter, grinning. "You t'ink Schechter a pig fool? Nein. I got id safe py my wallet all der dime." Then he produced the pocketbook with the $400 in bills therein. All that the burglars got was $12 and 13 Russian rubles.

STATEN ISLAND WATER SYSTEM, PRICE $1,585,000

Worth It, Says Commission, and Urges City to Buy It.

CORPORATIONS OWN IT NOW

Staten Islanders Drink a Little Sea Water, the Report Says, but Not Much.

Staten Island's complete water system, now in the hands of three private corporations, will be taken over by the city at a price approximating $1,585,000, if the Board of Estimate acts in accord with a report just filed by William H. Burr, Chairman, I. M. De Varona, Nelson P. Lewis, Allen Hazen, and J. Waldo Smith, acting as the special commission named by the Mayor to investigate the situation and make recommendations.

The commission was appointed May 26 last under a resolution of the Board of Estimate, and since that time has been making an investigation, which included a thorough inspection of the plants of the Staten Island Water Supply Company, the Crystal Water Company, and the South Shore Water Company and the sources of supply of these companies. As a result, without considering the value of any non-exclusive franchises which the companies may possess, but after paying due attention to the value of the respective distributing systems and other conditions of "going concerns," the commission estimates the valuations of assets of the companies as being $862,000 for the Staten Island Water Supply Company, $709,000 for the Crystal Water Company, and $14,000 for the South Shore Company.

"If the city can purchase the plants and property of all of these three companies for the amounts stated, or at an approximation thereto," says the report, "we recommend that such purchase be made. There are seven sources of supply now in use. One of these, that of the South Shore Water Company, is so small that it would not pay to operate it in connection with a general supply for the island. Another source, and that the largest, supplying probably more water than any two others, is at West New Brighton. This water contains an admixture of sea water in varying amounts, but at times in such quantity as to make it seriously objectionable. It is also drawn from an area considerably built up at the present time, and on which the population is rapidly increasing.

"This water is therefore objectionable, both on account of the mineral matter which it contains and the pollution from the population upon the areas drained by it. The effects of this pollution have not yet been serious, as indicated by the analyses of the water, but the effects are certain to increase as time goes on, and at no remote date will make the use of the water impossible. This source of supply, in our judgment, should be used only until such time as a better water can be secured, and it should then be immediatey abandoned.

"The waters obtained from the other stations are of much better quality. They are somewhat harder than waters usually supplied in Greater New York, but otherwise are satisfactory. The amounts that can be secured from the individual stations are limited, and the costs of operating the stations are considerable. Nevertheless, within the limits of their capacity water can be supplied from them at a considerably smaller cost per million gallons than it can be brought to the island from outside. These five stations, however, are clearly incapable of supplying enough water for the whole island, and it is not clear that they can be extended or that other corresponding supplies can be obtained to make up this deficiency.

"Apparently the Catskill water will be available on Staten Island in about ten years. It will be necessary to have it available as soon as possible, because existing sources will not permanently supply the needs of the growing population. The New Jersey supply, if obtained also, is but a temporary arrangement, and the contract runs but ten years."

CLEVELAND ON WATER CASE.

Thinks Jersey May Not Withhold Supply from Staten Island.

President Cromwell of Richmond Borough recently wrote to ex-President Grover Cleveland about the efforts that are being made to obtain a permanent and abundant water supply for Staten Island by piping from New Jersey. He asked Mr. Cleveland's opinion on the matter and has received the following reply:

Westland, Princeton, N. J., Feb. 22, 1906.

Dear Sir: The question of a sufficient supply of pure and healthful water is so important to every community that I find myself much interested in what has been put before me touching the situation of the Borough of Richmond in this regard, and I can easily understand your anxiety in the matter.

There are so many considerations involved which I cannot fully appreciate, and I am so far outside of the immediate situation, that I do not feel like interfering in a very active way. One fact, however, seems to stand out quite prominently—the ability of New Jersey to supply good and wholesome water to Staten Island without impoverishing herself.

As a Jerseyman, I do not think my State is inclined to be churlish in the treatment of her less fortunate neighbors, and I believe that, unless there is good justification for it, she will not be disposed to disregard Staten Island's cry for help. Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

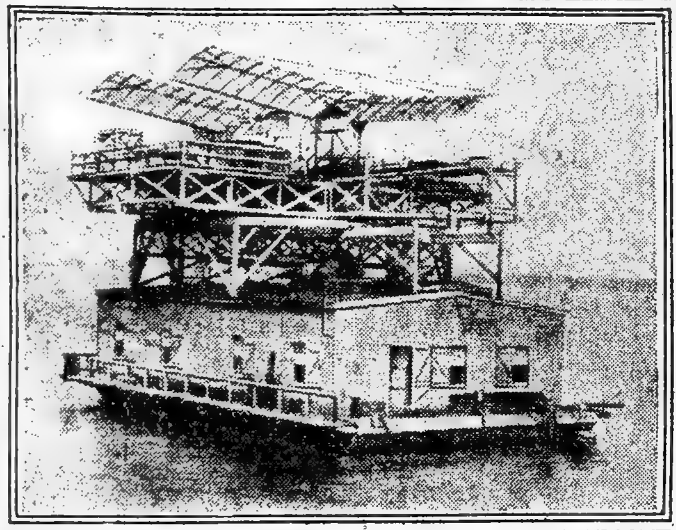
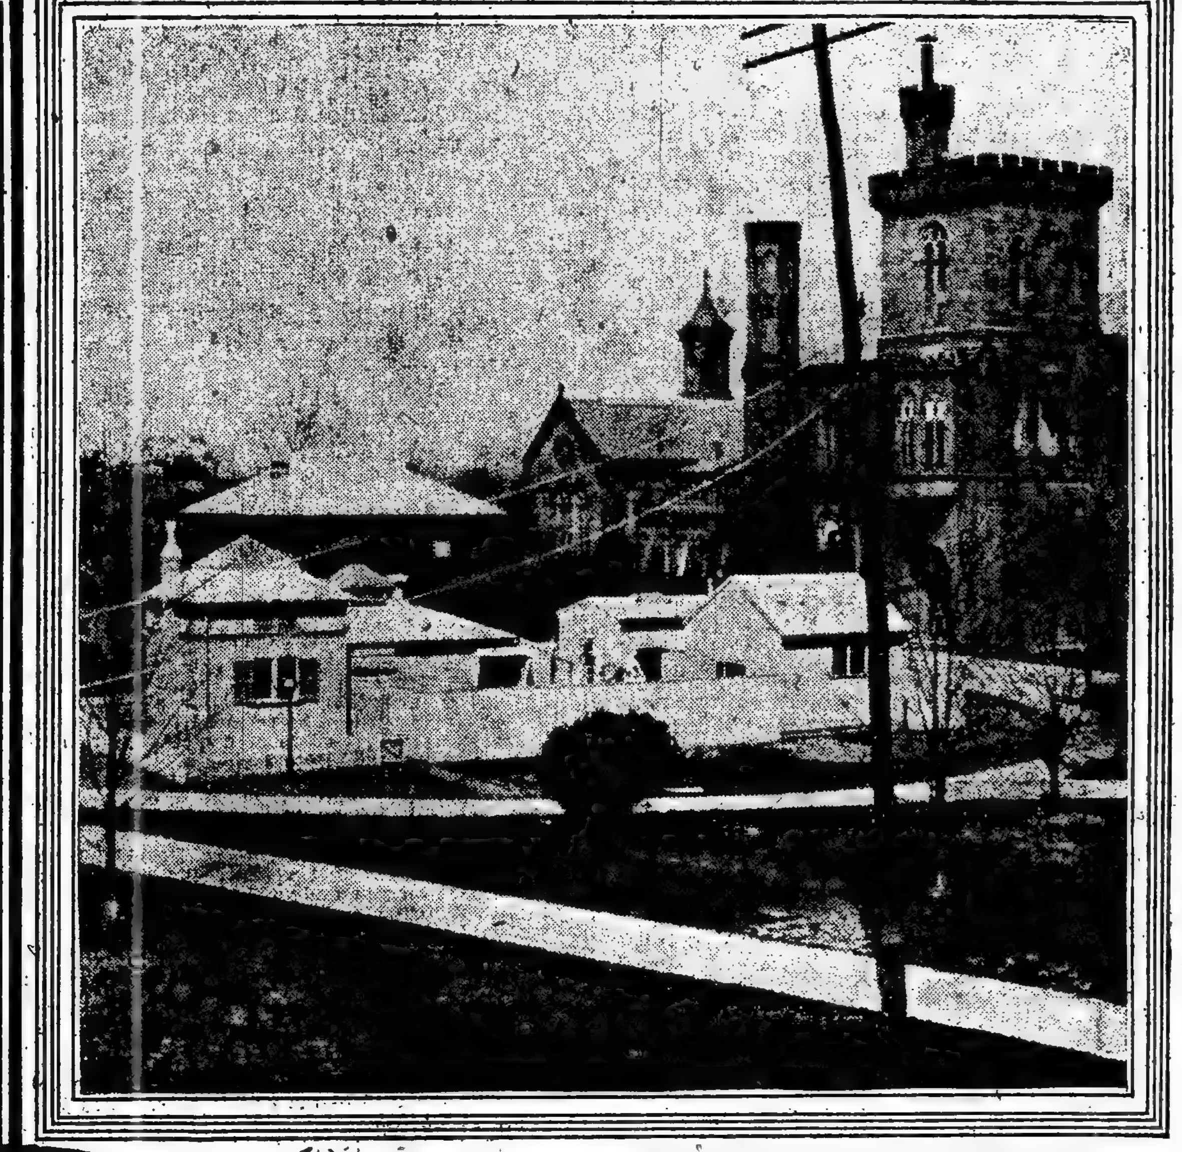
WHAT SCIENCE OWES TO PROFESSOR LANGLEY

The Late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution as a Former Associate Knew Him.

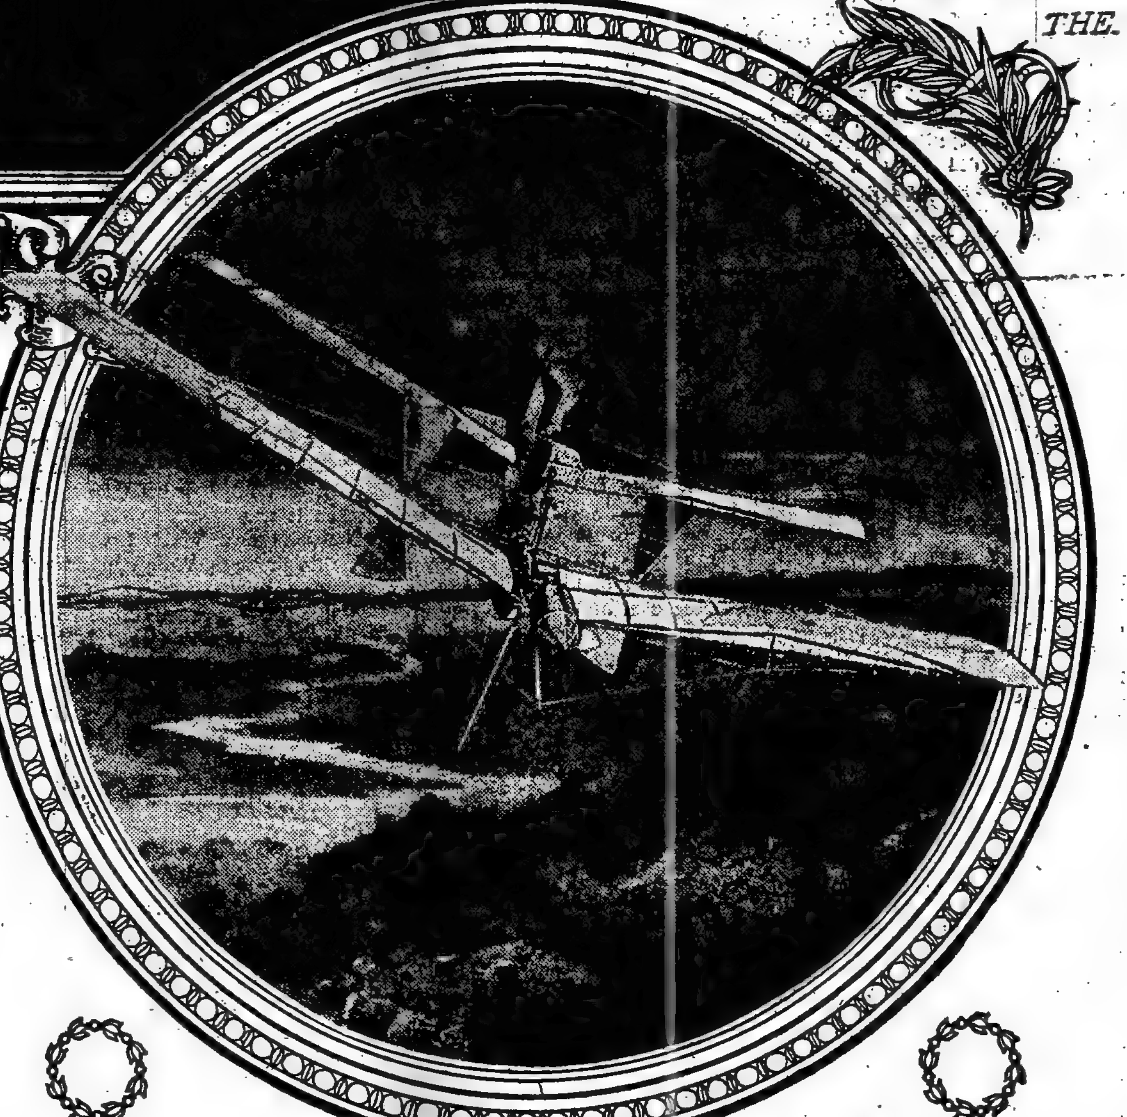


PROF. LANGLEY'S SCIENTIFIC HOUSE BOAT ON THE POTOMAC

Prof. S.P. Langley



THE ASTROPHYSICAL OBSERVATORY Smithsonian Institution



THE LANGLEY AERODROME IN FLIGHT

By Courtesy of the Scientific American.

Dr. William Hallock of Columbia Says His Most Important Work Was Not the Invention of a Flying Machine, But His Discoveries in Astrophysics---His Method of Work and Inexhaustible Patience---Rather a Hard Task Master.

BY a peculiar irony of fate it often happens that a man is known to the public at the time of his death by that particular line of work in which he was at that time occupied rather than by his greatest contributions to science. Even so was it with Prof. Langley, late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. During the last ten or twelve years of his life his chief energies were devoted toward solving the problem of mechanical flight, and not a few of his scientific associates felt that he was wasting his time and lending the weight of his name to encourage a large number of flying machine cranks and the like. Nevertheless, being a trained scientist, he went at the problem in an entirely different manner from the usual inventor. Whether man is likely ever to succeed in mechanical flight is seriously doubted by many, but there is no question as to the large amount of valuable scientific information which was obtained by Prof. Langley in his experiments with aeroplanes, on the one hand, and his researches upon the actual dynamics of the atmosphere during wind storms, on the other hand. His investigations on "the internal work of the winds" opened up an entirely new field, and form an important addition to our knowledge of aero-dynamics.

In spite of the considerable contributions, above referred to, with reference to the practical construction of flying machines made by Secretary Langley in the last dozen years of his life, it will be admitted by all that the work by which he is best known to science, and for which he will be ranked high among his contemporaries, is surely his work in astrophysics, more especially in the domain of solar radiation. It is for his success in these lines of work that he is so favorably known abroad, and for it he has received various medals.

When Sir Isaac Newton allowed a beam of light to fall upon a glass prism and resolved it into a "spectrum" of the colors, ranging from red to violet, he little dreamed that there was a very considerable region beyond the violet, on the one hand, and the red, on the other. Photography has carried our observations out past the violet a distance at least twice that from the red to the violet, and the thermopile, the bolometer, and the radiomicrometer have extended the region below the red four or five times the width of the visible spectrum.

Melloni, in his classic investigations with a thermopile, investigated the space immediately adjoining the red end of the spectrum, and found that there were very considerable amounts of energy there; it was only necessary to use a proper means of detecting it. In other words that our eye is in reality a device of very limited range. We know now that light is in its nature a wave-like motion in that "ether" which pervades all space, and is at the bottom of all optical and electrical phenomena, at least. If these waves are longer than 0.000 75 millimeter (0.000 03 inch) they fail to produce any impression of "light" in our eyes, but they may be felt as heat, and detected by most of the instruments and means for measuring heat. If the waves are less than about half the length above given, again they produce no sensation of light in the eye, but affect photographic plates, and can be detected in other ways. This region of the complete spectrum is called the "ultra-violet," and that in which the waves are too long to be seen is called the "infra-red."

No one can feel the warming effect of the sun's rays, even on the coldest days in Winter, without realizing the amount of heat energy received from the sun, and the thoughtful person may well inquire how much heat do we receive from the sun in the course of a year, for example. The rate at which we receive heat from the sun is known as the "solar constant," and is usually measured by the amount of heat energy falling upon a square centimeter (about 1-6 square inch) of the earth's surface in one second. This constant has been determined by many for points upon the surface of the earth, but a problem of fundamental importance is the determination of its value at the outskirts of our atmosphere and before the latter has exercised its absorbing influence. To the answering of this question Prof. Langley early bent all the energy of his scientific zeal, and perhaps no single incident would better illustrate the indomitable persistence of the man in his pursuits of his scientific goal than an account of his trip to Mount Whitney, California.

Evidently the place for one series of comparative observations was on the highest available mountain, where there was the thinnest possible layer of air still between the instruments and the unobstructed rays of the sun. Blindly following where science led, Prof. Langley took his apparatus to the shores of the little glacial lake nestled near the summit of Mount Whitney, the highest peak in the United States proper. Here for days, far above the timber line, amid the most forbidding surroundings, under countless difficulties, did his little party sit and watch the indications of their instruments and gather a set of observations of the greatest value. Incidentally he was compelled to determine the altitude of Mount Whitney—14,522 feet—a value which was accepted for years, and is certainly remarkably near the truth.

It is estimated that the heat reaching the surface of the earth from the sun in one year is sufficient to melt a layer of ice one hundred feet thick. In other words, the energy falling upon an acre exposed to the perpendicular radiations of the sun is at the rate of something like 6,000 horse power. When we stand spellbound at the awful evidence of power in the terrific storms which convulse our atmosphere we naturally ask, "Where does this power come from?" Our atmosphere continually absorbs about one-third of the energy which falls upon it from the sun, and hence appropriates about 3,000 horse power per acre! The wonder is that storms are not more frequent and more violent. The conditions and extent of the absorption of the sun's radiations by our atmosphere is a problem of the greatest theoretical and practical importance, and it is safe to say that the contributions of Prof. Langley toward its solution are certainly among the most valuable, if indeed they are not the most valuable.

In order to investigate the infra-red region of the sun's spectrum he invented the "bolometer," an electrical device by which the minutest quantities of radiant energy can be measured, and, as he frequently said, "if you look at it a large deflection will result." It may well be understood that an instrument which will measure the heat reaching us from the "cold impassive moon" would be rather upset by the heat of the face of an observer. With this little electrical eye he explored the vast regions of the "infra-red spectrum," mapping and testing it with an accuracy surpassing that possible in the visible spectrum. For an instrument that will measure a millionth of a degree accurately is better than the eye that may detect a hundred-millionth very inaccurately.

Nor were these the only problems of astrophysics which commanded his attention and zeal. The temperature of the surface of the moon and the phenomena transpiring upon the surface of the sun were questions to whose answering he contributed materially.

Few know or realize that it is to him that we primarily owe our present system of standard time, as used by the railroads first, and now by everybody. It was his bolometer and his careful experimentation which showed that the despised little firefly has a lighting plant which uses all its energy for visible light, whereas most of the lighting devices used by man waste at least 99 per cent. of the energy consumed.

It is then in these domains of astrophysics that his real services to science lie, where, following the meagre and uncertain steps of Melloni, he led physicists into a field which has been gleaned by many since and which has furnished the most important contributions to practical and theoretical physics in the past score of years.

He was a man of strong personality, likely to dominate almost any association into which he came; a hard taskmaster, as the real investigator is likely to be, sparing neither means, his assistants, nor himself in the pursuit of his object in research. He always had a great admiration for a piece of fine apparatus, beautifully adapted to its purpose, and yet would often say of some improvised instrument: "Well! Handsome is that handsome does."

Whatever he may have contributed to the sum total of our knowledge in other lines, whatever service to science he may have rendered as Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, he will be best and most gratefully remembered by scientific men as the inventor of the bolometer and the pioneer investigator of the distribution of energy in the solar spectrum.

As an experimenter Langley had many traits that might well be copied by other and younger men. There lay always within easy reach the omnivorous "waste-book." No memorandum, be it never so trifling, no sketch, crude as it might be, was allowed on any piece of paper other than the pages of that famous waste-book. It was an original, complete record of everything that transpired in the observatory, often arising to contradict even the great man himself, and it can well be imagined with what a quiet satisfaction the assistant in charge on some occasions could silence even his master with this mute witness, written in the Secretary's own characteristic hand. Inclined to assume that he was always right, it was a delight to prove him wrong with his own record.

A record to be of the greatest value must be complete, and Langley's waste-books came the nearest to a complete record that is practically obtainable. On one occasion he told the assistants to calculate the equation for a certain curve. This they succeeded in doing in a decidedly roundabout way, after covering many pages with mysterious-looking formulae and equations. It was interesting to note the almost reverence with which he afterward turned these pages, really impressed by what looked so profound, and which he did not understand. Mathematics was not his strong point.

He was particularly fond of getting some influential person—Senator, Congressman, or other—and introducing him to the sacred darkness of the Astrophysical observatory, and there unfolding before his astonished gaze the gorgeous spectra of a large concave grating, or of taking his breath away with accounts of the wonderful delicacy and efficiency of the bolometer. He was often asked why he did not use iron instead of platinum for the strips of the bolometer, and one can never forget the knowing twinkle in his eye as he answered: "A fly speck would go through such a strip like a cannon ball through tissue paper." Not so much of an exaggeration when it is remembered that these strips were sometimes a twentieth of a millimeter wide (1-500 inch) and not more than a tenth of that in thickness.

With all his seriousness there ran through Prof. Langley's nature a strain of almost childish humor. He never wearied of telling about the final drawing of his famous first curve of the distribution of energy in the infra-red spectrum. In the bottom of the "great omega" absorption band there was a part of the curve concerning which he was uncertain, in spite of oft-repeated observations. Should there be a minute "hump" in the curve, or should it run smooth? That was the question. In later years he confessed, with amusement, that he finally drew the curve with just the suspicion of a hump, so that he could claim the hump or not, as subsequent observations might determine, or as he was wont to express it, "so I would hit it if it was a cow and miss it if it was a calf."

⁂

Having taken part in various eclipse expeditions, where at the critical moment everything must go off quickly and faultlessly, he was a stickler for getting thoroughly ready for the test before it was commenced. If there were a number of things to be done at once or in quick and definite succession, numerous "rehearsals" were held, and not until every member of the staff could do his allotted task faultlessly was the actual test undertaken. This was especially necessary in most of the tests on mechanical flight, since the whole machinery usually went to smash on the first or second real test. Often the mechanics would spend weeks building special engines and propellers and appliances of all sorts, and then would come the eventful day. [illegible] hearsals were held, until the very best way of making the real test was worked out. Then with breathless anticipation the machinery was started. Higher and higher ran the pressure; faster and faster spun the propellers; the long test arm whirled around with dizzy rapidity, when, all at once, "something" would give way, and like the Deacon's one-horse shay, it would go to pieces, "all at once and nothing first."

⁂

Then it was that, phoenixlike, a new and a better machine arose in the mind of the inventor out of the wreck of the old one. At those times Langley never showed petulancy or annoyance—a little regret, perhaps; no anger at any one, as might have been the case if an assistant had not played his part correctly. Like the commander of the warship, he spoke to be obeyed, with irritation only against the inefficient or unsatisfactory subordinate. He repeatedly lectured his assistants upon the absolute necessity for unlimited patience in awaiting the auspicious moment for the critical observation. One must watch "as the cat does for the mouse." Then, as an example, he told how he watched a certain great sunspot for hours to catch its delicate details of structure, and would point to his famous picture of that spot, in his "New Astronomy," as the reward of his patience. After long moments of watching while the image was blurred by adverse air conditions, &c., then for a fraction of a second the air would hold still and the clear details would flash out in all their elaborate beauty. Patience, patience, and then some more patience. Genius is the faculty of taking infinite pains.

A Woman's Sighs

A WOMAN'S sighs call up for her the years
Of maidenhood, the time of joys and fears,
When thoughts, half-formed, were stirring in her breast;
Those golden days with youth and beauty blest,
Ere trials come, and blighting sorrow sears.

The prattle of sweet little lips she hears
Once more; and, thinking, while the tender tears
Fall fast, of baby hands she once caressed,
A woman sighs.

And so, 'mid all her thoughts 'tis Love endears
Each mem'ry, be it sad or sweet, and clears
The clouds of doubt and pain which once oppressed.
Ah, Faith and Hope are good, but Love is best;
The Love triumphant that to Heaven uprears
A woman's eyes.

Changed His Tactics

"WHEN one method fails," advised Congressman Dalzell in an address to a large assemblage of students, "don't be discouraged. Try another. If a bridge is too frail, turn your team into the stream and float across.

"An acquaintance of mine who travels home each evening on a suburban train had endeavored for years to persuade the railroad company to install a better system of lighting in its cars. He asserted that his eyes were being ruined trying to read the evening paper.

"This regular complaint was listened to patiently by the conductor; the higher officials made promises, but the dim lights continued to flicker. Finally the disgusted passenger ceased to grumble and made no further efforts to read.

"One evening the conductor was startled to see a complacent smile on my friend's face, as he sat in the car, eagerly reading his paper. The official glanced at the lamps, but nothing had been done to add to their brilliancy. He became very curious and elicited the following explanation:

"'When I found that I could not influence this great corporation I tackled a lesser one. And I succeeded in persuading the newspaper publisher to use a larger-faced type.'"

Young Mr. Rockefeller and Joseph's Corn "Corner"

The Ethics of That Famous "Deal" During the Famine in Egypt Viewed Pro and Con by Well-Known Clerical Authorities.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., probably never imagined when he spoke before his Bible class last Sunday morning in such favorable terms of Joseph as the man who cornered the corn, that he was going to direct such marked attention not only to his own views of that worthy Biblical character, but also to the business principles involved in that transaction. Mr. Rockefeller thought that Joseph did the right thing and in the right way. "We have Joseph still without a blot on him," said Mr. Rockefeller.

That the question admits of subtle Biblical reasoning and divergent ethical deductions will be seen from the totally opposite opinions expressed last week by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, pastor of the Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, and the Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani of the Union Theological Seminary, and one of the keenest Bible students of the present time.

Dr. Silverman credits Joseph with showing statesmanlike qualities in buying up all the available corn in the land. If he did not do it, argues Dr. Silverman, some one else, and probably an unscrupulous speculator, would have done the same thing. Besides being a statesman, he adds, Joseph was also a humanitarian.

Dr. Fagnani, on the other hand, looking at Joseph in the light of present ethical standards, finds nothing to commend in his action in making himself the head of the great food trust of Egypt. In order to show his loyalty to his master, Dr. Fagnani accuses Joseph of the basest disloyalty to the people, and this characteristic of the popular hero, he claims, should merit nothing but opprobrium and obloquy.

⁂

The latter view of the case, to some extent, is also taken by the Rev. Dr. William Byron Forbush, junior pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, Madison Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, who has announced that he will preach to-night on the character of Joseph as a business man.

"Joseph's action in his corn dealing," said Dr. Forbush, "raises the interesting question of to-day: To how great an extent should a conscientious employe sell himself to his employer? Joseph bought the nation's corn, but did he not sell himself to Pharaoh? His employer, it is true, 'recognized his shrewdness and ability and rewarded him.' The question is how far shall a man stultify his moral ideas of right in order to reap honors and position from those occupying more powerful or advantageous places than himself?"

In order that this interesting story of the ancient corner in corn may be fully understood, the Biblical account, as it occurs in the Book of Genesis, is given below. In Genesis, Chapter 41, Verses 46 to 49 and 55 and 56, we find the story of how Joseph gathered the corn for the years of famine:

And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh, King of Egypt. And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

And in the seven plenteous years the earth brought forth by handfuls.

And he gathered up all the food of the seven years, which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities; the food of the field, which was round about every city, laid he up the same.

And Joseph gathered corn as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering, for it was without number.

* * * * * * * *

And when all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread; and Pharaoh said to all the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do.

And the famine was on all the face of the earth: And Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt.

The other passage telling of the sale of the corn and how the people also sold themselves for food is found in Genesis, Chapter 47, Verses 13 to 26:

And there was no bread in all the land; for the famine was very sore, so that the land of Egypt and all the land of Canaan fainted by reason of the famine.

And Joseph gathered up all of the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought; and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses: and he fed them with bread for all their cattle that year.

When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is not aught left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies, and our lands:

Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate.

And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof.

Only the land of the priests bought he not; for the priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them: wherefore they sold not their lands.

Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your own food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones.

And they said, Thou hast saved our lives: let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; except the land of the priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

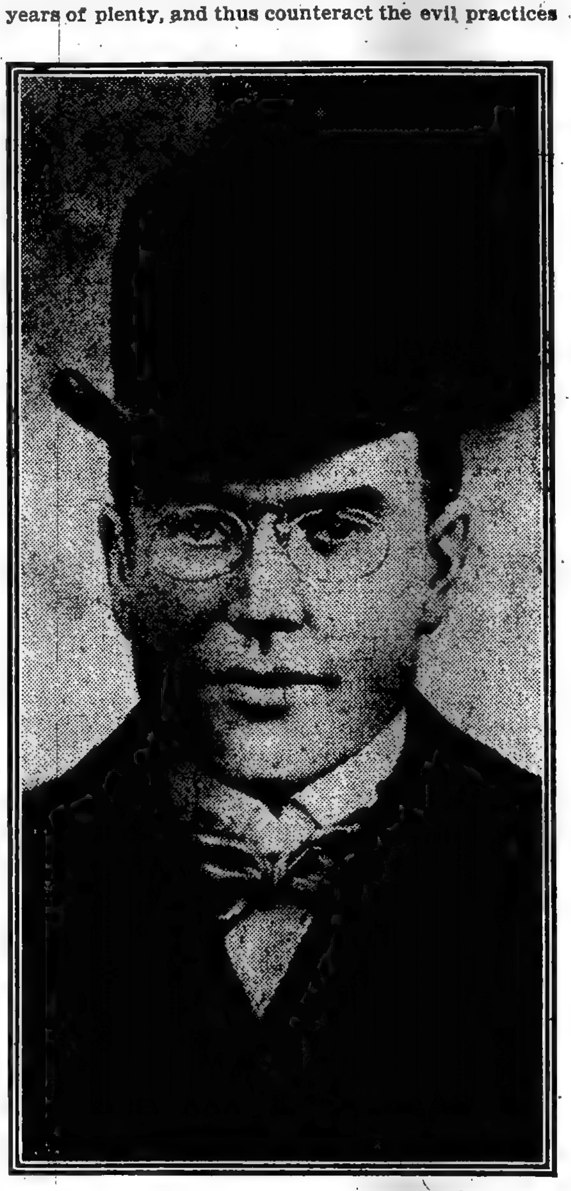
Dr. Joseph Silverman, in discussing the story with a TIMES reporter last week, said.

"It is comparatively easy to raise difficulties in the Bible, especially if we will take every passage and every word literally, without regard to history, the license of tradition, and common sense. There undoubtedly did exist a famine in the time of Joseph. Famines had happened frequently, due to a lack of inundation, and the people had suffered greatly owing to their ignorance and want of foresight to provide themselves during years of prosperity with sufficient money or food. The poor people were also imposed upon by speculators, who, in the days of famine, would sell the produce they had stored up at a greatly advanced price. Thousands upon thousands would lose their money, their cattle, and their lands in order to buy a little corn.

⁂

"It was for the purpose of preventing a 'corner in corn' that Joseph advised the Government to build great storehouses, buy up the superfluous produce of years of plenty, and thus counteract the evil practices of unscrupulous speculators who fattened upon the misery of the poor. It must not be understood that all classes of the people suffered acute starvation in the days of famine. The rich and the thrifty provided themselves in season with the means of subsistence. The people in the cities, who worked at their trades and professions, earned wages, and were able to pay for corn and other necessary food. But the farmers, the agriculturists, and the shepherds, who depended for their living on the product of the land, suffered most during a famine. To prevent utter starvation Joseph had the people from the country removed to the cities, from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof, (Genesis, xlvii., 21,) and there he supported them. As long as they had money he gave them food for money, but when this was exhausted he took their cattle, their horses, their herds and asses, and even their land, when necessary, as a pledge for food. The Government then fed the cattle, horses, &c., which otherwise would have died.



John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Joseph's Champion.

"Later the land was returned to the former owners; they were given seed to sow the land; they received as many of their cattle, horses, herds, &c., as they needed, and in payment were only required to give the Government one-fifth part of all their increase in animals or produce.

"The whole plan of Joseph was statesmanlike, as well as humanitarian. It appealed at once to Pharaoh and his counselors, and it is no wonder that Joseph was appointed Viceroy of All Egypt. Joseph successfully combated all the human sharks and speculators who had for years despoiled the poor in the season of famine and reduced them to starvation and beggary. He held the land and animals of the needy as pledge, and then returned them their patrimony. He charged them only a fair market price for the food they received. Without the wise institutions of public storehouses which Joseph had erected the people would have lost all their possessions, the whole country would have been reduced to misery, and thousands upon thousands would have died, as had been the case in previous seasons of famine.

"No wonder the people cried out to Joseph, 'Thou hast saved our lives; let us find grace in the sight of our lord and we will be Pharaoh's servants. (Genesis,xlvii., 25.) If the plan of Joseph had not been just and equitable the people, instead of calling him their savior, would have denounced him, would have fomented rebellion, broken open the storehouses, and helped themselves.

"It was because of Joseph's great statesmanship that Pharaoh gave him the name Zaphnath-Paaneah (savior and rescuer of the world.) (Genesis, xli., 45.) And to show his gratitude and the appreciation of the people of Egypt Joseph's family was given the richest portion of the land of Egypt—Goshen, as a dwelling place, and 'there they had possession and grew and multiplied exceedingly.' (Genesis, xlvii., 27.) This would never have been the case had Egypt not had great cause to be everlastingly grateful to Joseph. It was only after several generations, when the great service that Joseph had rendered Egypt had been forgotten, when a new King arose over Egypt who knew not Joseph, that the Egyptians began to oppress the Israelites. (Exodus, i., 6-8.)

"There can be no doubt that, as a result of Joseph's humanitarian and sagacious conduct, much misery was prevented in succeeding famines. The people were taught a lesson of economy and thrift, and the Government had the storehouses, and always kept a sufficient supply of corn on hand to be of use in times of famine."

The Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani takes a totally different view of Joseph, and finds nothing to commend as worthy examples for business methods to-day.

"Of course, what Joseph did or did not do has no authority for us," said Dr. Fagnani. He was not a Christian, not even a Jew. The composite narrative woven about the name of the eponym hero of the tribe of Joseph is made up of various elements, some of them doubtless of Egyptian origin. There are two main standards; first, Joseph's adventures in Egypt, (Genesis, 39, 40, 41, 47, 13-26;) second, Joseph's relations to his family, (Genesis, 37, 42-47; 12, 27-50.)

⁂

"The episode about the corner in corn, (Genesis, xlvii., 13-26,) is out of place. It should come after Genesis, xli. The question of its historicity is part of a larger question, involving all patriarchal stories. Taking the material, however, simply as a story, its ethical teaching for us to-day must be tested by the Christian standards to which we have up to the present attained.

"The story of Joseph as a pure minded young man triumphing over strong temptation will always be an inspiration. The story of Joseph as the tool of a despot, taking advantage, through his own foresight, of the people's necessities to wring from them all their property and reduce them to serfdom, (see Genesis, xlvii., 21, revised version, margin, 'he made bondmen of them,') must necessarily be held up by us to merited obloquy.

"Joseph, as the King's jackal, is an ignoble figure, loyal to his master at the cost of disloyalty to his people. What a contrast to Moses, the liberator of the oppressed! The shrewd business man who uses his foresight, not for the general good, but for his own personal advantage, is rapidly becoming, in view of our advancing ethical standards, as much of a criminal as the buccaneer or robber baron of old.

"The age-long principle of every one for himself is giving way to that of brotherhood and bearing one another's burdens. The time is fast approaching when competition will be supplanted by coöperation and the foolish and cruel waste of self-interest cease to be. A higher morality than that of the present business world must inevitably prevail. Business will no longer be business but brotherhood, and the competition will be, not as to who can do the most for himself, but who can do the most for his fellow-men.

"Joseph, the man who cornered the corn, who garnered the sweat and toil and lives and bodies of the people and turned the whole thing over into the hands of a single individual, supposed by the people and in their stupidity to have a divine right to rule over them, is only one degree less abhorrent than if he had himself directly appropriated the result of his craftiness.

"The Joseph type will before long be as extinct as the dodo, along with the monopolist and the Czars of finance of our time. For the principles of the Kingdom of Heaven are inevitable, and nothing can prevent their ultimate supremacy. The only real atheist is the man who denies that they are practicable."

EDUCATIONAL VALUE OF CHILDREN'S PLAY AND COLLEGE GAMES

FOR thousands of years it has been known that the young of all the higher animals spend much of their time in play, whose purpose is self-evident, though it has elicited an enormous amount of scientific discussion, which seems almost ridiculous for such a simple topic. Reduced to their plainest terms, all the theories state that play is merely practice for the struggle for existence which is so soon to be forced upon the young animal.

The play of children has been similarly studied because it is apparently the one aim and object of the whole life of the child from the moment it is able to make its first voluntary movement. Long before it shows more than the most rudimentary intelligence it is acting in a manner differing in no respect from the lower animals. There is no doubt, therefore, that in this period play is merely an instinctive practice for the coming battle of life—the child's first steps in education and a continuation of instinctive habits formed by very remote ancestors.

As soon as a child begins to think another element, or indeed many new elements, enter into its play, and they, too, have given rise to endless discussion as to their origin, though there is no difference of opinion that their result is educational and renders the child more fit for its future work. These elements are mostly in the way of imitating the work and ceremonies of its parents. The play of boys and girls in savage life offers the best illustration of this law. Nothing delights a little Indian boy more than to be decked out with miniature bow and arrows, to shoot at marks, to play battle, and do all the things playfully which the parent does seriously. The wonderful imagination of childhood makes the matter very real to the little ones. They lose their own identity more or less completely, and at the same time actually think life into their inanimate toys.

Soon other elements make their appearance and correspond to the life of a later culture than that of the lowest animal-like savages. Ceremonies occupy a large share of all primitive cultures, and the children naturally copy all the marriage, funeral, and other customs they witness. It has been proved that some of the present games of childhood have this origin, and persist by reason of the ridiculous conservatism of children. When the little one learns a game in one way, it becomes furious if any one attempts innovations. It must be done over and over again—exactly the same—and thus we find a few games of imitation persisting for centuries essentially as in past ages.

Even in the most primitive cultures it was necessary to teach the children. The boy had to be instructed in wood lore, not a small matter by any means. He had to be shown the haunts and habits of animals, fish, and birds, how to catch them and preserve them. It is really surprising what an immense fund of information a savage must absorb before he is competent to raise a family. In the same way the girl had to learn a thousand and one things before she was fit to be a wife. It was all education, but a very practical one, with no frills.

When civilization brought on that division of labor which is now so evident, the old education in the family was gradually displaced by the apprenticeship which still exists here and there in the trades. It was a very serious matter, as far removed from play as could be, but it was education nevertheless, and the gradation between it and the play of infancy is complete. One drifts into the other.

As man became more intelligent by the ordinary course of evolution, his civilization changed, so that he lived more by his wits and less by brute force, skillful though it may have been. Mental training then became necessary, and it was established by the same gradual process which gave rise to the practical training of savages and the apprenticeship. By the very law of survival, those who could use their intelligence to best advantage were the main survivors. Hence what is called education in the modern sense—mental training—became a necessity of civilization.

There was a time when child nature was overlooked. One pietist even asserted that "Play of whatever sort should be forbidden in all evangelical schools, and its vanity and folly should be explained to the children, with warnings of how it turns the mind away from God and eternal life, and works destruction to their immortal souls." Happily, this monstrously unnatural system could not survive, and the drift of all modern methods is back to the original position of Plato, to utilize the normal and necessary tendency to play as the best instrument, if not the main one, by which the mind could be trained.

The last fifty years have seen a greater and greater recognition of the importance of the matter, because children are sent to school several years before much can be done in the way of mental training. Consequently there is, in the lower grades, a perfect system of play which is percolating into the higher, and driving out arithmetic and other abstruse things to the time at which they can be understood.

As the child grows older, play becomes less of an essential and more of an adjunct to the more serious efforts, but it is still necessary. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is as true now as in the past ages, when it was first discovered. Nevertheless, the period has now arrived when play is gradually shifting its purpose, from a necessary and sole end of existence to a mere means of relaxation from the exhaustive efforts of the grown savage boy, the apprentice, or the modern college man; and this is the rock upon which college athletics has been wrecked.

Natural play at all ages exercises muscles, nerves, and all the perceptive faculties. Hearing, eyesight, and touch become keener, and the mind develops a quickness which may be the means of future success in the business of life. For this end competition is essential, as it is the needed stimulus to effort.

It was an easy matter for sports to drift into a form in which only a few could compete, while the rest sat on benches and derived no benefit except the relaxation of the nerve strains of the classroom or study. The majority get none of the physical benefits, and to make up for the loss, there is a painful perfunctory course in the gymnasium which, from the absence of contest, defeats the very purpose of sport. Indeed, the strains may be only increased. The excitement of contest sends blood bounding into the byways of the body, where it is usually sluggish; it flushes the whole system and actually relieves fatigue, which, to a certain extent at least, is due to the collection of wastes and poisons.

The worst feature of these modern and unnatural intercollegiate contests is not the exclusion from the sport of the very ones who need the exercise, but it is the positive damage done by the excessive training of the few picked men. This is a matter which even physiologists are apt to forget, so that there is not nearly so great an outcry from physicians as there should be.

Only recently has it been shown that the modern game of football has assumed a form which the human frame cannot endure unless it is incased in armor, and that brings up the question of limit of strains. An engineer calculates the strains which a bridge or machine must resist, and then makes the materials several times stronger than this maximum. If this factor of safety is five, a boiler, for instance, is five times stronger than any strain it is ever expected to resist. Nature does the same with our bodies—every part is capable of standing several times the strain it is ever intended to resist. We have more of everything than we usually need—the lungs, for instance, are several times as large as necessary for moderate work. The surplus power is needed only occasionally to tide over a short period of accidental strain or work, in which the whole machine would collapse if it did not have a surplus of strength. The excess is also needed for accidents, as when some corrosive eats the boiler plates—explosion would otherwise result. Similarly, if man's lungs are corroded by disease, he still has enough surplus to tide him over the time until repairs are made, otherwise pneumonia would always be fatal.

The boiler would be ruined if its strains were habitually greater than the calculated amount for which designed, and the human body is ruined if its strains are habitually or even too often at high grade. The arteries are the main sufferers, for they thicken and harden under great strains, so that a whole host of diseases connected with this condition of arterial hardening are found to be the lot of men who have been subjected to great muscular strains. Even sedentary men live longer than the laborers who have abused their surplus powers.

The heart enlarges under training, indeed it is the purpose of training to give a heart which will pump well under the awful exertion of the contest. Afterward the athlete has a heart too big, and though it generally dwindles to a size more appropriate to his needs, it may remain dilated the rest of his life.

The worst damage is to that queer quality we call vitality. The candle is burned at both ends, and the man has not the nervous factor of safety he should have. This is the reason we read of so many athletes who become addicted to alcohol or drugs, who become nervously exhausted, or who contract consumption.

It is a rule, then, that no college physical sport should ever subject the body to heavy strains for long periods. "Training" of an immature boy is a crime, but even for the mature man it is harmful. It is generally forgotten that it takes but very moderate exercise to keep the muscles and tissues in good condition—excessive or prolonged exertion is never needed. Many old men have boasted that they never took exercise or indulged in physical sports, but examination shows that they have always, though unconsciously, taken enough for their needs.

College sports, then, are necessary physical competitions in which every one must join, more or less, though never to the point of severe strain to arteries nor so prolonged as to need a bigger heart than is necessary for future use. They are intended to relieve the unwholesome nerve strains which civilization has thrust into the study and classroom, and to train muscles, nerves, and perceptions to increased efficiency. They are educational means to an end, and should be as carefully considered and controlled by the Faculty as the studies. The parents instinctively demand it, and their instincts are right.

Unhappily the teachers, as a rule, look upon the matter purely as one of recreation, which the students must take for themselves, merely being under some control to keep them from taking more than enough. Here and there it has been left entirely to the student, instead of being utilized for its great educational value. The present system, then, is unnatural and unscientific, and abuses were bound to enter.

It is therefore time to retrace a little from the mediaeval point of view to that of Plato, and place all sports under Faculty control and management as part and parcel of the education. The boy is at a very critical period, when a little physical training may make all the difference between success and failure in life, and by physical training is not meant the deadening gymnasium and the hypertrophy of a few muscles the boy may never need in his life, but the development of faculties—mental, nervous, and muscular—sure to result from normal, natural, and healthy play. If the medical sciences and anthropology teach any lesson at all, it is the modern necessity for colleges to make sport an instrument for training our sons to be more efficient men—it is nature's way.

CHARLES E. WOODRUFF, Major, U. S. A.

THE NEW BELLE OF THE WHITE HOUSE

WHILE there is little lacking in public knowledge of the Miss Roosevelt that was, very little is known of the Miss Roosevelt that is. When Mr. Longworth wedded the President's eldest daughter, Ethel, the pretty fourteen-year-old girl, succeeded to the title of "Miss" in the Executive's family and became the belle of the White House.

The Miss Roosevelt that is is but a schoolgirl. At 14 she is more interested in French and her school chums than she is in the brilliancy of social life. Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt are doing their best to prevent their daughter turning her mind to things social prematurely. She is afforded all opportunity to cultivate companionship with her numerous girl friends, and she has been in turn hostess and guest at various children's parties, but all care is taken to avoid anything in the nature of what society calls a function. This will come in time, of course, and it seems very natural to suppose that Mrs. Roosevelt would desire as bright a social career for her own daughter as that with which her stepdaughter was favored. But it must wait a while.

So carefully is the new Miss Roosevelt guarded from publicity that, up to this time, it has been found difficult to learn much about the young lady. The photographers of Washington testify to the fact that, while they have been welcomed to picture all others, Miss Ethel's parents have sternly refused to allow her to be photographed.

Some of her school chums are said to have secured her picture with the aid of their hand cameras, but the films or plates are solely for their private collections. Ethel has been photographed professionally in a group with her parents, stepsister, and brothers, but attempts to secure permission for an individual picture have generally been fruitless.

Two brothers of Ethel Roosevelt are older than she. They are Theodore and Kermit. Theodore is a lower classman at Harvard, and Kermit is at a preparatory school at Groton, Mass. Ethel is a pupil at what is known as the Cathedral School, in the suburbs of Washington. The institution is under the auspices of the Episcopal Church. It is called the Cathedral School because it is situated on an extensive tract of ground, on which it is proposed eventually to erect a large Episcopal cathedral. A parish, known as St. Albans, is already flourishing out there, and in pleasant weather services are held in the open air. In the early part of October, 1904, a notable service was held, at which the Archbishop of Canterbury preached a sermon. As is well known, President Roosevelt belongs to the Dutch Reformed Church. Mrs. Roosevelt is an Episcopalian, and all her children are being brought up in that faith. The first Mrs. Roosevelt was also an Episcopalian, and her daughter, Miss Alice, has likewise affiliated with that Church, and it is also the faith of her grandmother, Mrs. Lee of Boston.

This is the second session that Ethel Roosevelt has been attending the Cathedral School. Usually she goes in to the White House on Friday afternoons and remains there with the family until Sunday afternoon—sometimes staying over until Monday morning. Those who are acquainted with her state that she is an apt scholar, though not any brighter than the average girl of her age. It is understood that the progress being made by her in her studies is entirely satisfactory to her parents.

It is also said that Ethel is popular among her schoolmates, and from time to time she invites some of her girl chums to visit her at the White House. As a rule a White House carriage is sent out to the school for the President's daughter, but as he has instilled democratic ideas into all of his children it happens every now and then that little Miss Ethel will come into town on a trolley car when the weather is pleasant.

Ethel is generally regarded as the best-looking of the Roosevelt children. Her complexion is clear, and at all times she has the appearance of enjoying excellent health. She is neither tall nor short for her age—just the average size for a girl of her years. In womanhood she will doubtless be taller than Mrs. Longworth, but not much taller, in the opinion of those who know the Roosevelt family well. Ethel, like Mrs. Longworth, has light eyes. It seems to be characteristic of the Roosevelts. Her hair is also light brown. Her head is shapely, and her figure, as she develops, promises to be a trim one.

Miss Roosevelt will be in her eighteenth year when the President's term of office expires. Since the marriage of Alice it is a question very much discussed as to whether Col. Roosevelt's second daughter will or will not make her formal début in the White House. Most of the society devotees are positive that she will quit school before the social season of the Winter of 1908-9 opens. Others seem to think that the President will insist on her attending an institution of learning of a much higher grade than any in the District of Columbia. If that be his wish Miss Roosevelt may be 20 years or more of age before she is graduated with the high honors her father would have her take.

"IF you have brains, prepare to shed them now." If one may paraphrase Mark Antony's famous invocation thus, it would give voice to one of the latest demands that the scientific investigator is making to those who would contribute something to the search for accurate knowledge on a subject of vital importance to humanity. In that spheroidal box of bone, the top of which is adorned, in some instances, with hair, that every man, woman, and child carries above his or her shoulders, there is usually a soft gray and white substance, full of wrinkles and creases, weighing, on an average, fifty ounces, called a brain. It is this soft substance that directs the thinking and moving machinery called man—and how it does it, and why it does it well in some cases and badly in others is the problem science would solve. Hence the need for brain specimens to furnish the brain laboratory of the investigator in this curious department of knowledge. Three associations have already been formed for the preservation of brains after death for the benefit of scientific research—the Mutual Autopsy Society of Paris, the American Anthropometric Society, and the Cornell Brain Association. Quite recently, also, the Association of American Anatomists appointed a committee on brain bequests and preservation methods, consisting of Dr. Edward Anthony Spitzka, Prof. Wilder of Cornell University, and Dr. Hrdlicka. The object of this committee is to suggest ways for making bequests that will hold in law, and to bring about a uniform method to be used in brain dissection.

On the top floor of a handsome modern dwelling in this city, 66 East Seventy-third Street, is the workshop of one of the recognized leaders in this department of inquiry, Dr. Edward Anthony Spitzka, whose father, Dr. E. C. Spitzka, the noted alienist, living in the same house, is the discoverer of the inter-optic lobes of the lower brain. To the uninitiated this workshop of the Spitzkas is somewhat forbidding, a medley of charts covered with unintelligible lines and measurements, learned books and pamphlets, death masks, physiological casts, and, the key to much of this mystery, jar upon jar of human brains—brains of murderers, brains of scientists, brains of writers, brains of plain, ordinary people, brains of apes. There are about thirty in all, each in its own jar, swimming in a solution of formalin and salt. At the College of Physicians and Surgeons there are 600 more specimens of the same kind in Dr. Spitzka's care, together with brains of the lower animals. Each brain in the doctor's private study has a record of its life history, an account of what it did, for weal or woe, while it had a body to serve its behests, before it reached its last abode, an inert, pulpy mass, in the formalin jar.

"Yes, there are the brains of some noted criminals in some of those jars," remarked Dr. Spitzka, in answer to my inquiry, "and, if certain theories as to the 'criminal brain type' were correct, it ought to be possible to distinguish the jar that holds the criminal brain from its neighbor that is occupied by the brain of some man of genius. But I have yet to find the scientist who could make such a discrimination. Notwithstanding a notion that in some quarters is rather prevalent, the study of criminals by anthropological methods does not necessarily tend to establish a criminal 'type' nor to describe crime as equivalent to infantilism, epilepsy, atavism, genius, or anything else maintained by the Lombroso school. Many criminals show not a single anomaly in their physical or mental make-up, while many persons with marked evidences of structural aberration have never exhibited the criminal tendency. Every attempt to prove crime to be due to a constitution peculiar only to criminals has failed signally. It is because most criminals are drawn from the ranks of the low, the degraded, the outcast, that investigators were ever deceived into attempting to set up a 'type' of criminal. The social conditions which foster the great majority of crimes are more needful of study and improvement; by such means only can crime be made less prevalent—among the sane, at least. Society wrongs neither the criminal nor itself if criminals were studied as individuals and not as a 'species.' From the study of known normal brains we have learned that there is a certain range of variation of structural characters. No two brains are exactly alike, and the greatest source of error in the assertions of Benedickt and Lombroso has been the finding of this or that variation in a criminal's brain and maintaining such to be a characteristic of the 'criminal constitution'—unmindful of the fact that like variations of structure may and do exist in the brains of normal, moral persons. It were as justifiable to set up a 'criminal brain type' as to speak of an 'insane brain type'; and the classes of criminality are quite as numerous as the kinds of insanity. In criminals demonstrably sane in life I have failed thus far to find any cerebral characteristic ascribable to an alleged 'criminal constitution.' Out of the brain specimens of seventeen murderers that I have studied, some of which are in the jars that you see, I have been unable to find one showing anything abnormal, or that could be taken in any way to be corroborative of a criminal brain type.

"Take the case of Czolgosz, for instance, whose brain I examined—although I did not preserve it. So far as our knowledge of the correlation of brain structure and brain function extends, nothing was found in the brain of this assassin that would condone his crime for the reason of mental disease due to intrinsic cerebral defect or distortion. The brain weight, a little over rather than under the average, pointed to a good condition of the organ. The development of the fissures was in the direction usual in ordinary, average brains. Generally speaking, the brain did not exhibit that especial kind of symmetry of structure in the cerebral halves that is so characteristic of the brains of highly endowed individuals; but there were absolutely none of those conditions present that could have been at the bottom of any abnormality or mental derangement. Hence, in Czolgosz's case, the verdict must be, 'socially diseased and perverted, but not mentally diseased.'

"If there is error in the 'criminal type' theory what is there in the claims of phrenology? you ask. Absolutely nothing. The idea that the bumps or depressions on a man's head indicate the presence or absence of certain moral characteristics in his mental equipment is one of the absurdities developed from studies in this field that has long since been discarded by science. The ideas of the phrenologist Gall, however ridiculous they may now seem in the light of a century's progress, were nevertheless destined to become metamorphosed into the modern principles of cerebral localization. This is now a firmly established doctrine, amplified and systematized by contributions from many sources, and important results should be expected from studies of brains of the various races, sexes, and individuals with marked mental traits. From this study we know that persons possessing great intellectual capacity, persons excelling in the creative arts, the sciences, and in human affairs in general are apt to have heavier, larger brains than those of the ordinary population, as well as brains showing a greater complexity in their convolutions. As you can see in these specimens, the brain surface presents alternating depressions or fissures marking these convolutions. The surface pattern of these fissures and convolutions shows the same general features in all normal human brains, and, to some extent, in the higher anthropoid apes as well. When we come to make more careful comparisons, however, and delve more deeply into details of the arrangement of these fissures, we recognize many differences, not only in the brains of races and of individuals, but also in the two cerebral halves of the same individual. It is a significant fact, by the way, that we find the higher anthropoids not further removed from the lower races of man with respect to brain weight and structure than are the latter from a number of men of superior intellect in the white race. The jump in this respect from a Cuvier or a Thackeray, for instance, to a Zulu or a Bushman is no less than from the latter to the gorilla or the orang.

"There is a physiognomy of brain which portrays intellectuality quite as often as does the outward physiognomy. That this so-called cerebral physiognomy is difficult to describe in so many words, or that we are occasionally deceived by it, does not alter the fact that we may generally learn to recognize and judge it. Patient study of a greater amount of suitable material may in the future enable us to express in scientific terms what is now a mere personal conviction. In these studies, by the way, one cannot restrain the thought, What a pity that we have not the brain of a Newton, a Shakespeare, a Michael Angelo, a Beethoven, or an Edgar Allan Poe! How much more useful would be the contemplation of such organs of thought, how elevating, how inspiring would their lessons be! Hitherto, however, we have examined, almost exclusively, the brains of pauper ne'er-do-wells and criminals.

"One of the best-developed brains on record recently came into my collection, this brain that you see here. To whom did it belong? He was a familiar figure to every old New Yorker, and his name is probably known from here to the Pacific. In weight this brain of his is above the average, and in structural features admirable in the depth and complexity of the fissures and convolutions with which it is marked. Contrast it with this Papuan brain. Can you not recognize at a glance the intellectual physiognomy in the one, and the lack of it in the other? I think any student, without knowing anything about the man from whom it was taken, would say that this brain belonged to a person of note, of unusual attainments and ability, and he certainly was a remarkable man, even if there may have been some little defect somewhere in his mentality—although his brain shows not a single imperfection to the anatomist. He had an eventful career. Starting out a penniless lad, at the age of 20 he had accumulated an income of $10,000. He introduced the first street railway in Europe. In this country he built the Union Pacific Railroad and opened up navigation and commerce between the United States and the Far East. More than once he got into jail, and in six different courts, without proper trial, he was adjudged a lunatic, although no insanity expert would sign his commitment papers. Just before he died, not much more than a year ago, an old man at the Mills Hotel, he dictated his remarkable autobiography, an amazing record of facts, accurate in detail, admirable in expression—a book of about 100,000 words in length, all of which was dictated in the space of thirty-five hours. Possibly, in some little fibre of this wonderful brain of his there was what we might call a 'screw loose,' though I have been unable to detect it. Did you ever see him on his old bench in Madison Square playing with the children? He was a strange, many-sided character, an encyclopedia of information, and the aspect, the face written, on his brain, complex and highly developed as you see, denotes just about what he was, the eccentric 'citizen' George Francis Train.

"In comparing brains, such as this specimen from the head of George Francis Train, with others lower down in the scale of intelligence, besides the differences in weight and structure, you will notice a difference in composition, and in a direction that overturns a popular conception. One often hears it said of an intellectual man, 'He has lots of gray matter.' To be sure the statement is true enough, but not in the sense commonly implied. The brain of man is characterized more by its preponderance of white matter over that of gray matter than for its preponderance of gray matter over the gray matter of the lower animals, excluding perhaps the larger whales and the elephants. The value of arriving at a true estimate of the importance of the ratio of white and gray matter has been greatly enhanced by recent researches, and, as a result, it is seen that the preponderance of white over gray matter indicates the higher intelligence.

"An interesting and most important branch of the study of brain anatomy is the comparison of racial brains. In spite of the meagre records in this direction up to the present time, there seems to be little doubt of the existence of typical distinctions between the brains of different races. That such distinguishing features have not yet been definitely established is due entirely to the lack of sufficient specimens. For a while, at least, we must be content to say that there is something in the 'cerebral physiognomy' which seems at times quite as expressive in the brains of the inferiorly equipped races when compared with those of the highly intellectual as the dull, stupid, vacuous, outer physiognomy of the half-witted individual differs from the bright, animated, forceful, and energetic look in the face of the vigorous thinker and talented genius. In this racial brain study, the outer cerebral appearances of the Eskimo, for example, differ from those of the white man, and both of these differ radically from that of the Papuan.

"In this branch of the study it may be of interest to note that I have just received the brain of a native of Van Diemen's Land, the first specimen of the kind to reach a scientific investigator. The race is small of stature—you remember Conan Doyle has one of them in 'The Sign of the Four'—and the brain, as you see, is small and very well marked. I have not as yet had time to make a complete dissection of it. Such investigations should be carried on not only among the purer races, but among the mixing races as well. And nowhere in the world is the mixture of races going on so actively as in this country. If we may judge from the present indications of the formation of an American family of the Aryan race, the conditions governing the population of this continent seem to have been peculiarly advantageous to the preservation and restoration of the best types, characterized by greater energy and culture. We may therefore expect to find bigger and better brains here, and researches of this kind should be encouraged by a greater accumulation of the requisite material.

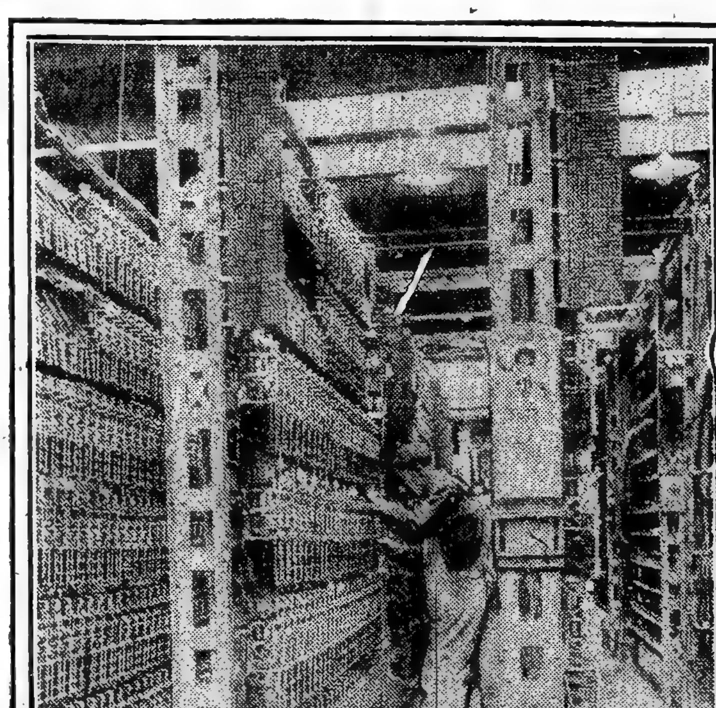
"That is the great difficulty with which we have to contend in pursuing this study—the difficulty in procuring enough brain specimens. The very suggestion of an autopsy is looked upon with horror by most people; yet it is a sentimentality prejudicial to all progress in this line of scientific research. An anatomical examination of this kind, conducted with expert hands, no more violates respect for the body of the deceased than does the embalming process. With our modern perfected methods there is no mutilation of the body in an autopsy. Throughout the history of medicine knowledge of disease has been obtained only through the study of processes and the results of disease as revealed after death. When this is understood by a greater number of people, not only medicine, but anatomy and anthropology as well, will reap a benefit which in its turn will surely be useful to the world."

THE PASSING OF THE TELEPHONE GIRL: A RETROSPECT

THE tireless, talkless, waitless, girlless central is no longer a myth, but an accomplished fact, and there has been some anxiety felt in "Hello" circles as to the future of the telephone girl in case the automatic girlless 'phone should be adopted. As a hint of what may be expected, it is said that a Canadian inventor of this voiceless and soulless contrivance that prevents people from "cutting in" and incidentally cuts the girls out has made an offer to the City of Paris, France, to take her 2,000 telephone girls off her hands in consideration of her adoption of the automatic exchange. He proposes to find husbands for the girls in the United States. It is the general opinion in this country that, should occasion demand, the American "hello" girl is fully competent to provide for herself in that particular.

In the early days of telephony, men were employed to operate the switchboards. Then the work was arduous, owing to the primitive and imperfect nature of the apparatus. The presence of men at the central had as much to do with the unpopularity of the telephone in its early days as its ineffectiveness as an agent of communication. It will be well remembered by the older users of the telephone how difficult it was to get service without being drawn into an argument which, while wasting a considerable amount of time, often led to the use of language far removed from the best standards of the drawing room.

The introduction of the girl wrought a remarkable change, not only in the etiquette of the telephone, but in the quality of the service rendered. In fact, its actual development dates from that time, as previously the telephone was looked upon as an unreliable agent, and only used because of its ability to sometimes transmit speech intelligently. The girl, therefore, has been the greatest personal factor in the remarkable development of this now almost universal industrial and social agency. Her deftness, patience, civility, and painstaking qualities were early recognized as being just as essential to the telephone service as the most perfect apparatus. It does not need a great deal of imagination to understand the situation existing at the time when vexatious delays tended to arouse the ire of man and severely tax the good nature of the operator. The ability of a soft answer to turn away wrath was never better illustrated than in the case of a choleric subscriber on one end of a line and a golden-voiced girl at the other. By her cheerful civility and even temper the anger of the man is checked, whereas when he had to deal with male operators profanity flourished like a green bay tree.



THE NEW CENTRAL.

THE OLD CENTRAL.

It has been said that the telephone has been the greatest productive agent of "cuss words" ever known, and this can well be understood when one considers the conditions that existed prior to the advent of the telephone girl. The "hello" girl is one of the most interesting factors in American life. Aside from her prosaic duties as an operator, she has been the central figure in some of the most stirring romances of recent years, outdoing the wildest dreams of a Laura Jean Libbey. From the commonplace surroundings of a telephone central she has gone to a palace as its mistress.

The basis of most of these romances has been the silvery tones of the familiar responsive "hello" at the distant end of the wire, which illustrates in a remarkable way the charm of a well-modulated voice. Perhaps no better demonstrations of this fact were ever presented than in the many instances where a man has been led to forego the pleasures of bachelorhood for the charms of married life, all on account of some characteristic tones of sweetness which it has been his good fortune to hear from some unknown and unseen girl. One of the most interesting truisms, little known outside of the telephone profession, is that sweet-voiced girls rarely leave the employ of the company except to get married. In fact, in many localities, the seeming inefficiency of the service is not due to any failure of the apparatus, but to the frequency with which the operators become married. This is especially true of operators in the smaller towns, as they are brought into oral contact with a much larger number of people than would be possible were they engaged in any other vocation.

It is estimated that there are over 5,000,000 telephones in the United States. Allowing one operator for every 150 instruments, with the necessary reliefs required for the continuous operation of this immense service, makes a grand total of over 45,000 girls. To show what is accomplished by these girls, allow five calls per day for each instrument, and we find that they respond to over 25,000,000 "hellos" every day of the year. It would seem that here is a state of the eternal fitness of things in that woman, as usual, exercises her prerogative of answering back and controls a large part of the talk of this country.

Her familiar voice is heard wherever the telephone wire leads. From the isolated prairie homestead to the hurry and bustle of Wall Street is a long step, but the voice of the ubiquitous telephone girl is heard all along the line. So familiar has her presence been in the growth of the country at large that any development in the art of telephony which would do away with her services would appear to be a radical departure from the accepted methods in vogue. The telephone business does not differ from any other, inasmuch as the process of evolution always tends to eliminate the personal factor as much as possible, substituting mechanical means for manual operations. Hence the girlless telephone is no longer an inventor's idle dream. It eliminates one of the most interesting features of a telephone call, and reduces it to a purely mechanical operation.

Stop for a moment and think what this means. Heretofore you have relied upon the girl at central for her assistance in securing a number. If there have been delays or errors in securing the numbers desired, you have blamed her, and she has accepted the condemnation as a matter of course, whether they were right or wrong, but the automatic machine knocks from under one this time-honored custom of blaming another for one's own errors, and, in the language of the street, "puts it up to you."

A machine, no matter how ingeniously constructed, cannot think, but is entirely governed by the will of the operator; hence in the adoption of the automatic telephone we eliminate the girl who has placed her intelligence at our command, and instead assume the entire responsibility of our actions.

The usual methods employed at present to call a number are well known. First central is signaled. She then takes up a cord which connects with your line and attaches it to the wires of the party desired. If he or she is not busy, she rings him, and you are shortly placed in communication. But suppose he or she is busy, then the telephone girl relieves you of any further labor on your part by promising to let you know when the line is disengaged.

With an automatic exchange you get your party direct, as the entire mechanical process is controlled by you. By the means of an auxiliary attachment you send over the wire a series of electrical impulses. These operate magnetic switches at central which connect your line with that of the party called. If that party is talking, instead of the familiar "busy," a buzz is heard, and it is necessary for you to repeat the operation at a later time. If the party is not busy, you press a button attached to your instrument, and this automatically rings the bell of the party called.

This, in brief, is the machine method. A careful comparison of the two will show that, irrespective of the advanced mechanical side of the principles involved, yet the personal element, with its attendant fallibility, is a part of the system, which, when eliminated, cannot be replaced by the most perfect mechanism.

The feeling of assurance given by the friendly voice of central will be missing, and instead there will arise a sense of incompleteness which will be difficult to overcome.

MARCH 1906

"An Englishwoman in New York"; Wives and Mothers

She Finds Their Relation to Husbands and Children Very Different Here from Domestic Conditions in the Old Country.

I SAT the other afternoon through a performance of that delightful play of Barrie's, "Alice-Sit-By-the-Fire," and was aroused by some American voices just back of me from a meditation of the moral that we must all one day sit by the fire and knit, and yet not protest or grow bitter or soured, but smile upon the young who will take our places.

A middle-aged woman and a sweet young girl were discussing and criticising the play. Said the young girl to the woman:

"But Auntie, dear, it is such a queer play. Of course if the mother on the stage really loved her children she could not send them away from India to England and she stay there and never see them till they were almost grown up. Why, to think! She sends them away from her as soon as they are born and lets nurses and servants bring them up in England, and then comes to them suddenly and makes believe to love them. Isn't it silly for her to go on so?"

Said the aunt: "You see, she's an Englishwoman, and these Englishwomen neglect their children shamefully. I must say I can't get in sympathy with this one."

Voices came then from the front and the sides of me—some such sweet voices, some such strident ones.

"It's a first-rate play, and it is funny and pathetic at the same time, but how can you believe a mother loves her children when she separates them from her for all those years and never comes back to her own country till her husband's time's up in India and she can't help herself? No, she's a cruel thing. She hasn't the real mother-love in her, that's certain."

"It seems she won't go away and leave her husband alone in India! Well, what business have they living in a place where the climate kills off all the babies?"

* * *

"Why didn't she go to England with her children and stay with them till her children were educated? Her duty was to look after her children."

"Well, it just shows the difference between an American mother and an English mother. Of course it's only a play, but can you imagine an American playwright depicting a good American mother who lives in the Philippines with her husband and has half a dozen children, more or less, and sends them off to the United States with a nurse or friend as soon as they're born?"

"No, I simply can't conceive it. If such a play were written I am sure they would entitle it 'The Heartless Mother' or something of that sort. It would be a moral problem play."

"But maybe this is a moral problem play?"

"Yes, it is; but the moral is that we must all take back seats and let our children take our former places!"

"But this Barrie seems to want us to believe this Englishwoman is a good mother and loves her childen! Now, how could a mother—" &c.

The curtain went up and one of your sweetest actresses, all gloriously youthful underneath the halo of gray that surrounded her face, played to the finish the part of the English mother, returned to England with her mother's heart full of love and longing for the children which an adverse climate had made it necessary for her to ship away in order to preserve their health and even their lives.

The conversation of the matinée women about me set me a-thinking on the differences between English wives and American wives, and English mothers and American mothers. I remembered so many American women I had known who would go South or North or East or West, or to Europe taking their children with them, and leaving their husbands at work and alone.

I remembered certain nice American women I had known in London who at first I had taken for granted were living apart from their husbands because of "incompatability of temper" or such-like strange excuse for matrimonial separation—as though there ever were two tempers on earth that were not incompatible and did not need educating in the art of "give and take" in order to be able to abide together in apparent harmony.

What used to be my surprise to discover that these women had weekly or semi-weekly letters from their "dear husbands," who sent them such checks and letters of credit as would enable them to live in luxury! What was my surprise to discover that the daughters loved their fathers devotedly—what was my greater surprise that the wives loved and were loved "devotedly"!

* * *

Actually these separations existed for years, sometimes, and only once in a while would I hear of a wife sailing distractedly and determinedly back on the fastest liner afloat to sue for divorce and claim alimony as a balm for being deprived of the tender affection of which some other woman, nearer at hand, though more far-seeing, had, during the legal partner's long absence, taken possession.

I remember an Englishwoman who, speaking of an American woman acquaintance, thus explained her lack of cordiality to her:

"She is a charming woman, and her daughters have every gift of grace, and I do like them all, but I am always thinking of the husband left at home to his loneliness and his own devices. It seems to me that Mrs. Blank is lacking both in affection, appreciation of her duty, and womanly cleverness."

"But," I interjected, "she seems devoted to her daughters, and she says Pittsburg was bad for their lungs or their throats, or something; besides, she wanted them to have the benefits of a European education and European travel."

"Benefits fiddlesticks! What about the husband and father? I tell you, my dear, these American women have no proper recognition of wifely duty. They neglect their husbands for their children. If a child or a husband is to be sacrificed, they don't hesitate to put the knife into the husband. Fancy me leaving Ned because I wanted to give Flossie a United States education and United States travel, or because the London climate—beastly thing it is, too!—was bad for Flossie!"

Here the English lady grabbed four-year-old Flossie in her arms and went on: "No, little girl! If it comes to a temporary separation from one of you—Daddy or you—why mother will have to send you away off and stay and take care of Daddy!"

"Mummy won't go off and leave Flossie!" cried the frightened child in her half-comprehending, sleepy state.

"No, Mummy will not, because old London's good enough for both of you!" comforted the mother, tucking the baby in bed.

Now, here was an English mother imagining just such a situation as that which confronts sweet Alice in Barrie's play. She thanks God she has not to face such a situation in real life, but it never occurs to her that there could be a question of choice. If the husband's interests or business should keep him in a certain part of the world which part is not a good place for the bringing up of children the wife will send away the children and remain with her husband.

So sweet Alice stays in India—India deadly to babies. She stifles the mother-longing, but never the mother-love, and sends the babies to a place where they will be brought up in health and strength, and, as it turns out, where they miss something that she could have given them. She returns when her husband's time is up, loving the flesh of her flesh and asking for love in return. You all know the play and the outcome. In certain ways it is delightfully and typically English, and because it is that the attitude of the wife and mother is difficult for certain of you to grasp. But bear in mind this, that in showing the importance of the husband over the children, and the unhesitating acceptance of a situation which separates a family in this way, Mr. Barrie has depicted an Englishwoman as wife and mother at her very best. With her it is husband first, children second—with always the hope and the prayer that kind Heaven will spare her the circumstances that would make a choice imperative.

Last night I dined with an American family consisting of husband, wife, a girl of 11, and a boy of 14. In England, of course, these children would not have been at table, but they were really dear things and had quiet manners, and one could not seriously object to their presence at table, except that they were an occasional damper on the conversation. After dinner it chanced for a few minutes that the hostess and I were alone. She explained that her husband had gone for a short walk in order to enjoy a cigar. It appeared he needed a cigar after dinner—could not be happy without it.

* * *

It seemed to me such a peculiar arrangement that a man must go and take a walk in order to smoke his after-dinner cigar that I suppose my face betrayed my surprise, for my hostess hastened to say:

"You see, it's on account of Harry. If he sees his father smoke he will want to smoke. I don't want Harry to learn, and what can I tell him if he knows his father does it? So I have asked John not to smoke in the house. He would like to sit alone at the table after dinner and smoke, but of course it won't do. The example to Harry, you see!"

If the idea of a woman turning her husband out of his own house to indulge in so innocent and comforting a thing as his cigar had not been so horrible to me it would have been funny. As it was I felt indescribably shocked. A strong dislike of the woman who thus sacrificed her husband and pity for the man who submitted to such an outrage took possession of me. As for the young Harry, I thought how well a spanking and bed would fit him, till I realized that the poor boy was not be be blamed. He was the product of a system—a bad system, too.

Of course this is but one instance of the sacrifice of the husband for the so-called good of the child, but I could cite innumerable ones which convince me that the average American married woman, in an emergency, puts her children before her husband, greatly to the discomfort and unhappiness of her husband as well as the disadvantage of the children and her own undoing.

But, say you: "Would the English mother allow her fourteen-year-old boy to smoke a cigar because his father did?"

Not at all. In England such a thing is so simply arranged. If the son were old enough to be at the table, he would merely, at the end of the meal, be told to "run away now—father wants to smoke his cigar in peace."

"But if father smokes, may not I?" asks the English boy, for boys are boys, whether born here or there.

"No, and that is enough, my son!"

* * *

In an English household I cannot imagine this subject ever being brought up more than once. Our boys and girls learn to obey. They are not better than American children, really, but they are more obedient, and they accept the decisions of their parents with an apparent grace that certainly one fails to observe in the average American boy and girl.

How are your Summer outings planned? Not for the benefit of the tired, overworked father. Indeed, outings seem to be almost inconsistent with the American man's mode of living. But if the children want the mountains and the husband prefers the seashore, to the mountains the family is removed.

"I never get an opportunity to go out with my husband now. I have the baby to think of," said an American woman.

"But you, fortunately, have a trustworthy nurse," I replied.

"Yes, but Tommy wakes up regularly in the middle of the evening, and won't be soothed by anybody but me, so I have to let Jack go to the theatre alone or with his men friends."

"Take care," I replied, "that though the baby can't be soothed by anybody but you, somebody else may not take over the soothing of Jack!"

"Don't laugh so loud, dear; you'll wake the baby. You know what a light sleeper she is!" I lately heard a young mother say to the father of the daintiest bit of humanity I have ever seen. Oh, but that husband is a good laugher, and everybody loves to hear him! His very laughter fills you with laughter. His laugh fascinates, intoxicates.

But the baby is a light sleeper!

Yet the house in which that family lives is a large one and a high one. It has a fourth story, and in that fourth story there is a room which would make such a charming night nursery, and opening off of it is the small room of the black Mammy, who loves the baby as she loves her own soul. If the baby slept in this big room with the door open between it and Mammy's, what harm could come to it, and would the laughter of its daddy ever disturb it?

No; but baby has a cot in its mother's and father's bedroom, and this is over the drawing room, and the laughter ascends to it! Baby's mother is afraid of the covers getting off in the night, afraid Mammy may not hear the little cry, afraid, afraid, afraid—! Oh, you fearsome American mothers and you neglectful American wives! I will admit that the position of the woman who does not have any servant is a difficult one, but at least those of you who do have servants and nurses ought to be able to break the slave's chains that bind you in motherhood and forge more tightly those of wifehood.

"Mary," says the mother, "wait on Master John and Miss Susie first this morning, or they will be late to school!" then turning to the rising generation seated at breakfast she says: "Why will you children not get up when the first bell rings, as I have told you dozens of times? I don't want you to lose your credits at school, so hurry and eat."

The children disposed of, she turns to her husband. "Now, dear, I will pour your coffee. Oh, what shall I do with those children to get them up in the morning?"

What an excellent thing it would be for Master John and Miss Susie if they were allowed to lose their credit marks at school instead of receiving their breakfast while their father waits for his!

This sacrificing of the husband and father goes on and on through innumerable ways. The average American wife would be astonished if she were told that she is continually offering up her husband on the altar of her motherhood. She defends herself, even when convinced that she does put her children first, with the plea of their "helplessness," as if anything in the world could be more helpless than an unmothered man!

All men are babies, be they English or American or Hottentot. For wives to neglect to mother them is a dangerous as well as a cruel thing. The infant in its cradle upstairs needs you far less, perhaps, than the great big man sitting before the fire after the heat and turmoil of the day.

* * *

And if the climate is bad—too hot, too cold, too foggy, too damp—and yet he must stay in its heat and damp and fog and cold, is there not something in your American marriage service, even in that one from which your parsons eliminate the word "obey," which refers to for "better or for worse," which would seem to imply that your place is where he has to be, and that the admonition "let no man put asunder" might even include the children you bear him?

A putting asunder! It does seem to me that so often in this land that is what the American child does for the American husband and wife. Half the time the American husband pretends not to see it and tries not to feel it, but he does see it and he does feel it. The American woman's neglect of her husband for her children is a very patent thing even to observers not of the keenest powers.

They do say that a woman can seldom be both a good wife and a good mother; that the case is similar to that of trying to serve two masters, holding to the one and despising the other. They do say that a married woman is usually confronted with the problem of whom to neglect—her children for her husband or her husband for her children. And I know also that they do say that English women neglect their children for their husbands.

Be that as it may, my observation so far makes me think that there can be no doubt that where a choice has to be made the typical American woman neglects her husband for the sake of her children, and furthermore that her children are none the better for it.

Togo Learning English

SUPPLEMENTING the other anecdotes of Admiral Togo which have been told since that commander's triumph in the Sea of Japan, has come a story from an Englishman, who once, in earlier days, helped this "Japanese Nelson" master the puzzling intricacies of English. The two, it seems, were fellow-students in the home of a private tutor near London, and as, at that time, the young subject of the Mikado had been in the country less than a week, his local vocabulary consisted of but two phrases—"Good morning" and "Thank you."

But every one liked him from the start. The parlor maid announced with an approving smile:

"Mr. Togo quite annoys himself with his politeness."

* * *

He was invariably punctual to the moment, no matter how trivial the engagement; he was always good-natured; he took English modes of life with a happy readiness which was even flattering in its sincere imitations; he had a keen sense of humor, was a glutton for work, and, if seemingly taciturn, even in those days when the present epithet of "The Silent" had not yet been dreamed of, his silence was rather due to the economy of words and his dislike of "saying things wrong."

Yet he learned English with remarkable rapidity.

"I've got to teach the little Jap mathematics," remarked the tutor to the English scholar, "but you might as well take him in hand with his English."

Then began the friendship of the two; the one unskilled in teaching, the other with an infinite capacity for taking pains, and both in earnest. At the end of a month the future Admiral wrote his English chum, who was away for a couple of days:

"When we shall to meet next week I shall be conversation to understand with you."

How many Americans could do as well after a four weeks' struggle with Japanese?

Sousa's Unbidden Guest

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA has had some experiences decidedly out of the ordinary, but he himself is authority for the statement that he met with the most unusual, and perhaps the most terrifying, in a quiet little town in provincial England.

"It was almost as bad as Edgar Allan Poe come to life," says he, when relating the happening. "It was before I opened at the Alhambra last Spring, and the tour had been most tiring. On the night in question I had turned in the very first minute I could get away after the evening concert, and I remember I was so tired that I never touched the fruit and sandwiches always left in my bedroom. I slept like a log, of course, though once I wakened, (as I recalled the next morning,) thinking I heard the plate pushed about on the luncheon table. I think I sat up in bed and looked around, but I'm sure I saw nothing, and I was asleep again an instant later.

"Next morning I was conscious of the entry of the man with the hot water, but what brought me really to my senses was his exclamation that the room was 'all in a mess.' It surely was. There were black footmarks everywhere, on the furniture, on the carpet, even on the dresser; the bed itself being about the only spot not trodden upon. The sandwiches were gone; so was the fruit. As I climbed into my dressing gown I had a hazy idea of discovering a tramp somewhere about, but a moment later I had seen that the footprints came from a big chimney place and apparently returned there again. 'We'll smoke him out,' said I.

"Before the blaze from the morning's paper had got a good start there tumbled down from that chimney a baboon nearly as big as I am. The way the valet and I got out into the hall was a sight to see. We slammed the door after us and sent in an alarm. Twenty minutes later one of the keepers from a nearby circus was unconcernedly leading off the tamest, meekest monkey of his size in the world.

"But it was a startling thing to have happen before breakfast! There was a little too much of 'The Murders in the Rue Morgue' about it."

OVER THE BRIDGE TABLE---THE SPINSTER AND THE WIDOW

"The time has come," the Walrus said, "to talk of many things.
Of ships, and shoes, and sealing wax; and cabbages and kings."

A PRETTY room, warmed by an open fire of crackling logs. Near the window a card table around which are seated a Widow, a Spinster, and their Partners.

The Spinster—I bridge it.

Her Partner (severely)—You always bridge it. Do try to strike a note of originality now and then. Make it no trumps, or clubs at the very least.

The Spinster—How can I, when I never hold a decent card? I'd like to show my hand to the table, it is so typically spinsterish. Only one face card, and that a mawkish queen, the most indifferent suits, and hearts of no value whatever either to hold or to throw away. I'd defy Elwell to play such a hand with average patience, much less skill. No, you must make it.

As the Spinster opens her mouth to give voice to some obvious pleasantry anent the relations of the modern woman to clubs, she is interrupted by—

The Widow (with decision)—I double clubs.

Her Partner—Oh, my dear, do you think we could? Isn't it rather risky?

The Widow (with abandon)—Everything that's worth doing is risky, from playing a game to marrying a husband. Amounts to the same thing, you say? (turning sharply to the Spinster.) Well, perhaps, after a fashion. Oh, did I take that? A cheap enough trick, wasn't it? Now for the next.

The cards fall for a few seconds in silence, then—

The Spinster (volubly)—Oh, now I say, Partner, wake up over there and show your paces. It's up to you to make good this hand.

The Widow (disdainfully)—At least you might exclude slang from the game.

The Spinster (making up her book)—But why? Games are always provocative of slang, and card-playing and horse racing have an entire vocabulary all their own. I merely mixed the two, that's all. And, anyway, you know they say now that all English is divided into two parts—slanguage and Andrewlanguage. You pride yourself on speaking the one; why shouldn't I have an equal pride in being proficient in the other?

The Widow (taking the ninth trick with a trump)—You know as well as I. I'm not a prude, (murmurs of "Hear! hear!" from the Spinster,) but slang and cigarettes are things I can't bear between a woman's lips. (Let me see that trick before you turn it.) And you know very well what men think about it.

The Spinster—No, I don't. I'm emancipated. It never occurs to me to wonder what any man thinks of my words or my actions any more. When one rests on the charitable bosom of the thirties one ceases to bother about such things. Besides, there are so many other things far more interesting to think about than mere man, at my age.

The Widow (with characteristic earnestness)—There's never anything in life more interesting to think about than mere man, as you call him, (the Partners lay down their hands and gaze in frank astonishment,) and he's what most women think about from the cradle to the grave. What's the use to pretend they don't? All this talk of emancipation is the baldest nonsense. Cherchez l'homme. Look for the man, that's what I always think when I hear it. There's a man in the case invariably. He's either the direct or the indirect cause of emancipation in a woman. In other words, he's either come into her life, or else he hasn't come. If he's come, he may have come too late, or he may have been a disappointment, and so made a cynic of her. If he hasn't come, she's still waiting for him and souring in the process. It's ridiculous for you to talk this way, (turning to the Spinster.) There have been charming men in your life, as I happen to know, and each must have left some influence. As to resting in peace on the charitable bosom of the thirties, why, that's the period during which a woman is training for the most tremendous love affair of her life. Love at forty is—

The Spinster (interrupting)—As soft and unexpected as an Indian Summer day.

The Widow—Nonsense! What I was going to say is that love at forty is the great love. All others have been merely preludes to it. History proves it, fiction proves it, even dry-as-dust statistics prove it.

The Spinster—Everything proves it but real life, and it is to real life, and not history or fiction, or even statistics that we must go for truth. My good child, you've been reading Marie Corelli or else George Meredith. Go pick up your Henry James and straighten out your understanding with mental gymnastics. A woman love desperately at forty! Who's talking nonsense now? Do you know what a woman of forty expects? Not the Prince Prettyboy, nor the youth with charming manners and a thirty-inch waist, but—A MAN. Yes, Madam, a MAN. And where would she find him? He's either married to some other woman, or else he's a crusty old bachelor that the very club servants ignore or flee from. Whatever he is, he hasn't time to waste on the woman of forty, though he likes to sit by her fireside gloomy evenings and talk cynically of life, love, and might-have-beens. Then he puts on his hat and shies quietly into the drawing room of some sweet thing of eighteen or twenty who ogles him and makes him feel half his age. It's a mighty risky business for the woman of forty to go in training for a colossal love affair. I'm afraid her cardiac muscles would grow flabby enough while she was waiting.

The Widow (looking a little downcast)—I hadn't thought of that side of it.

The Spinster (generously)—Of course you hadn't, my dear. That's because you belong to the order of beings who are always given another chance. You are of an entirely different denomination from the unwed. The world is divided into men, women, and widows, and widows are the spoiled wards of the other two. There's not the slightest doubt but that you are right in your woman-of-forty theory, if you'll merely substitute "widow" for "woman"—the extraordinary for the ordinary, the uncommon for the common. It was of the ordinary, common run of creatures that I spoke. Those to whom Opportunity never gives a second thought. The old jade! She's the widow's best friend. She stands at her elbow and nudges her continually, with nods, and becks and wreathed smiles. Isn't it so? (questioning the two Partners, who acquiesce with simultaneous nods.) There! (turning to the brightening Widow.) You've trumped my queen, and that gives you game and rubber. You see, you are the favored of Fortune as well. Do we pivot or keep our partners?

"The Brownie Man" In His Long Island Home

Pen Picture of Palmer Cox and His Quiet Life at East Quogue---A "Foreigner" Whom the Natives Have Heartily Adopted.

Three dogs surround me as I write,
At times they snarl, at times they bite,
Each striving with a jealous care
To keep the nearest to my chair.
Ah, me! I sigh, when shall I see
Three mortals quarreling over me
Like those three dogs of different breed
Who wait to follow where I lead?

PALMER COX, the creator of the world-renowned "Brownies," is a man of paradoxes. Born of good old English stock transplanted to Canada, he grew to manhood speaking English with the "burr" of a Scotchman, and having chosen railroading as a career, he found fame and fortune in art and poetry. Further, as a writer almost exclusively for children, he has yet never entered the married state, and no child of his own laughs over the books which have moved hundreds of thousands of children to laughter.

"Is this Palmer Cox?" incredulously exclaimed the late Mary Mapes Dodge, editor of St. Nicholas, on the occasion of their first meeting, after the "Brownies" had become a regular feature of the magazine. "I expected to see a tall, fat man with a beard, and I find a large, slender man without one. Certainly you did not take yourself as a model for your little friends."

The "burr" in Mr. Cox's speech is accounted for by early association with the emigrant members of a Scotch settlement in Granby, Canada, where he was born; and to the influence of these sturdy pioneers may be traced other and deeper-lying characteristics than that of pronunciation. Indeed, to them doubtless was due the conception of the "Brownies" themselves as a literary production, since these amusing elves are primarily a creation of the Gaelic imagination, and all the world knows with what persistence the impressions of childhood continue until the moment has come for their utilization.

* * *

Like all imaginative workers, Mr. Cox has allowed himself a certain latitude in dealing with the creatures of his imagination, having transformed the "Brownie" from a solitary into a gregarious being, and having endowed him with the power of concentrated action and initiative and the modern thirst for travel. According to the encyclopaedia, a brownie is "a homely, good-natured sprite supposed in Scotland to haunt farmhouses, and to do useful work about the house at night"; but, as all readers of Mr. Cox's books are aware, the definition is too narrow to cover the manifold activities of the little people as recounted in the author's numerous volumes. In the characteristics, however, of kindliness, ceaseless activity, and quaint good humor, the American "Brownie" has remained true to the standards of his Scotch forbear. Indeed, so deep was the impression of reality made by the "Brownies" upon the minds of many readers at the time when the little men were disporting themselves in the pages of The Ladies' Home Journal that the proprietors of the magazine found themselves forced in self-defense to prepare a printed slip descriptive of the tiny elves and to mail the same in answer to the numberless questions concerning their authenticity and dwelling place.

"It's a good thing for you it was Palmer Cox's picture you wanted taken," remarked, with true Long Island independence, the local photographer who had been summoned in an emergency; "you wouldn't have got me here with a team of oxen for anybody else."

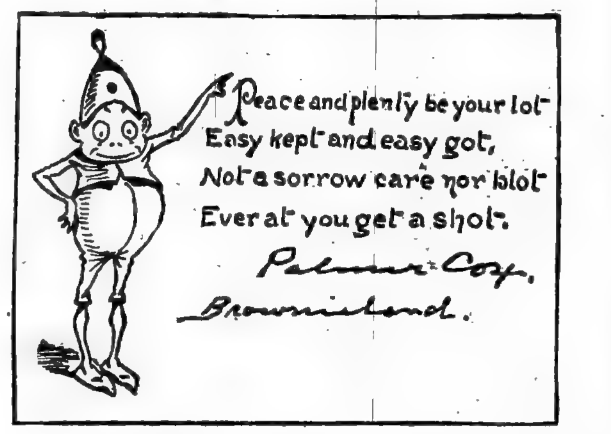
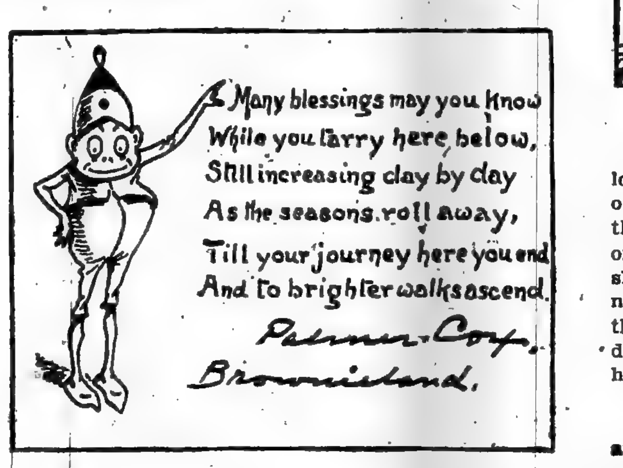
PALMER COX

Mr. Cox's position among the people of East Quogue, where for a number of years he has made his Winter home, is unique. He is one of the few "foreigners" whom they have adopted into the inner circle of intimacy. All those familiar with the reserved Long Island character will appreciate the extent of this honor. The author has repaid them with an enthusiasm for the "Island" and its people equal if not superior to their own.

"Surely no way so safe and cheap can be found of going to sea," exclaimed Mr. Cox, as we stood on the deserted balcony of the Pine View House, of which he is the sole Winter guest, and looked out over the bosom of the Achabacawesuck Creek toward the waters of Shinnecock Bay, "as by packing one's trunks and coming out on Long Island, well up toward the bow, at least far enough from the stern to be free from the influence of the propeller. Like one of the great ocean liners, the island projects into the sea, and you can easily imagine yourself on the mighty deep. The song of the sea is in your ears, the salt breeze is beating on your brow, the sea birds are flying overhead, giving voice to their short, sharp refrain, and the fish are springing over the sparkling crest of the waves, either in sport or settling the great question of the survival of the fittest.



Peace and plenty be your lot
Easy kept and easy got,
Not a sorrow care nor blot
Ever at you get a shot.
Palmer Cox,
Brownieland.



Many blessings may you know
While you tarry here below,
Still increasing day by day
As the seasons roll away,
Till your journey here you end
And to brighter walks ascend.
Palmer Cox,
Brownieland.

"One has all the advantages of an ocean voyage while walking around comfortably at home. You look over the rail and see the water on each side of you, and if storms come up you do not have to hurry below to dose yourself with impossible cures for seasickness. And it is such a satisfaction when you wake up in the night and hear the ruffled ocean bellowing on the shore. You turn over in bed for another sleep and smile the smile of the blessed at the thought that there is no danger of being tossed out of bed through contact with a reef or because of the ship's settling on some hidden rock. Nor do you need the Marconi system to keep you in touch with the world you have left behind. You get your semi-daily mail, and your morning TIMES, and you are happy."

* * *

Although not a "forty-niner," Mr. Cox's acquaintance with California dates back to the wild, free, glorious, formative period of the country. When not yet twenty years of age, he set out from Canada to seek this Eldorado of the West, proceeding thither by the roundabout, if most convenient, route leading down the Atlantic Coast and across the Isthmus to the Pacific. A number of years were passed in the employ of a railroad company, but during this period incursions, more and more frequent, were being made with pen and pencil into the newspaper field, until finally in 1875 a number of these productions were gathered together and published in book form under the title "Squibs of California."

In connection with the publication of the book Mr. Cox came East, and while here he was urged to remain in New York and devote himself to literary and artistic work. Still undecided, he returned to the Golden Gate, and another year elapsed before the final resolution was formed, and he removed to the metropolis to cast in his lot with those striving for the coveted prize. And then followed a series of years of struggle and unremitting labor, such as falls to the lot of the vast majority both of those who eventually succeed and of those who fail.

Tales of fairies, gnomes, and elves followed each other in rapid succession, and other productions intended likewise for children; but it was not until the happy thought of presenting the "Brownies" and their adventures in picture and verse was put into execution that the real "strike" was made for which all incipient geniuses are striving. The success of the venture was immediate and unmistakable. Indeed, from that time to the present the originator of the little band has devoted himself almost exclusively to the recounting of their adventures, which now fill seven volumes, and an eighth, in the shape of "A Brownie Primer," will soon bring their quaint humor within reach of the youngest readers. Ten years have passed since the "Brownie" craze was at its height, at which time posters, theatrical hoardings, and advertisements served to hold the public true to its favorites, but he would be a bold man who would venture to predict the final passing of a series of books in which each new generation finds such sources of delight.

* * *

Like the migratory birds which pass over Long Island on their way north with the approach of Spring, so Mr. Cox, as the time draws near for the advent of the Summer resident, forsakes his quarters by the sea and directs his flight toward the northern home of his boyhood in Canada, there to remain until another Autumn clears the coast for a return to his Winter abode.

"Somewhere at the beginning of the last century," he said, returning to the interrupted eulogy of the island, "through shipwrecks and shotgun accidents, small cemeteries were started in certain localities along this coast, but they never flourished. The fact is, the people who get safely over the ailments incident to babyhood seem able to stand off the last debt of nature until they have gathered in all the honors that cluster around a ripe old age, and consequently there is small demand for burial plots. These old men have swept two or three generations of forest trees from the hills and valleys that surround us, yet time has not swept the hair from their heads or the sight from their eyes or the vigor from their arms. It is no unusual thing to find whole families of sons, some over eighty and others on the borders of it, plying their vocations early and late on the spot where seventy or more years ago they played hop-scotch or mumble-the-peg."

For some time, "at odd moments of inspiration," Mr. Cox has been at work on a long poem in the Scottish dialect of his childhood in the meter, if not in the spirit, of Burns's "Address to the Deil," which bears the title "The Guide Man's Lament," and which sets forth in quaint style the regret with which an ancient sage and philosopher beholds the falling off of the Bible in the estimation of the rising generation. One of the stanzas of this interesting production which has remained in the chronicler's memory is couched in the following homely words:

Wha cares for Moses i' the creel?
Or Isaac greetin' for a meal?
Or Davy wee, wha gave the keel
    To yon big bully,
Wha didna ken the Lord can shiel'
    His servants fully.

NEW YORK'S SENSATIONAL "NEGRO PLOT"; MARY BURTON'S INVENTION

THE attempt which is being made by certain lawyers, alienists, medical experts, &c., to prove that Valet Jones (by whose testimony Albert T. Patrick was convicted of the murder of the old millionaire Rice) was a false witness of the most glaringly transparent description, calls to mind the case of the notorious Mary Burton. The great sensation of old New York was the so-called Negro Plot, in the year 1741. Mary Burton, a girl of inferior intelligence, and still in her teens, was the star witness in nearly all of the trials resulting from the alleged plot. As a result of these trials fourteen innocent persons were burned to death, eighteen were hanged, two gibbeted, and seventy-one transported.

New York was, in 1741, a thriving seaport town of little more than 10,000 inhabitants, and extended over a comparatively small area in the lower portion of Manhattan Island. There was an ample garrison of British troops on the island, the proportion of the negro to the white population was small; and it seems strange under the circumstances that any serious apprehension of an uprising of the blacks should have been entertained.

The girl Mary Burton was living at a small hotel of the lowest class. Besides her master and mistress there was still another member of the family, named Peggy Carey. The latter was generally known as a disreputable woman. A robbery had been committed in a house in Broad Street, and Mary Burton, who, it seems, had always been very fond of talk and gossip, let fall some remarks which led to the suspicion that her master and the members of his family were implicated in the robbery and the disposal of the stolen goods. The hotel keeper and his wife, together with Peggy Carey and Mary, were arrested and put in jail.

Here they were lying, awaiting trial, in the month of March, 1741, when a number of fires broke out in rapid succession in various quarters of the town. The majority of these fires were afterward traced to natural causes, but, in the excitement of the moment, all were thought to have been of incendiary origin. Then arose the question of who were the incendiaries. It seems that a woman had overheard a negro make some mysterious remarks to a companion. These remarks were carefully studied, and then tortured into such a shape as to have some possible bearing upon a conspiracy to burn the town. The fear of having their houses burned over their heads had so inflamed the imagination that the citizens of New York were ready to accept any theory which would account for the mysterious fires. The conviction that there was to be a general uprising of the negroes, with murder and rapine as well as conflagrations, became prevalent. The wildest rumors were accepted as facts. All of the negroes in the town were under suspicion, and a number were arrested.

Then it was that the authorities conceived the idea of obtaining evidence against the negroes by offering a reward. The reward was fixed at £100, and the proclamation was read in public. Then it was taken into the jail and read to the prisoners, upon the majority of whom it did not seem to make much of an impression. But in the case of Mary Burton the seed appeared to have fallen upon favorable ground. She seemed to ponder deeply, and she was urged to tell what she knew about the conspiracy. She at first denied having any knowledge of the matter. Then she was urged to refresh her memory, and was told that by giving evidence she might not only gain the reward, but she would also receive immunity from all punishment for her complicity in the Broad Street robbery and for any part which she might have taken in the conspiracy.

The hope of liberty, added to the desire of obtaining the money offered, proved too tempting a bait for her to resist. She made a confession which, on its face, seemed utterly unreasonable. She said that there was a plot on the part of the negroes to rise, burn, destroy, and obtain the Government. The leaders in the plot had met at her master's house. She had participated in their councils, she said. It had been agreed that when the conspirators had succeeded in their design and had subverted the Government, her master was to be made King and a certain negro of her acquaintance was to become his chief lieutenant. She named several negroes as leaders in the plot, as the men with whom she had sat in council in her master's house. The accused negroes as well as her master strenuously denied Mary's story. But this availed them nothing. They were condemned and executed.

Peggy Carey undertook to copy the example which had been set by Mary Burton. She also gave false testimony against the alleged negro leaders. But when she found that this was not sufficient to save her own neck, she recanted. When led out for execution she declared that her testimony at the trial of the negroes had been false. The desire to confess to anything and everything in order to gain liberty and money now seized upon the negroes who were in jail on suspicion of having had a hand in the alleged plot. The authorities, however, received these offers of confession with extreme caution. And yet Mary seems to have retained their confidence. And she went on making confessions, which, but for the prevailing public madness on the subject of the imaginary plot, would not have been seriously considered. The more glaring the contradictions in the different stories she told the greater seems to have been the confidence in her veracity.

One of her victims was a white man, named John Ury. He was a schoolmaster, and had been a Catholic priest. Some one had suggested that the Spaniards might now be conspiring to seize the province, and after a general destruction of life and property to bind the survivors in Romish fetters. This was at once accepted as truth. The public believed in the Spanish conspiracy as thoroughly as it had believed in the negro plot. And there was an equal amount of truth in each. Ury fell under suspicion and was arrested. Mary Burton identified him at first sight, and declared that he had been present and had taken part in the meetings of the conspirators at her master's house. The unfortunate man was convicted on her testimony and executed.

Her success in giving false testimony tended to increase her recklessness. She began to implicate persons who stood high in the social and business life of the town. Then it began to dawn in some of the more clear-headed of the authorities that this little girl had acquired the confessing habit, and that she certainly had it very bad. They perceived at last that they had merely to suggest to Mary any line of testimony and she would immediately swear to it. Perhaps it entered into the minds of some that after all the negro plot had been hatched nowhere else than in Mary Burton's brain. But how were they to stop the evil? There seemed to be no telling whom she would not implicate. The reign of terror caused by the fear of conflagrations and negro uprisings had passed away. There was a new reign of terror now; and it was the lying tongue of Mary Burton which had caused this one. None dared to prosecute her for perjury. They knew very well that she would be sure to turn upon her accusers, and perhaps be the means of sending them to the scaffold.

Finally the timid functionaries took the easiest course to rid themselves of this dangerous young woman. They paid her the £100 reward and let her go. The records state nothing further concerning Mary Burton. It is not known whether her blood money brought her any satisfaction, or whether she lived to know remorse and perhaps see in fancy the figures of those whom she had wantonly sent to destruction. It is probable, however, that she was of too low a degree of intelligence fully to realize what she had done.

The lawyers and friends of Patrick represent Valet Jones as having been largely guided by suggestion in making his various confessions—in other words, that he was always ready to swear to anything which the questions of the prosecuting officers might suggest to him. Jones is also represented as having been unduly influenced by the fear of being himself sent to the electric chair, and as well by the hope of receiving a substantial reward for his testimony. And he certainly seems to have been a person of inferior intelligence.

In Mary Burton we have a witness, known to have been false, whose case in several important particulars resembles that of Jones, as he is pictured by Patrick's friends and lawyers. Mary was guided by suggestion, since she was always ready to swear to anything hinted at by the prosecuting officers. She was unduly influenced by the fear of being severely punished for her complicity in the Broad Street robbery. As well she was unduly influenced by the hope of obtaining the reward of £100—a considerable sum in those days to a person of her condition. And she was, as Jones is admitted to have been, a person of inferior intelligence.

AMBITION AND GUILE IN FLOWERLAND--BAMBOO AND PELICAN PLANT

UP in the Bronx, in the New York Botanical Garden, is a plant that might be utilized by the moralist as symbolic of the precarious foundation upon which is based the vaulting ambition of mankind in nine hundred and ninety-nine million nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a billion. This plant is just a common or garden bamboo, (Bambuso vulgaris, to give it its scientific appellation, which sounds much more imposing and therefore appropriate,) of the family that pullulates in the East Indies and in fact all over the tropics, and its conduct is cause for mild wonder seasoned with some concern on the part of the authorities of the garden.

The question which is agitating the staff, from Dr. N. L. Britton, the Director in Chief, to the small boy aide of the 'steenth assistant deputy gardener, is whether the bamboo is ever going to stop growing. Unless it makes up its mind very soon to pause and consider its unreasonableness in seeking to push the cap off the ninety-six-foot-high dome of the conservatory palm house something is going to happen. Either the great glass dome will have to be raised or else—and in the very nature of things it is the latter alternative that is most likely to be adopted—this sky-aspiring bamboo (Bambuso vulgaris) forgets that its ambition hath one heel nailed—in a tub.

Although of the common or garden classification, its immediate ancestor was of the crême de la crême of the Four Hundred of this particular variety, so to speak, for it is an offshoot of the famous bamboo that is the pride of the Horticultural Hall in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. Yet its début in the New York Botanical Garden was modest in the extreme. It began its independent career as a little sprig in a little tub, put away among the rich tropical vegetation in the palm house where it was most unlikely to attract the attention of the throngs of visitors that come here to admire and never go away disappointed. In a little while, however, it began to assert itself.

Perhaps it overheard the elfs and fairies—that, as every child who goes there knows, issue each night from their mysterious hiding places in the foliage near the roof to hold high jinks in the tropical forest so soon as the last visitor and the last gardener have taken their departure—discussing the feat of Jack's wonderful beanstalk, which, born in the night, shot up ere morning to the "hooded clouds," and was fired with the resolve to emulate it. Perhaps its nascent ambition merely took the form of a determination to show that because it came from Philadelphia it did not follow that it was slow. However this may be, it started growing at the rate of six inches every twenty-four hours.

It first attracted attention by pushing the bottom and sides out of its tub. The indulgent gardeners gave it a brand new and more commodious one, whereupon the bamboo spread upward and outward with such aggressiveness that the stately, aristocratic palms that had at first ignored and overshadowed it and then had been astonished and annoyed by its precocity, found themselves pushed rudely aside by the young giant, which, in his efforts to expand, appeared to have no more consideration for the conventions than for rank.

About this time the gardeners, who were beginning to watch developments with great respect, provided a still larger tub for it, and named it Teddy. The vines and creepers began to take notice. Even the big pawpaw tree, that grave and reverend seigneur, the Senator, as the attendants call it, had literally to look up to it.

Soaring half a foot a day it at length overtopped everything, and now its straight, vigorous shafts, bent on conquering even higher altitudes, look out from their unique vantage place in the dome of the palace of crystal to where the sun dies in Light of pure pallid amber, cheered with fire of gold

* * * * * *

And small rent sprays wherewith the heavens most high
Are strewn as Autumn strews the golden close
With rose leaves.

* * *

There is another soaring plant in the conservatory that is the object of solicitude, but for an entirely different reason. This is an aristolochia gigas, or pelican flower, of the Sturstevantii variety and hails from Brazil. It bears a blossom that is beautiful and peculiar, but which emits "the rankest compound of villainous smell that ever offended nostril."

Yet this offensive peculiarity, which is the cause of the attention it attracts in blossoming time from the conservatory employes, who to be able to work there have to open the windows, and even at that have been heard to express the wish that the aristolochia were in Jericho, is its very existence, its means of livelihood. It is an insectivorous plant, and is a gourmet in its own particular way, for it manifests a preference for house flies—that pest for which no human being, with the sole exception of Tristram Shandy's tender-hearted Uncle Toby, ever was known to strain the quality of mercy—and a marked preference for bluebottles.

This blossom, reared on its vine high above the sweet, odorous flowers of the garden with which it cannot associate, and with which it has nothing in common save appearance, is fully a foot wide and varies in length from twelve to fifteen inches. The main part is ovate, of a rich yellowish white vividly marked with deep purple. It has a long neck, and a tail two or three feet in length hangs from the apex. Turned upside down it resembles nothing so much as a pelican. Hence the name popularly given to it.

* * *

The aristolochia gigas furnishes another chance to the moralist, the cynic, or the philosopher. The road to perdition is pictured as being broad, flower-strewn, and possessing other allurements against which subjection to the discipline of self-denial is the only sure safeguard. The entrance to the fatal chamber from which no fly or bluebottle ever emerges is invitingly spacious and carpeted in deep velvety purple. It is redolent of the two-and-seventy stenches, all well defined, and several stinks described by Coleridge, with others that are irresistibly appetizing to flies.

As the victim enters, long hairy silklike doorkeepers, bowing to right and left, efface themselves to admit of free ingress. When, finding the atmosphere somewhat stuffy and the combination of odors overpowering, the visitor decides to take his departure the obsequious sentinels throw off their disguise and stand confessed the rigid, relentless guardians of the death trap. Against them the fear-frenzied prisoner hurls himself, only to be pierced on their lances, and realizes—why should not a fly be possessed of this power of realization if a plant be endowed with the faculty of discrimination in the choice of its food?—that it is there, not to feast, but to be feasted upon.

There is no lack of victims for the pelican flower in the Botanical Garden. Its rankness attracts flies in swarms that fill that section of the conservatory with their foolish buzzing and the breasts of the gardeners with disgust.

"I haven't been able to figure out yet for what purpose an all-wise Providence made the aristolochia gigas," remarked an employe working near it the other day, "but if its only function is to act as fly-catcher to man, excuse me. The sticky paper for mine."

◆

The severe sentence recently meted out to the "editor" of a leading Socialist organ at Leipzig recalls to mind that most German papers keep an "editor" of this kind for this very purpose. He is only what is called the "strohredacteur," "dummy editor," or, more frequently, the "sitzredacteur," or "prison editor"—"sitzen," to sit, being the German equivalent of the English "to serve time." This "prison editor" binds himself to act as scapegoat for his "redacteur en chef." In many cases he spends more time in jail than he does in the newspaper office.

Pilgrimage to Sulgrave, Ancestral Home of Washingtons

Picturesque Surroundings of the Old Manor House---The Reported Theft of the Escutcheon Over the Doorway Proved a False Alarm.

(See Illustrations in To-day's Picture Section.)

LONDON, Feb. 12.—I went to Sulgrave yesterday and called the roll of the Washington relics at the Manor House. Every one answered, "Present," but they all complained that, after a little over 350 years' exposure to wind and rain and frost, they were not what they used to be.

They clearly belong to the order of things that have seen better days. Whatever may be said of the rest of England, the Sulgrave Manor Washington relics need protection. The most important of them are hanging to the old house by the skin of their teeth, and nobody can tell when the skin will give way.

We drove over from Brackley, a station on the Great Central Railway, about six miles from Sulgrave. There's another station on the road, called Helmdon, only three miles from Sulgrave, and that is the station to which persons intending to visit the old Manor House should book. The guidebooks all speak of Sulgrave as eight miles from Banbury, but that probably is because their plates have not been revised since the construction of the Great Central Railway.

We left the train at Brackley because I had been told there was a woman in that town who "knew a thing or two" about the Washington brasses that were stolen from the Sulgrave Church a great many years ago. She told my informant she knew who stole the brasses and where they were to be found. Unfortunately she herself was not to be found at Brackley, having closed out her hotel business there.

It may be remarked, in passing, that this theft of the brasses is undoubtedly the basis of the statement contained in the letter of Mr. B. Wentworth-Vernon to the Duchess of Somerset, on the strength of which Bishop Potter wrote his now famous letter regarding an escutcheon alleged to have been taken from the Manor House.

* * *

When Mr. Wentworth-Vernon wrote his letter, in the year 1900, he had no doubt that, as he alleged, an "American relic hunter" had bought the "stone escutcheon" over the door of the Sulgrave Manor House and "borne it in triumph to his native land." Mr. Wentworth-Vernon is of the opinion now that he made an allegation six years ago that was not in accordance with the facts. In a very courteous note, dated Feb. 7, 1906, he writes me: "I have been making inquiries about the matter you write of, and I am to-day informed that the escutcheon has not been removed."

And yet, on the very day this note reached me, The Sphere published a photograph of the Manor House, and beneath it ran a distorted version of Mr. Wentworth-Vernon's allegation of 1900. According to The Sphere its picture represents "George Washington's ancestral home, from which an American relic-hunter has stolen the stone escutcheon that formerly was to be seen over the entrance door."

No American has stolen anything from the Sulgrave Manor House nor taken away any Washington relic acquired by purchase. Furthermore, there is no evidence whatever that the brasses taken from the church were stolen by an American. My own belief is they were stolen by Englishmen. I am informed they never have been taken out of this country, and though I also believe this, it is possible this information comes from a source more pretentious than accurate.

There would seem, however, to be a suggestion of relationship between it and a statement contained in a letter received to-day from the secretary of the Duchess of Somerset, who writes: "Her Grace wishes me to tell you that she hears that the escutcheon has been found in an old house in the west of England." The Duchess evidently has not yet been informed that she started Bishop Potter on a wild goose hunt when she directed his attention to Mr. Wentworth-Vernon's allegation.

Certainly the Manor House escutcheon has not been found in the west of England, because the escutcheon is still clinging, as best it may, to the Manor House. But there is a possibility the stolen brasses have been found. Time will tell.

Two impressions came to us the instant we entered the little village of Sulgrave—one that it was very, very beautiful; the other that it was very, very old.

Chilled with our forty-five-minute exposure to a cruel wind and a cold, penetrating air, we no sooner were in the village than we looked for an inn.

"How old is this house?" we asked the landlord.

"My friends," he answered, "I would be very glad if I was able to tell you. All I can do is to tell you what I think."

"And that is?"

"That is, that it's as old as Old Methusalum."

* * *

When we laughed at this the landlord shook his forefinger at us. "Who knows," said he, "but that Old Methusalum lived in this very house; he had to live somewhere, didn't he?"

To which Mr. Henry Sandham, my companion, whose name is familiar to thousands of Americans who have seen his illustrations in The Century, Harper's Magazine, and other publications, made the response: "There's nothing in any biography of Methuselah, so far as I know, that speaks of him as spending any portion of his long and active life in the village of Sulgrave, and I'm blamed sure there's no suggestion of a Methuselah escutcheon about the place."

Nevertheless, we spent the time we consumed in drinking our hot whisky punch in drawing imaginary pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Methuselah and the young Methuselahs hovering about the blazing hearth fires that warmed the house and cooked the food in the good old days. They use a modern kitchen range now, at sight of which Mr. Sandham's artistic nature rebelled tremendously.

But the kitchen range in the old inn is no worse than the modern upright piano in the ancestral home of the immortal Washington; no worse than the safety pins with which the old woman who "shows" the Manor House pins her petticoats about her. I hear the women of Elizabeth's time—not the ladies, perhaps, but the farmers' wives and sisters—used to keep their petticoats on with drawing strings run through the waistbands. But nowadays the Sulgrave women depend on the safety pin, and unblushingly display this modern innovation in the midst of an antiquity that must be deeply offended by its presence.

We left the old inn rather regretfully. How could one help acquiring a liking for an inn where two whisky punches and a pint of beer may be had for the modest sum of sevenpence ha'penny!

As we approached the Manor House the woman with the safety pins came forth to meet us with a warm and expectant smile.

"There you are, Sir," she said, as she led us up in front of the porch. "There you have the Washington coat of arms."

A glance showed us that everything was there that should be there—the shields cut in the spandrels of the arched doorway, the shield over the door, and the coat of arms up in the gable. With that one first glance we were able to satisfy ourselves that the Vicar of Sulgrave was absolutely right when he wrote me that nothing had been taken from the Manor House.

The only stone escutcheons—actual stone—are those in the spandrels of the doorway. They are little shields, showing the three stars and two bars, chiseled into a brown stone of some sort. The shield on the right of the door is in a fair state of preservation; but that of the left is much worn and portions of it have lost distinctness.

It is the shield over the door upon which the thoughts of the English-speaking world have turned more or less these last few weeks. It is not made of stone, but of cement, and it would take a man like Sir Purdon Clarke to get away intact what there is left of it. In order to get it away it would be necessary to take along with it a good portion of the wall of rough stones of which the house is built.

The photograph reproduced in THE NEW YORK TIMES's Pictorial Supplement of Jan. 28, 1906, shows this shield as a perfect thing, with outline clean-cut and stars and bars absolutely plain. This photograph evidently is from a touched negative, and if its owner should put it under a powerful magnifying glass he would see where and to what extent the photographer had employed his pen or brush.

It may have been 200 years since the shield possessed distinctness such as is indicated in the photograph in question. The shield to-day looks precisely as it did ten, twenty, thirty years ago, the Sulgrave people say, and certainly a photograph taken as early as 1900, which I saw yesterday, faithfully reproduces the conditions of to-day.

* * *

A large portion of the star part of the shield has disappeared. Apparently it lost its hold on the building and crumbled away. The stones that held this missing part in place now show bare, just as other stones show bare in several spots on the side of the house. The outline of the shield is distinguishable, though faintly so in parts. The two horizontal bars are indicated rather than clearly discernible. There certainly should be a glass placed over this shield, and without doubt the owner of the Manor House would consent to that being done through the munificence of an American or an American society.

There already is a glass covering for the coat of arms in the gable. The woman with the safety pins glibly informed us that this gable piece, of cement just like the shield below, was the Washington coat of arms, and one, without violating its contour, easily might restore its worn surface upon the assumption that it is a distinctively Washingtonian relic—a variation of the coat of arms at Garsdon pictured recently in THE NEW YORK TIMES.

It seems more probable, however, that those who had the pleasure of viewing this gable piece when it was young saw a sun dial surmounted by a rough mason's imitation of the royal coat of arms of the time of Elizabeth. The restoration of the piece upon this theory would be helped considerably by study of the cement figures of two animals placed inside the porch in the side walls. These animals undoubtedly repeat the supporting figures of the gable piece and are nearly intact. One is a griffin, with a face that would ache for its ugliness, if it were not made of such cold and unfeeling material. The other animal is alleged to be a lion, but if its maker designed it to be a lion he must have evolved the creature from his inner consciousness.

"What does that beast look like?" I asked Mr. Sandham.

"Looks like a whatisit," he promptly replied, and we left it at that.

When Lawrence Washington, from whom the immortal George descended, went to Sulgrave as lord of the manor, about the middle of the sixteenth century, his purpose was to build a very large house. He stopped building when he had completed the front section of the house we see to-day. He did not build the wing.

"Why did he abandon his plan of constructing a great manor house?" I asked the Vicar of Sulgrave.

"Outbuilt himself, I judge," the Vicar replied. "His farming operations did not turn out satisfactorily, and I fancy he ran out of money, though he may have tired of Sulgrave."

The latter suggestion at least applies to the Washington family as a whole, for within twenty-five years of the death of Lawrence Washington, the family sold the manor property and moved away.

* * *

The property to-day is rented by a farmer who plows about twenty acres of the 193 acres and raises stock on the remainder. He says he makes very little, the soil is so poor. Maybe he gets as much out of "showing" the Manor House as out of his farming. If he had a mind to be just a bit wicked he might enlarge the profits of his show business.

"My sister," said he, "found an old pewter plate here a while ago. We didn't doubt it was a Washington plate, for there were the initials 'G. W.' on it. We sold it to our landlord for 25s."

I rather suspect that "G. W." was a slip of the tongue for "L. W." perhaps; if it wasn't and the plate really was Washingtonian, its maker must have had the gift of prophecy.

But that is not quite the point I was leading up to. While we were amused at the assertion that a genuine "G. W." plate had been found in the manor house, we were impressed with the thought that there was another great opening for the British pewter trade. What's to hinder the pewter factory men of the country from directing their activities for a while to turning out "genuine Washington pewter plates from the old manor house at Sulgrave"!

The Vicar of Sulgrave is earnestly desirous that the manor property shall pass into American ownership. If that does not come to pass he believes that eventually all the Washington relics will disappear. This certainly seems a reasonable apprehension; for it cannot be assumed that the present owner of the manor house has any strong sentimental interest in the relics nor that the tenant regards them in any other light than as money makers.

"Why don't you urge the American people to raise a fund for the purchase of this property?" the Vicar asked me.

"What's the price?" I asked.

"About £5,000. I understand that sum would buy the manor house and the land. The house could be turned into a hotel for the accommodation of tourists; the land could be divided into small lots and sold. American ownership of the manor house is absolutely necessary if it is desirable to preserve the historic interest of the place."

There's one thing American ownership of the manor might bring about which the good Vicar did not mention. It might bring about the undoing of the worst features of the "restoration" to which the Sulgrave church recently was subjected.

* * *

As it is, the church will move to profanity any intelligent person whose religious principles are not deep-rooted. It is a beautiful thing to look at from the outside; it is positively exasperating to go into it and see what a fool-architect has done to it. Why, he has even plastered the walls, covered over the stones that for 500 years looked down upon the congregations.

"The architect thought the walls looked rough," the Vicar explained when we made faces at the plaster.

And so it is all over the place; the architect has kicked the delightful antiquity of the church out of doors and made the interior bright, clean, and modern.

It was a sweet relief to come across one thing that had escaped his miserable modernity—the old oak and iron chest. Why he didn't have that chest done up in blue and gilt like a tin slop bucket is more than anybody knows. Maybe he forgot to do it. Anyhow, there it stands, grandly old, a thing to dream over, as one thinks of the uses to which it may have been put hundreds and hundreds of years ago.

But we do not have to take it all out in dreaming, for history records an incident connected with the old chest that is quite as entertaining as anything one is apt to dream about it.

In the register of the Sulgrave church, under date of July, 1787, there appears this entry: "William Abbot, parish clerk, was condemned at Northampton Assize to lose his life for highway robbery, but was afterward reprieved to transportation for life."

Yes, this William Abbot belonged to what was known as the "Culworth Gang," the business of which was to relieve persons caught traveling in those parts of their money and other valuables. And this dear old chest was William's depository for his hard-earned plunder. They found a very pretty collection of rings and bracelets, chains and brooches in the chest a few days after William's arrest.

Then they knew why it was that once in a while at morning service they had caught glimpses of a pistol beneath William's cloak as, in all solemnity, he had moved about the church discharging himself of the duties attaching to his sacred office.

DO CROWS REASON?--NEW LIGHT ON AN OLD SUBJECT

THERE are some crow stories which have a strong bearing on the question whether or not the birds and beasts of the field and forest have reasoning powers. Crow stories are selected for the purpose of this article simply because crows are better known than most birds, and any one who lives in the country or on the outskirts of a city can make observations for himself as to whether these birds are as bright and intelligent as they are said to be. The crows, and their near relatives, the rooks, magpies, jays, &c., are the wittiest of the birds.

It is a matter of record that on the outbreak of an epidemic, like cholera, birds leave the fated town. This has been observed in St. Petersburg, Riga, Hanover, Galicia, the cities of Prussia, and in Southern Germany. Students are in doubt as to why the birds flee, but it is believed that poison in the air alarms them. Some say this is caused by "instinctive fright" and others by "intelligent fear."

* * *

For time out of mind farmers have tried to devise a scarecrow that will effectually serve its purpose of keeping the birds out of the newly planted cornfield. At times a pair of trousers and a coat flapping on a cross stick are sufficient to protect a small field, but where crows are numerous leaders always appear among the birds who brave the very ends of the waving garments. To save the hill seeds where brave crows raid, cunning schemes must be resorted to. A "cobweb" of white string over a field, pieces of looking glass whirling on sticks, and strips of paper hanging on fences will generally frighten them, and a dead crow hung by the heels is a warning that is usually heeded. Yet a man walking across a field is allowed to approach very close to a feeding flock, unless the sentinel in the treetop or on a fence post catches sight of a gun. Curiously enough, a mere cane does not alarm the crows. It is claimed by farmers that "crows smell gunpowder." However that may be, they do detect a gun in a man's hands and know very well the range of rifles in communities where rifles are the common weapons. In places where shotguns are used exclusively in shooting them, the crow will permit one to approach much nearer.

In Germany, where crows are exceedingly destructive to pheasant eggs, the expedient of sending men to guard the birds' nests was tried. The crows refused to come near the guard's hiding place, no matter how long he remained. Then "it was found that the keepers must go to cover in parties of six or more and then depart one by one," leaving a man behind to take vengeance. If a less number than six went to the cover, and one was left behind, the crows kept their distance, evidently having counted the party, going and coming. A farmer in Maine tried a similar stratagem, and found that Maine crows could count to three, but four or more confused them. Curiously enough, M. A. Walton, the naturalist, ("Hermit,") arrived at the conclusion that crows under his observation could count three. Three appears to be the limit of crow counting in America.

Crows fear men and are quick to take advantage of the alarm created by men in other birds. A party of naturalists who visited Lake Okeechebee, Fla., daily passed heron and water turkey nests which were close to the river bank. Crows were numerous in the vicinity, and as soon as the approach of the boats drove the herons and water turkeys from their nests, the crows jumped in and ate eggs and young birds as fast as possible. The robbed birds were too good fighters for crows to drive them from their nests, and only their being driven from their nests through fear of the men enabled the crows to get to the eggs.

* * *

The crows are not without expedients of their own. Pairs of them have often been seen hunting together. A characteristic manoeuvre is for two of them to attack a large bird on its nest. When one is pursued, the other jumps in and gets the eggs or young ones. So large a bird as the Brazilian eagle (Mexican buzzard) is thus victimized, one bird making the assault while the other stands on a nearby branch ready to pounce upon the eggs.

Crows are omniverous, but at times stress of weather drives them to feats unusual even for them. When snow or sleet covers the ground unexpectedly in the South, flocks of the birds attack rabbits and other small game and kill them. They even assail chickens. They appear to know that a blinded rabbit is much easier to kill, so they attack the eyes first. They also attack the eyes of lambs. The crows mob their victims, unlike hawks and owls, which hunt alone.

Most birds cannot carry anything which their mouths are too small to contain. The crow is an exception at times. In Vermont, near Manchester, five crows were seen to come down into an apple orchard. They came daily, and after a time the owner discovered that they were taking apples from a tree bearing the mellowest fruit. Each crow jammed its closed bill into an apple, raised its head, and flew to a tall pine tree, where the fruit was eaten. More remarkable still is the fact that crows will sometimes carry turkey and hen eggs from a nest in the same manner.

* * *

The crows that live along the seashore live on "sea food." At times they show a gull's dexterity in picking eatables from the tossing water with their bills. Their ingenuity, however, is taxed by the hard shells of clams, which they can neither pry into nor break with their bills. Like some gulls, the bright crow will seize a clam and fly to a great height and drop it on a ledge of rock. That breaks the shell, and the crow gets the meat. Near Vancouver, B. C., the crow rides around on the backs of hogs that are rooting in the flow ground of the tide. The hogs crush the shells of clams and mussels in their jaws and then drop them on the ground in order to separate the meat from the shell. The crow jumps in and gets the meat for itself. On the other hand, the remarkable story comes from Africa that crows there carry stones to a considerable height above a nest of ostrich eggs and let them fall on the tough shells, and then feed on the exposed albumen.

Tame crows occasionally show remarkable intelligence, as any farm boy who has ever reared one knows. A young crow taken from its nest is readily trained to do ordinary tricks, but the birds show a great diversity in abilities. A few learn to say several words, and occasionally one is seen to moisten hard crusts of bread or dry cake in water to soften it for eating. No two are alike in character, but display grades of mischievousness, temper, and habits.

Once a young crow was found in a Jersey marsh. It was taken home and cared for. The owner was an enthusiastic small boatman and frequently sailed through a narrow and difficult swash channel in a long sand bar. The crow enjoyed sailing, and enjoyed the swash channel navigation more than any other. It would caw and sputter all the way through, but if the sailor happened to strike bottom the bird would yell, apparently derisively, and fly away home. "He would never allow me to let the sail shake along the luff for an instant without making a fuss over it, and understood when it was time to jibe over, and always let me know it," the owner wrote.

* * *

Every Fall the crows gather in great flocks for migration. The flocks seem to hold together all Winter, for one finds them throughout the South. Several islands on the Mississippi River have crow roosts where countless thousands pass their nights. I saw a flock come into one such roost. The birds did not alight singly and in small groups, but all the scattered birds came together in a compact whirling cloud. They flew around and around over the island for several minutes, and then from the under side the birds darted down to the trees. The last to come down seemed to shoot in a straight line along down the island like the stem of a printed note in music. The reason for this seemed perfectly obvious. The birds were evenly distributed among the available roosts, and the final scattering of birds down the island seemed due to the fact that the roost trees at the head were jammed full of birds. One must see such a sight to realize the vast number of the birds that gather in flocks. And one cannot see that "cyclone" formation of birds whirling around making a noise audible for miles without being impressed by the precision of the flock movements. Hundreds of observers have noted flock movements of crows which indicated leadership, and one cannot admit that crows have leaders without also admitting some kind of discipline.

That crows maintain family discipline is a matter of every farmer's knowledge. They see the young crows driven from danger by their parents so often that most of them observe and note the fact sooner or later. The great organization of crows when they come down to roost in large flocks—not in small ones—is also a matter of observation, not only along the Mississippi, but on the Potomac River between Washington and Harper's Ferry. There is another indication of crow discipline, which is called "crow courts" by the observers. Time and again men have seen a prisoner crow which tried to escape from two others only to be buffeted, abused, and subdued by force of wings and beaks.

"One night on Goat Island," (Niagara River,) a typical account says, "I noticed three crows in a row on a limb, two being terribly noisy, the other quite quiet, but looking sick. His feathers seemed to all grow the wrong way, and a more miserable looking crow I never saw. I thought the crow had been wounded or was sick and the other two were looking after him. After a while the two made a start to fly, like starting a race, but as the sickly one did not start at once, they immediately returned to his side. They did this several times, the centre crow paying no attention to them. Suddenly the two commenced to belabor the sick one with beaks and wings till it screamed piteously. The next time the crows started all went together in a line, as they had sat on the tree limb."

* * *

This "arrest" is not a lone incident in bird annals. Similar scenes have been reported time and again by competent and trustworthy observers, who gave details and places. The prisoner crow, after an uproarious "trial," is sometimes killed. A remarkable case which might be labeled "crow conscience," came from Coralville, Penn. A German woman owned a pet crow which she one day caught spiking young chickens on the head with its beak. The crow had just killed a chick when the woman screamed at the bird. The crow jumped and tumbled over on its side with a faint caw. It was dead when the woman picked it up. The bird was simply scared to death at the yell of discovery. Pet crow birds discovered stealing shiny articles, like thimbles and shears, show most uneasy manners, and will fly from their best friend, which they do not do in the ordinary occupation of pecking corn with the hens, or cawing on a tree limb. This is not to say that crows have moral perceptions, however. They do know the things for which they are likely to be whipped, or otherwise punished—which is about as much as most human beings know, so far as morality is concerned.

WHAT THE MARCH HEAVENS REVEAL TO THE OBSERVER

MARCH has a gift peculiarly its own that will rejoice the hearts of dwellers in the north temperate zone. When March rules the year the vernal equinox occurs, the astronomical Spring begins, the gates of the charming season open for the procession of the flowers and the entrance of vernal delights. Its harbingers are the song of the bluebird, a tangled spray of arbutus, a snowdrop peeping from a snowdrift, or a crocus raising its gay blossom from the brown earth. Snow and ice melt as Spring puts the old pipe to his lips and blows a note or two, the very sound of which makes little thrills pass through the wintry meadow. Toward the month's close there should be seen upon the elms an unmistakable bloom, like the promise of a smile. The warmer weather will soon be ours, bright, genial sunshine will follow, and gentler breezes will invite to life in the open air.

* * *

The vernal equinox occurs on the 21st. The ecliptic and equator cross each other, the days and nights are of nearly equal length, and the sun shines from pole to pole. It might possibly be inferred from this that the crossing of ecliptic and equator (the equinox, as it is called,) would take place at the same point every year. This, however, is not the case. The equinox moves westward 50 degrees every year, the reason for which change is readily explained. The earth is slightly flattened at the poles and bulges out at the equator. The attraction of the sun and moon on this ring of matter causes the pole of the equator to revolve around the pole of the ecliptic in a small circle that requires 26,000 years for its completion. The westward movement of the equinox, due to the same cause, completes in the same time its backward movement around the ecliptic, after which the celestial machinery begins a new revolution, with the same results.

The first phase of the moon for March is that of quartering on the 3d. Full moon comes on the 10th, with the last quartering on the 17th; the new moon for the month coming in on the 24th, ready soon to shed her silvery light over the dusky land. The moon keeps up a lively visiting during the month, as she is eight times in conjunction with the various planets, seven times being the quota usually allowed for these events.

* * *

The bright star in the south in the early evening is the Dog Star, Sirius, that nearly overhead is the star Capella. A bright red star later in the evening is Acturus. Sirius is the brightest of all the fixed stars in the sky, and is far famed in literature from the time of Homer. The origin of the name is variously given, the most forcible being that chosen by the ancient astrologers and signifying evil influences. Modern astronomy, taking a more practical view, dismisses all such fancies and offers in their place some facts of considerable interest. Recent researches show that it is intrinsically much brighter than our sun; that it is moving toward the solar system, and that it is so far distant that light takes eight years to reach the earth from it.

* * *

Capella is the third star in brightness in the sky, the star Canopus, not visible in this latitude, but the brightest in the southern hemisphere, being the second. The spectrum of Canopus is extremely interesting, as it closly resembles our sun. Its light takes forty years to reach us. Arcturus is still more remarkable, as it is several times further away than the others, and yet has a very large angular motion among the stars. This means that it has actually a very swift motion in space. Like Sirius and Canopus, it is intrinsically much brighter than our sun. If our sun were viewed from either of these stars, it would not appear as bright as the pole star seems to us.

* * *

When the magnificence of sunset has vanished from the sky and in its place have come subdued and delicate colorings, echoes of the splendor that has passed away, we can see far away upon the edge of night the faint glimmering of a snowy star, trembling with silvery light on the deep blue of heaven. It is fair Venus come back once more to us to charm the witching night. With a woman's privilege she toys with her mirror, the sea, and loves herself so much that she seems to kiss the clear reflection. She kneels to herself in adoration, nods, laughs, and beckons at her own sweet smiles, and dimples like a beautiful and sensible woman, finding a joy in the perfection of her own charms.

Jupiter has now begun to tremble for his sceptre, as his fair rival is now once more the challenger for sovereignty of the evening sky. He plays an unimportant rôle in March, his chief distinction being his coming twice in conjunction with the moon, but neither event is close enough for spectacular effect.

Neptune is an evening star, and on the 29th will be in quadrature with the sun, half way on its route to opposition. On the 5th Neptune and the moon are at their closest for the month, but the meeting will not result in much that is interesting to us.

Uranus is one of the morning stars, and is found in the constellation of the Water Bearer. Unfortunately there are no very prominent stars in the group to aid us in identifying the exact locality in which this planet is at present sojourning. Saturn, with his rings half closed about him, has not yet emerged sufficiently from the rays of the sun to admit of our seeing his soft, serene light with unaided vision. We can find him after the middle of the month in the early morning sky, and before April he will be rising two hours ahead of the sun.

Mercury can be seen shortly after sunset between the 15th and the 20th of the month, shining for a short while, as on the 18th he arrives at his furthest point east of the sun, which he reaches on this swing about the sun.

Mars is now about two hours and a half behind the sun in setting, reducing this interval by half an hour at the month's close. He is apparently moving with majestic slowness, for it will take until July for him to get in conjunction with Old Sol, and after that to become a morning star.

Second Swedish Morganatic Marriage Likely.

IT is reported from Paris that the Queen of Sweden and her son, Prince Eugene, reached that city on Feb. 10 and are staying, incognito, at a little hotel in the Rue Rivoli. Although it had been announced by the Paris papers that these Swedish royalties would stop over to do some shopping in the French capital while on their way to Mentone, it is now authoritatively put forward that the Queen accompanies her son in order to meet a Swedish lady now resident in Paris with whom the Prince is deeply in love. He purposes to contract a marriage with her and thereby renounce his royal rights to the succession.

Prince Eugene, who is 41 years of age, lives a quiet life in the palace at Stockholm or serves as his mother's escort when the Queen travels abroad. He is a fine musician and a painter of European fame. Moreover, he sells his pictures, and thus increases his allowance from his father by $5,000 or $6,000 annually. He is particularly devoted to his parents, and is said to have declined the consideration of several inviting matrimonial proposals through his sense of filial duty.

If Prince Eugene marries the Swedish lady in question he will thereby emulate his elder brother, Prince Oscar Bernadotte, who, in 1888, renounced his succession to the throne and married Ebba Munck of Fulkila, who at the time was lady in waiting to the Swedish Crown Princess. There are five children of this romantic union, and all have been granted patents of nobility as Counts and Countesses. When Prince Bernadotte is not on duty as the Commander of the Swedish Navy he lives with his family a very retired life, although he, his wife, and their children are frequently at the royal palace, where the marriage was always popular. Both Prince and Princess are engaged in missionary work, and both have conducted services before informal congregations at Court.

⁂

Since the romantic marriage of Archduke John Salvator of Tuscany, nephew of Emperor Francis Joseph, to an actress and singer, Ludmilla Hubel, twenty years ago, morganatic marriages of a rational nature have been more popular than formerly among European royalties. Archduke John renounced all rank and privileges, took the name of Johann Orth, and became a wanderer on the face of the earth. He and his wife are supposed to have gone down in the wreck of the Santa Margarita off Cape Horn in 1890, in spite of persistent rumors to the effect that they left the vessel at Montevideo and are now alive and well in some South American city. Legally they have been declared dead, and the Swedish Government, in whose keeping Johann Orth confided his marriage settlement, has paid $20,000 to the relatives of Ludmilla Hubel.

In 1891 the Grand Duke Michael Michaelovitch of Russia contracted a morganatic marriage with the Countess Sophia de Merenberg, who is herself the issue of a morganatic union, being the daughter of Prince Nicholas of Luxembourg, who married a daughter of the Russian poet Poutchkins in 1867.

A few years ago the Princess Elvira, daughter of Don Carlos, Pretender to the throne of Spain, eloped with the Roman artist Tolchi and later married him, thereby following in the footsteps of other women of her house, Princesses Isabella and Josephine, great-aunts of Alfonso XIII., who eloped with men who later became their morganatic husbands.

⁂

The House of Hapsburg, even omitting the romantic and tragic affair of Archduke John, has been most prolific in morganatic alliances, but most of them have been emphasized by undesirable scandals. Such was not the case, however, when the Archduke Henry, cousin of Francis Joseph, married an actress, who later received from the aged Emperor the title of Baroness Weideck. The Royal House of Bavaria has also had its mésalliances. Prince Ludwig married, in 1859, an actress named Fräulein Mendel, and at her death, in 1891, Fräulein Barth, who later received a patent of nobility. There was much gossip in Continental Court circles five years ago when Princess Sophia of Bavaria made a pure love match by marrying Count Torring-Jettenbach, and gossip was renewed when Princess Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Prince Leopold and the Archduchess Gisela, eldest daughter of Francis Joseph, ran away with the young Lieut. Baron Otto von Seefried zu Buttenheim and married him at Genoa. This marriage has not turned out happily.

King Leopold of the Belgians, by marrying the daughter of a peasant last Fall—the news of which has lately transpired—only emulates the example of the first King of the Belgians, who, as Prince Leopold, married the famous actress Charlotte Bauer, whose son, Baron von Eppinghoven, is well known in Continental diplomatic circles. King Leopold also has a son by his morganatic wife, born Nov. 17, 1905. It is possible that this child, whose mother is now known as Baroness Vaughan, may some day be King of the Belgians.

Pius X. Says Something About "Those Frenchmen."

ATTENTION of the Pope was called the other day to the fact that French Roman Catholics had attempted to obstruct the Government officials who, under the Separation act, had been sent to the churches to take an inventory of the properties. His Holiness said, as he regarded an illustrated Italian weekly which showed the firemen trying to use the hose on the obstructionists:

"Oh, those Frenchmen! those Frenchmen! They are always in a hurry, always excitable. In reply to their repeated solicitations, I have given them one word, 'Wait!' I myself choose to wait. Certainly I shall speak, but I shall speak in my own good time—and that time is not yet. It is a treacherous law, full of snares and pitfalls. Some are already apparent, others will be discovered later. Any law may be strained in one direction or the other. See, for instance, how the Waldeck-Rousseau law in regard to Catholic associations has worked in practice. So far as the law of separation is concerned, its passing is not everything: it has to be applied. When we are able to ascertain the exact position of our adversaries, we will in turn disclose ours. We are ready. For the present I am quite willing to be called 'un homo inerte—si, inerte, inerte!' ["A man passive and inert—yes, inert, inert!"] Inert if they please, but inert in the hands of Him who upholds me, and by Whom and for Whom I will be strongly active when the day comes for action."

A denial is given by M. Rouvier, the French Premier and Secretary of Foreign Affairs, to the rumor that the Franco-German differences in regard to Morocco may be submitted to abitration. He points out that, while the conference at Algeciras lasts, it alone is the sole arbitrator. In the meantime Mr. White, the American envoy, continues to wear the armor of neutrality, and will do his best to help the two principals to agree—but that, adds Le Temps, is altogether another matter.

Monks of St. Bernard Asks Aid for Themselves.

HARDLY disposed as yet to make a public acknowledgment of the fact, the monks who guard the Grand St. Bernard Pass in their Alpine retreat are sadly in need of funds. Their expenditures in making use of modern improvements for the protection of life have not met with corresponding returns. The value of their estate has rapidly declined, and travelers are becoming more and more prone to take their aid as a matter of course.

How intelligently the monks have applied science to their vocation is illustrated by the following story: A traveler was recently overtaken by a snowstorm and sought refuge in one of the huts established by the monks in the most dangerous places. There he found food and drink and a couch to sleep on, and he gave himself up to the romantic idea that he would presently be rescued by a huge cowled figure led thither by one of the famous dogs. Nothing happened, however. In the morning, the weather in the meantime having cleared, he ventured forth, and happening to meet a monk near by demanded why he had not been rescued. "But why didn't you telephone?" asked the monk, as he led the way back into the hut and showed the apparatus behind the door. Either through his astonishment or for some other reason the traveler failed to pay the good monks for his night's lodging.

Each hut throughout the pass has now its telephone number, and the dogs have been trained to run to any hut the number of which is called out by the monk on duty. Care of these dogs has greatly increased of late, for attempts are frequently made to steal them, since they find ready purchasers. Besides the telephone plant, the monks have had constructed in Geneva a number of automobiles especially fashioned to climb the steep gradients. These motor cars will be employed next Summer to transport provisions and wood from the Aosta to the hospices of Grand St. Bernard and Simplon, and the monks themselves in cowls will act as chauffeurs. Later on lighter cars will be built for the transport of tourists, and it is hoped that these tourists will be more generous than some travelers who have owed their lives to the vigilance of the monks, their dogs, and their telephone service.

As it is now, and as it has been for nearly 1,000 years since St. Bernard de Menthon first established the hospice, every stick and every loaf of bread has to be transported from Aosta up to the hospice in sledges at enormous cost. The expenditure of the hospice is between $6,000 and $10,000 a year, and the revenue from travelers rarely amounts to more than $200 per annum. At the lowest estimate 25,000 persons stay at the hospice on an average one day in the course of the year, and scarcely 2,000 of these pay anything toward their board and lodging on their departure.

At an Alpine hotel the altitude of St. Bernard's at least 25f., or $5, a day would certainly be charged, and if the monks depart through their inability to make both ends meet, a hotel will surely arise. There is even now talk of an Italian syndicate being formed for the purpose, and overtures have been made to the monks to allow a hotel for wealthy tourists to be run in connection with the famous Alpine hospice.

Motor Skating in Paris.

What is known as motor skating is becoming popular in Paris among those who have the wherewithal to purchase motor skates. These skates, each of four rubber-tired wheels, and fashioned like miniature automobiles, have a locomotive force of one and one-half horse power, the current being conveyed to the motors from a reservoir in a belt worn around the skater's waist. The skates are about ten inches high and mounted on them one may easily attain high speed on asphalt pavements. Locomotion is gathered from initiative propulsion, and the skates may be stopped by the application of a rod held in the hand.

King Leopold, Still Unrehabilitated, Up to a New Intrigue.

LEOPOLD II., incidentally King of the Belgians, the head and chief owner of the Central African Rubber Trust, which operated under the name of the Congo Free State, has been sorely disappointed by the work of M. Felicien Cattier, one of the professors of the University of Brussels. Prof. Cattier has been investigating the alleged atrocities in the Congo State, the political and financial status of that territory, and has published a pamphlet entitled "Etude sur la Situation de l'Etat Indépendant du Congo." In spite of royal anticipation, Prof. Cattier does not rehabilitate his sovereign. He sums up the case as follows:

"An examination of the Congo State administration reveals the clear and incontestable fact that the Congo is not a colony in the proper sense of the term; it is a financial speculation. The real aims of those in authority are pecuniary—to increase the amount yielded by taxation, to exploit the natural wealth of the country, to effect all that can stimulate its powers of production. Everything else is subordinate to this end. The colony is administered neither in the interests of the natives nor even for the economic interest of Belgium; the moving spirit is the desire to assure to the sovereign King the maximum of pecuniary benefit."

The King is said to be particularly bitter against England, for it was English missionaries who first turned the attention of the world toward the deplorable state of affairs in the Congo region. M. Vandervelde, the Belgian labor leader, will shortly interpellate the Government on the charge that the King is deliberately playing for an armed collision in the Upper Nile Valley between the Congo and Anglo-Egyptian troops, counting on German support. Legally, Belgium herself cannot be called to account for the Congolese activity in question except in so far as the King, who personally directs the Congo policy, is amenable to Belgian law.

M. Loubet, Poor, Pleads for the Joys of Oblivion.

M. LOUBET, who ceased to be President of France a fortnight ago, entertained an editor of Le Figaro the other evening in his little flat in the Rue Dante, Paris. Speaking of the attacks made upon him during the early days of his Presidency he said: "I had to hold myself in, and I thus gained my ends. Now that I am no longer President it is at least possible to reply if I am attacked again."

He expressed his wonder that a people like the French, so gentle and amiable, so full of charming and noble qualities, could take pleasure in reading certain newspapers which, in political discussion, pass all bounds. "I really cannot understand it," he said, "and it is so easy to govern them if they would only content themselves with minding their own business."

Referring to private matters the ex-President of the republic gave it to be understood that he is by no means as rich as some suppose. He cannot afford to keep a stable in Paris. His phaeton has been sent to his country place at La Begude de Mazene. Col. Lamy is trying to sell off his horses, and M. Loubet ardently desires to see the animals in good hands. As to future means of locomotion, the ex-President will use the lumbering and antiquated 'bus plying between the Odéon and the other side of the Seine. He has taken a livery stable conveyance for this month, but it is chiefly for Mme. Loubet's use. For the future, in fact, M. Loubet will lead a quiet, simple life, devoid of ostentation, and he declares that he courts oblivion.

New French Plan for Tunneling the English Channel.

WITH the increase of good-fellowship between France and England, talk of tunneling the English Channel, thereby forming a new bond between the two countries, has been revived. During the recent sojourn of the London County Council in Paris its members inspected the model of a tunnel entirely new. The distinctive feature of the new scheme is that the tunnel is carried into the cliffs, well above the sea, on each side of the Channel.

The old fear that has always arisen in one country or the other when such a scheme was broached in the past—that the tunnel would allow French troops to invade England, or vice versa—has now been laughed to scorn. The new tunnel could be cannonaded from the sea or easily blown up—or down, as the case would be—with mines, while on the French side there is a viaduct connecting the submarine with the aerial sections of the tunnel, and forming a ready target for the guns of a fleet in the Straits.

The matter is certain to be revived in its new aspect before Parliament at an early day. Little opposition to the scheme, if any, is looked for from France. The Northern France Railway Company is convinced that an enormous extension of traffic would take place between the two countries if once the fear of seasickness were removed. At present the annual exchange of passengers is only 1,200,000, which is a small figure beside the Anglo-Belgian traffic of 6,000,000. The number of British visitors to France, although about a hundred times more than the flow from the French side, has doubled itself in the last decade. Assuming, say the Frenchmen, that it was 2,000,000 at the opening of the tunnel, it is hardly too much to suppose that it will jump to ten in a very short time.

Fear of a French invasion having been allayed, Englishmen, it is thought, may object to the tunnel on the ground that the construction would result in a blow to British shipping interests, because commodities bound east would go direct to Marseilles instead of from Liverpool or London, and thence probably be carried in French bottoms.

To this objection M. Sartiaux, the Director of the Chemin de Fer du Nord, has this to say: "I guarantee that the British mercantile marine would not lose a kilogram. The route under the sea is bound to be expensive for many years to come, and would be almost exclusively for passenger traffic. Of course perishable commodities would go that way, but the loss would be to our own ships and to the English Channel steamers."

How the Czar's Government Invites More Massacres.

MANY thousand leaflets were recently distributed among the working classes in St. Petersburg and Moscow urging them to rise and murder the "intellectuals" and all the Revolutionary Democrats and Progressionists. Some of the copies were printed on paper bearing the watermarks of the printing bureau of the Ministry of the Interior, proving them to be of Government origin.

The appeal begins by denouncing the recent rising at Moscow and tells the laboring men that those who agitate for a change in the form of government are a mere "rabble of thieves, Anarchists, blood-red Socialists, and Jews," who terrorize workingmen while their own object is nothing but plunder. "These rascals are our real blood suckers. It is they who throw us and our families into misery."

Alluding to the recent assassination of M. Filippoff, who was shot by a Government agent while endeavoring to address the workingmen of a military manufactory, the appeal continues:

"Honor and glory belong to you, dear comrades, who had the courage to annihilate your enemy and the enemy of the Fatherland, this brigand of the revolutionary band! We demand full vengeance upon all the red ruffians for the blood of our fellowmen spilt at Moscow. Death to the revolutionists! Death to the Jewish Social Democrats! Death to the whole red band!"

Royal Spanish Lovers the Delight of Europe.

NOTWITHSTANDING the newspaper accounts of the grave and formal Castilian etiquette incumbent upon the royal courtship that for a fortnight went on at Biarritz, one has only to look at the pictures of Don Alfonso and his fiancée to feel that many of the vaunted punctilios of the Spanish Court were dispensed with. Although a King from his birth—as no other monarch has ever been—the Spanish youth seems to bear lightly, if not flippantly, his many titles—His Most Catholic Majesty Don Alfonso XIII., King of Spain, of Aragon, of the Two Sicilys, of Jerusalem, of Navarre, of Gibraltar, of the Western and Eastern Indies, of the Oceanic Continent, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, of Brabant and Milan, Count of Hapsburg, of Flanders, of the Tyrol, and many more besides.

In spite of all these titles, however, it was Alfonso not the English Princess, his future mother-in-law, Princess Henry of Battenberg, who gave carte blanche to the camera fiends and even posed for their benefit with his fiancée on every and all occasions. That is why the world has become familiar with the courtship at Biarritz, and that is why all the royalties of Europe are horrified at the unprecedented democratic conduct of this young King of ancient lineage and many titles. Although both Don Alfonso and Princess Ena speak French, German, and English equally well, it has been observed that they have always carried on their conversations in English—the language neither of diplomacy nor of love.

Few royal visitors have achieved popularity more quickly than did Don Alfonso during his visits last year to London and Paris. In London it became obvious that he talked a great deal to Princess Ena. A lady in the royal party at the gala performance at the Opera claims to have been the first to proclaim this fact; then everybody in the secret watched the development with much interest and sympathy until the Spanish Ambassador took the young lady's mother down to tea at a large afternoon party, and the secret was a secret no longer.

⁂

For the first fourteen years of her life Princess Ena was brought up entirely at the Court of her grandmother, Queen Victoria. Christmas and the New Year were invariably spent at Osborne; then came a sojourn of several weeks at Windsor, varied perhaps by a visit of a couple of days to Buckingham Palace, and then away to the country again, possibly to Balmoral, Queen Victoria's much-loved Highland home, where Princess Ena was born.

The passing of Queen Victoria brought many changes into the life of the Princess, for her mother withdrew to the Isle of Wight, where she holds the honorary title of "Governor," her husband, Prince Henry, having died in 1896. Princess Henry and her daughter paid a visit to Egypt last Spring, and on their return Princess Ena made her formal début at Buckingham Palace, where she took her place in the semi-circle of royal Princesses behind the chairs of state occupied by their Majesties when they hold a Court. She had already taken part in the procession of Princes and Princesses of the Blood Royal at the Coronation, where she and her brothers followed immediately after their mother and before the Duchesses of Connaught and Albany.

⁂

The events of Princess Ena's first London season followed one another in quick succession. After the presentation Princess Henry gave a ball in her honor at Kensington Palace, which was honored by a large gathering of royalties. Then came return balls, and before the end of May the débutante was fairly launched upon London society. It was in the week following the ball at Kensington Palace that Don Alfonso came to pay his respects in a persistent downpour of rain. Princess Ena was present with her large, radiant smile at all the festivities given in the young sovereign's honor—the gala night at the Opera, the Court ball, and the Ascot races, where the Princess appeared under a huge old-rose hat. After Ascot came Osborne Palace, and then the ceremonies and festivities attending the presence of the French fleet. August was spent on board Princess Henry's steam yacht, and in the Autumn a round of visits was paid to country houses in different parts of England. Probably the increase of mail from Madrid rather than the indiscretion of any particular person allowed the attachment that had been progressing ever since the gala night at the Opera to become generally known.

In the three months preceding the courtship at Biarritz quiet preparations for the great change in Princess Ena's life had been going on, among them a course of instruction on Roman Catholic doctrine given by one of the Carmelite Fathers at Kensington. In the meantime the King of Spain paid perfunctory visits to other Courts, where no Princesses, however fair, caused him to forget the essentially English charms and characteristics of the fair-haired, bright-complexioned Princess Ena, who, perhaps just because of the contrast in her appearance to that of Spanish beauties, is so ardently desired by the people of Spain for their Queen.

⁂

The interest that has lately centred around the pretty Villa Mouriscot in the ancient town of Biarritz has flooded all Spain with enthusiasm, if one may judge from the Spanish newspapers of all political and social complexions. And the motive which makes the attachment most acceptable to political Spain is the feeling that a step has been taken in the direction of a future alliance with Great Britain. Spain apparently welcomes with no misgivings the fact that she will shortly be invaded by the laughter and freedom and liberalism of this young English Princess, however great may be her contrast with the sixteenth century grand ladies and mediaeval etiquette so ruthlessly shattered last month at Biarritz. All Spain looks forward to next Summer, when, as their young King's consort, she will be the wonder and delight and terror of every woman south of the Pyrenees.

Beggars' Rule in Rome.

A STATEMENT issued by the Chief of Police of Rome serves to show how numerous and indomitable has become the begging class in the Eternal City. There were made in December and January last 611 arrests of openly declared beggars, 3,867 fines were inflicted on peddlers of small wares, 111 arrests of children vagabonds, and 113 fines imposed for disturbing the public peace.

The police make every effort, but public opinion seems to be against them. For instance, to take a scene witnessed recently: A guard tried to arrest a one-legged beggar well known to every Roman as a criminal, and the pet of all the foreigners in the city. The man promptly threw himself on the ground and began to cry, whining that he had done nothing, and appealing to the crowd. Soon murmurs were heard of "Poor fellow, he has only one leg!" "Let the poor thing go!" "What a shame!" &c., until indignation got the upper hand, and the policeman had to defend himself instead of arresting his beggar.

Departure of Mr. Gericke

⁂

Technical and Artistic Perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Due to Him---Question of His Successor.

NEW YORK is concerned, with Boston, in the departure of Mr. Gericke from the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of this season. New York is a faithful and enthusiastic supporter of this orchestra, and its interest in the conductor is only less than its interest in the problems concerning the conductors of its own orchestras. It is needless to say that Mr. Gericke's departure will be a cause of great regret among the attendants upon the Boston Orchestra's concerts in New York, and that the appointment of his successor is a matter of intense interest to them.

What the Boston Orchestra is Mr. Gericke has made it. The character it has had as an artistic instrument and the style of its performance are as they are because they have been molded exactly by his ideals and methods. High ideals and strenuous methods they have been. He has never spared his men any of the pains and labor that he considered requisite to obtain the exact effect he was aiming at in any work, in any passage, in any single bit of orchestral color or phrase or adjustment of tonal balance. But neither has he spared himself. A "passion for perfection," it has been well said, has been at the foundation of Mr. Gericke's work as an orchestral conductor, and he has wreaked himself upon the Boston Orchestra to make it what he would have it.

Once before he resigned his place, after five years' labor, and returned to Vienna with shattered nerves. He came back in 1898, after nine years, but nothing had changed in Mr. Gericke's methods; and if anything had changed in the meantime in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he set himself to work, undismayed and resolute, to change it back again.

Greater technical perfection in the playing of an orchestra it is vain to seek, but there is something finer, subtler, more elusive than technical finish in orchestral performance that Mr. Gericke has given the Boston Orchestra; the perfect euphony, the perfect balance, the exact adjustment of the color and quality of every phrase, so that there shall be just so much of one instrumental color, just so much of another, and the resultant mixture shall be the precise one that belongs to the harmony of the whole. Mr. Gericke has been charged with sacrificing spirit, breadth, and the fiercer sonorities of modern orchestral music in his anxiety to keep this sort of quality.

Whatever it may have been once, it is now an unjust charge. Especially in the later years of his work here, he has shown a continually increasing sympathy with productions of the modern schools of music, has played them frequently, and with splendid enthusiasm and devotion. Who will not say that Mr. Gericke's performance of Strauss's "Don Quixote," for instance, for the first time in New York, was not superior in almost every respect to the performance the composer himself gave of it not long afterward? Besides all its other excellencies, it had the very important one that the orchestra did not break down in the middle. This is something, and it is something that has always been felt to belong to the Boston Orchestra under Mr. Gericke—its absolute certainty, its unquestioned perfection of preparation. When it plays a piece it is able to do it as Mr. Gericke intends, and until it is able to, this piece is not played.

It has been said, also, that Mr. Gericke has exhausted his men and overburdened and worried them with rehearsals, with endless repetitions and stoppings. Perhaps; but the result of it has been that these same men have played as scarcely another body of the kind in the world can play; that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is absolutely perfect in its way. And that, too, is something. Another conductor may have done differently, may have got other kinds of effects, may have accomplished another order of results; but—to return to the original proposition—as it is now, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the product precisely of Mr. Gericke's strenuous, unwearied activities. Those who are grateful for its achievements must express their gratitude first of all to him.

⁂

The question of his successor, as is the question of the conductor for the Philharmonic Society, is a very difficult one. The simple fact is that most of the greatest of European conductors could not or would not come at all, and that those who would demand sums that are beyond all reason. A singer at the Opera House is not—for any length of time—in receipt of a cachet greater than the money he or she can draw into the house. But the moneys that orchestral conductors are asking are more than can be driven into the concert halls under any circumstances. If they are paid, it means a certain deficit. If a public-spirited backer or committee of backers has met deficits for a series of years, they may be supposed to have done so in the expectation of some day "getting out of the woods." If the conditions are such that permanent financial gloom is the inevitable outlook, deficits are likely to become wearisome. Nobody has as yet come forward with an endowment ample to meet such deficits and intended to supply what the public is not expect ever to supply.

⁂

Will Mr. Higginson secure some young man of great talent without a great name and bring him over to make his place and his success in this country? It would seem to be the most promising suggestion, if the conditions can be met, both for Boston and for New York. But it is a very difficult one. How find an unknown young man of great talent? How be sure of him if you have found him? The accounts seem to indicate that Chicago has succeeded in this, in getting Frederick A. Stock to succeed Theodore Thomas; but there will be no chance to experiment and test in the case of Boston. Such experiment as has been made by the Philharmonic was unsuccessful—for it is more than probable that if young Dr. Kunwald had done better at his trial a month ago he might now be under consideration as the next Philharmonic conductor.

⁂

Is there really no difference between the "vaudeville show" in the last act of "The Gypsy Baron," as it was presented at the Metropolitan for the director's benefit, and the Lesson Scene in "The Barber of Seville"? There was a good deal of unfavorable criticism in the press and outside of it, on Mr. Conried's "round up" of his artists through the lasso of his contracts, by which all except one, who reported a fortunate case of tonsilitis, were compelled to appear in various "specialties" in this last act. And now, because Mme. Sembrich sings Strauss's "Primavera" waltz and then "Ah, non giunge" in Rosina's music lesson, we are asked why this "criminal vaudeville" is not as much of a "crime" as the concert in costume in "The Gypsy Baron"?

Well, for several reasons. The chief of which is that it is appropriate, and, indeed, a necessity of the situation; and that it takes the place of something that Rossini composed for the purpose and has been lost. A young woman taking a music lesson naturally sings something. Rossini cast the singing lesson in the form of a trio between Rosina, the Count, and Dr. Bartolo. This piece has disappeared; and it is not the only portion of the score of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" that has suffered this fate, for the overture has also been lost. In place of the one that Rossini provided, an overture that had already served its office successively in two of his previous operas, tragedies at that, has been substituted.

They were much less particular about such things in 1816 than we are now. Rossini, like most other Italian operatic composers of the period, turned out operas that were ordered by certain managers for a certain time—for the carnival season or some other of the periods of operatic high tide. They came easily from the brains of this fertile gentry, and were not preciously guarded as immortal masterworks. Seldom were they published, and usually had lived out their short day before there was any suggestion of publication. The fact that Rossini was a genius and that some of his works were destined for what, in operatic literature, is almost an immortality, did not change his relations to his managers. He wrote "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" for the "Noble Theatre of Torre Argentina," in Rome, in thirteen days, with no thought of publishing it. He sold the manager the right of producing it for two years, and one year after its production he had the right to take back the original score.

Such was the general custom. For some reason he seems not to have taken back his copy when the time was up, and these two numbers of the opera went astray. It is not strange that manuscripts and parts should disappear from the closets and storerooms of the theatres. Whether or not the trio from the lesson scene was deliberately discarded by prima donne who wanted to sing brilliant solo interpolations, it was lost, and for all subsequent time prima donne have had to sing such interpolations for their pretended music master.

⁂

It did not signify much, either to the operetta of "Der Zigeunerbaron" or its composer or its librettist, that an entire troupe of singers was introduced to sing specialties in the last act where there is no occasion for any. The operetta is elastic enough, the composer is dead, and the librettist—Mr. J. Schnitzer, for the benefit of those to whom he is unknown—has not been heard from. If any of the artists felt their dignity touched by this scheme, they had their contracts to think of, by which they were bound; or there was tonsilitis. There were other questions involved, such as the propriety of the director's attitude, and the use of the Metropolitan Opera House for this purpose, and the expenditure of time and effort to the detriment of masterpieces announced for the subscription series. All these are matters that have passed into history, at least for the present season. They seem to have very little to do with the conspiracy to pass over in silence the interpolations in the lesson scene of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia."

RICHARD ALDRICH.

SAM FRANKO'S CONCERT.

The third of Sam Franko's concerts of old music will be given in Mendelssohn Hall on Thursday evening. Julian Walker, basso, will be the soloist, and the chorus of the Society for Ethical Culture will take part. The programme will include these pieces:

Preludio to "Sant Elena al Calvario"..
Leonardo Leo, (1694-1746)
Cantata, "I with My Cross-Staff Gladly Wander," for bass, chorus, and orchestra..Johann Sebastian Bach, (1685-1750)
Symphony, Op. 4, in A major..............
Franz Xaver Richter, (1709-1789)
Ballet music from "Piramo and Tisbe"..
Johann Adolph Hasse, (1699-1783)

Of the symphony and its composer, the programme note says:

"The name of a symphonist new to local lists appears on the programme of Mr. Franko's concert to-day. It is that of Franz Xaver Richter, one of the foremost men of the school of composers to which Johann Stamitz, one of whose works was presented at the first concert this season, belonged. His school is receiving credit for having been the real inspiration of Haydn and Mozart since a patriotic movement in Bavaria, suggested to students a more thorough and painstaking study of the compositions of its members. These are now known as the Mannheim symphonists. * * *.

"Richter was born in Moravia on Dec. 1, 1709. He entered the service of the Count Palatine in Mannheim in 1762 and was appointed Chapelmaster at the cathedral in Strasburg in 1769. There he seems to have had a really formidable company of performers at his command, no less than forty instrumentalists, twenty-four men singers, and nine boys. He left twenty-eight masses in manuscripts in the cathedral library. Considerable of his chamber music, including a number of symphonies, was printed in Amsterdam and London while he was still at Mannheim. They, like the present specimen, are written for eight instruments, two oboes, two horns, and the quartet of strings. The symphony is in three movements, simple and clear in form, of which the first and third, Allegro son brio and Presto are in A major, while the middle movement, Andante poco, is in E."

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The third and last concert by the Boston Symphony Quartet will be given in Mendelssohn Hall on next Wednesday evening at 8:15. It will introduce a novelty, a serenade for flute, violin, and viola by Max Reger. This work is new, its opus number being 77A, and it was published only recently. So far as is known, Prof. Hess gave its first performance in this country at the last Boston Symphony Quartet concert in Boston, and this will be its first performance in New York. It will be played by Prof. Willy Hess, Mr. Emile Ferir, and Mr. André Maquarre, the flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The second number on the programme will be Richard Strauss's sonata for pianoforte and violin in E flat major. This will be played by Prof. Willy Hess and Mme. Olga Samaroff. Mme. Samaroff has made several appearances with the Boston Symphony Quartet this Winter. The final number will be Beethoven's quartet in E flat major, Op. 127, No. 12, a work which is generally less familiar than the other late quartets of the master. Plans are making to increase the number of concerts by the Boston Symphony Quartet in New York next Winter.

MUSICAL ART SOCIETY.

The second concert of the Musical Art Society will be given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock under the direction of Frank Damrosch. The programme will be as follows and will include a number of works the society has not sung before:

Cogitavit Dominus..................Palestrina
(Motet, for five-part chorus.)
Laudate Dominum...........Orlando Di Lasso
(For twelve-part chorus.)
Two Sacred Songs...................J. S. Bach
"Gethsemane."
"Komm doch Herr Jesu."
Easter Song—
"Now Christ, the Lord, is risen to-day."
Cantata, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden"...........................Max Reger
(Contralto and tenor solo, chorus, solo violin, solo oboe, and organ.)
Hymne an Die Nacht..........Hans Koessler
(For six-part chorus.)
Hymne ....Richard Strauss
(For sixteen-part chorus.)
One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Psalm..
Ch. M. Loeffler
(For women's voices, two flutes, solo violoncello, harp, and organ.)
"Ich Will Dich Lieben, Meine Krone"—
(For eight-part chorus.) Peter Cornelius

THE NEW MUSIC SOCIETY.

The New Music Society of America will give the following orchestral programme of music by American composers next Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall:

"Indian" Suite, Opus 48..Edward MacDowell
"Salammbô's Invocation," for mezzo-soprano and orchestra.......Henry F. Gilbert
Miss Elise Stevens.
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2, in D minor ....Edward MacDowell
Miss Ruth L. Deyo,
(her first New York appearance.)
"Ouverture Joyeuse"........Arthur Shepherd

The orchestra will be that of the Russian Symphony Society, and the conductor Modest Altschuler. Miss Elise Stevens, who will sing "Salammbô's Invocation," is a young New York soprano, who has been a concert soloist here with the Russian Symphony Orchestra and other organizations. Miss Ruth L. Deyo, who will at this concert make her first New York appearance, is a young American pianist, born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and a pupil of Mr. MacDowell. Except for a concert at the Columbian Exposition, when at nine years of age she played some of her own compositions, Miss Deyo was kept from public performance until her début in Berlin, where she had studied with Mme. Teresa Carreño and with Stepanoff.

Henry F. Gilbert, whose dramatic scene for mezzo-soprano and orchestra, "Salammbô's Invocation," will be a novelty of the concert, was born in 1868 at Somerville, Mass. He studied counterpoint and harmony at the New England Conservatory of Music, and orchestration and composition under Edward MacDowell. Mr. Gilbert's works include a symphonic poem suggested by Maeterlinck's "The Seven Daughters of Orlamonde," a "Symphonic Sketch" inspired by a passage from Thoreau, an "American Humoresque" and two episodes, "Legend" and "Negro Episode." He has written pieces for pianoforte, among them a fantasy based upon Edgar Allan Poe's "Island of the Fay," and songs, one of which, the "Pirate Song," to words by Stevenson, has been much sung by Mr. David Bispham.

"Salammbô's Invocation" is a setting of excerpts from the third chapter of Gustave Flaubert's novel "Salammbô," and comprises the Carthaginian woman's address to the moon goddess, Tanith. It is scored for full symphonic orchestra.

Arthur Shepherd, whose "Ouverture Joyeuse" is now to have its first performance, was born at Paris, Idaho, in 1880. He studied composition and musical theory in Boston, and is now living in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is conductor of an orchestra. His "Ouverture Joyeuse" was the prize winner in last year's Paderewski competition for American orchestral works.

The New Music Society of America will give a second orchestral concert Monday evening, April 2.

NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

"The Saracens" and "The Fair Alda," two fragments from "The Roland's Song," by E. A. MacDowell, are on the programme which the New York Symphony Orchestra, with Walter Damrosch as conductor and Rafael Joseffy as assisting solo artist, will give at its last subscription concerts of this season at Carnegie Hall this afternoon and Tuesday evening. They are two movements of a Roland symphony composed by Mr. MacDowell in Wiesbaden. The first is wild and gloomy in spirit, the second full of gentleness. Both may be taken as musical portraiture or as delineations of moods, as the listener chooses. "Die Schöne Alda" is known to the English readers of the Orlando or Roland romances as Aldabella. She was the sister of Oliviero and Brandimarte, daughter of Monodantes, and wife of Orlando. She is called Alda in the German version of the "Song of Roland," and either Alda, Anda, or Ande in the French and Spanish poems. She died of a broken heart after Roland fell at Roncesvalles. The programme is as follows:

"The Saracens," "The Fair Alda," two fragments from the Roland's song.......
E. A. MacDowell
Concerto No. 1 for piano with orchestra..
Brahms
Rafael Joseffy.
Symphony No. 8 in F................Beethoven
"Death and Transfiguration," symphonic poem ....Richard Strauss

Brahms's first piano concerto is much less frequently played than his second. It is one of his earlier works, and originally contained the funeral march-like movement which the composer afterward cut out and added to the "German Requiem," so that the concerto now consists only of the usual three movements. Brahms originally intended this composition for a symphony and arranged it for two pianos. Then he was persuaded to make it over into a piano concerto. It belongs to his earliest period as a composer.

PIANIST WILL RECOVER.

News received in this city shows that the illness of Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianist, is not so serious as was feared. Her manager, Henry Wolfsohn, has word that after a rest this Spring and Summer she will regain her health and will be able to resume her concert work next Winter.

It was feared at first that the artist's eyesight would be lost as a result of her nervous affliction, and that her public career would be ended in consequence. It is now said, however, that any trouble with her eyes will be remedied with a rest. She is at a Southern health resort living an out-of-door life. She will keep this up for several weeks. It is expected that she soon will be able to practice a few hours a day.

Invading Grand Opera Field

* * *

Something About the Man Who Dares Enter Into Competition with the Metropolitan.

GIVING grand opera is not a new idea with Oscar Hammerstein. Although he surprised many music lovers in New York with his declaration of war on the Metropolitan and his announcement that he would have the de Reszkes in his Thirty-fourth Street opera house next season, his intimates had long known that he cherished the plan of giving grand opera.

This feat will add to a remarkable career. When he came to this country Mr. Hammerstein was a poor immigrant boy, and he started to do office work in a cigarmaker's shop. Afterward he obtained employment on a tobacco journal, and when he was still a young man he owned a tobacco trade paper.

It was not long before he discovered that he had a turn for invention. His attention was called to this faculty one day when a careless employe in his printing shop left the water running in his sink, and the next morning he got to the office to find it flooded and the tailor who had the shop underneath demanding $1,000 for damage to goods. Mr. Hammerstein paid the $1,000, which he could ill afford, and then went ruefully and looked at the sink. Any night it might be left to run again. It did not take long to figure that that sink might bankrupt him.

He sought a remedy, and within an hour had a plumber there. A hole was punched in the side of the sink near the top and a connecting pipe was run to the waste pipe. Everybody uses that simple device nowadays, but the plumber who was called gave Mr. Hammerstein $2,500 on the spot for the idea and patented it and made a fortune out of it.

* * *

Mr. Hammerstein, with this object lesson, bent his ideas on machines to handle tobacco. It was not many years before he had sold out his trade paper, and was making a large income in this way. At one time his royalties from one of his machines brought him $250,000 a year.

Made wealthy in this fashion he built two theatres in Harlem, and has been building theatres ever since. His greatest effort was the Olympia, now the New York and Criterion Theatres. It was in this that he first tried his own ideas of music. His compositions were not successful, as he admits, and they helped to make a failure of this house, leaving him without fortune.

At the time when he seemed to be finally "knocked out," as he puts it, he leased the plot at Forty-second Street and Seventh Avenue, on which stood an old stable. Soon he had put two theatres on it on credit. He leased one to David Belasco and has run the other at a large profit. He paid off his debts and had time to turn to invention again. He has now made a machine that completely manufactures a cigar. This is bringing in royalties that enable him to plan big things again.

So his ideas have turned to grand opera. He has given up the idea of putting on his own compositions. But he has ideas about opera and he wants to show them to the public. So he has used part of his funds in putting up the opera house in Thirty-fourth Street between Eighth and Ninth Avenues.

Mr. Hammerstein means to give grand opera. A lot of musical people have been to him recently and told him it would be folly to attempt to compete with the Metropolitan. His closest advisers have said to him that a success cannot be made of his plan. He admits that members of his own family have stood aghast at his idea. But Mr. Hammerstein nevertheless intends to make the experiment.

"I have heard that people have been talking about my plan, and have said that I could not be anything but crazy to think of it," he said, as he sat smoking in the lobby of the Victoria theatre.

"You stand to lose a lot of money," said one who was talking with him.

"Yes, I know that," said Mr. Hammerstein. "But I am not doing this without thinking it all over. I am perfectly aware that I have tremendous difficulties to encounter in the matter. I am perfectly aware that no one man has ever undertaken a task like this before.

* * *

"I know that the people who are box holders in the Metropolitan would not give me their countenance if I offered to them my whole place free. I know there are many who wish to be with them, who will not give me their countenance. But then those who have interests in the Metropolitan do not comprise all the best people in New York. They are good people, and I have nothing to say against them. They are welcome to be with the Metropolitan, for I think there will be room enough for both Opera Houses. But I also think that New York has grown so large that there are plenty of people in the highest society to fill the boxes of two opera houses. That is the basis on which I am going."

Mr. Hammerstein was asked whether he thought the location of his opera house on Thirty-fourth Street, near Eighth Avenue, was one that would be suitable for a house that was intended to draw support from New York society. It was pointed out that the Directors of the Metropolitan have thought that when the time came to abandon the present building it would be better to go to the neighborhood of Central Park for a site.

"I do not think the centre of amusements will shift in that direction," he said. "The building of the Pennsylvania station will have a tendency to draw the life that way, and I think it will be found in a few years that I am right in placing my opera house there. Society will not mind the extra drive of a few blocks. People will go anywhere, if they can get what they want. If you have the proper performance, they will go to the dock front. If you haven't, it won't do you any good to put it at Forty-second Street and Seventh Avenue. But then I have no apologies to offer for the location. One great advantage I will have will be the room for carriages. I will have a whole long block there. The Metropolitan is badly placed in this respect."

Mr. Hammerstein was asked if he thought that the city would support another large opera house.

"Why not?" he asked. "If 2,000,000 people could support one why cannot 4,000,000 support two? Remember also that with the better means of transportation the amusements in New York will appeal to a far larger territory. People who do not come in from New Jersey now at night will do so when they can shoot through tunnels by fast trains. I have had a lot of experience in amusements, too, and I find that a lot of big places do no harm. All you need to do in New York is to give the right kind of an entertainment and there is plenty of money to support it.

"Remember what was said about the Hippodrome. Everybody thought when that was started that it would draw from all the theatres if it made a success. The Hippodrome has made a success and the theatres have not suffered. In fact, I think that business has increased from the added interest that has been given to theatrical performances by the establishment of the Hippodrome. Although I am not looking for profits in my plan, I do not think I shall fail to get them.

* * *

"As to the cost, I start with my opera house and my ground my own, and not a cent of debt for either. I have not a debt in the world. I have my own income besides. I intend to spend a great deal of money for equipment. The outlay for necessary scenery and general necessities of productions, which I shall have to store up for opera répertoire, will be large. It will cost a great deal for the artists whom I intend to bring here. But artists of the class of the de Reszkes and others I shall have are not an expense. They pay for themselves by the houses they draw.

"When I have filled my boxes and the upper part of the house, however, I shall be able to pay the expense of any performance, and the rest of the house will be a profit. The great amount of room in the upper part of my house will be its strongest feature. The thousands who wish to hear good opera will be accommodated, and I have no doubt that they will welcome a chance to hear such music as that I shall offer."

It is a work of very large dimensions, and is entitled "Odysseus's Departure and Shipwreck." Another will be an unknown concerto for violin by the Swiss, Emile Jacques-Dalcroze, which Henri Marteau will play on Thursday evening. The third will be a setting for baritone and orchestra of Keats's "La Belle Dame sans Merci," by Frederick Converse of Boston. This Mr. David Bispham will sing at the Saturday matinée concert. The symphonies will be Richard Strauss's "Aus Italien" and Schubert's great symphony in C major.

"Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns's Biblical opera, will be sung in concert form by the Oratorio Society at Carnegie Hall, Tuesday evening, April 3, under direction of Frank Damrosch. The soloists will be Miss Janet Spencer, mezzo soprano; Mr. Ben Davies, the British tenor, and M. Borde, bass. The Oratorio Society was the first to sing "Samson and Delilah" in America, its production here having taken place March 25 and 26, 1892. In all the society has sung this music four times. Besides this the Abbey, Schoeffel & Grau Company at the Metropolitan Opera House gave an elaborately staged performance of "Samson and Delilah" in French on Feb. 8, 1895, with Mme. Mantelli, Plançon, Campanari, and Tamagno in the cast.

* * *

The Russian Symphony Orchestra will play five compositions new to this city at its next concert at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, March 17, under Modest Altschuler's direction. Even the composers of these works are new to this organization's programmes. They are a symphony, by Glière; serenade for strings, by Sokoloff; Cossack dance, by Seroff; waltz, by Cui; concerto for violin and orchestra, by Mlinarski, and in addition the "Tsar-Sultan," (Fairy Tale,) by Rimsky-Korsakoff, will be given.

* * *

At their joint concert with the New York Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, March 18, Messrs Gérardy and Marteau will play an elaborate programme, including Sinding's A major and Vieux Temps's A minor violin concertos, Haydn's and Saint-Säens's 'cello concertos, and what is announced as a "trio for violin, violoncello, and orchestra," by Brahms. This may be taken to mean the double concerto for the violin and violoncello. Time will tell.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

Mme. Yvette Guilbert will give to-night the last of her concerts at the Lyceum Theatre. This will begin at 8:30 and she will be heard in an attractive programme. This will include her two cycles of French songs, "Chansons Pompadour" and "Chansons Crinoline." In the first Mme. Guilbert will wear a reproduction of the gown in which Mme. Pompadour was painted by Watteau. The Crinoline songs will bring the singer forward in flowered silks of extra ample girth, like those worn in the hoop-skirt days. She will be assisted by M. Armand Forest, violinist, and Mr. Richard Hageman, pianist.

* * *

The Marum Quartet will play at its third concert, on Thursday evening at Cooper Union, Mozart's quartet in D major; Rubinstein's trio in G minor, and Schubert's quartet in A minor. The quartet, which consists of Ludwig Marum, Michel Bernstein, Jacob Altschuler, and Modest Altschuler, will have the assistance of Josef Lhévinne, the eminent Russian pianist who plays for the only time here in a chamber music concert. The usual prices, which range from 50 to 15 cents, will also prevail for this concert.

* * *

The Olive Mead Quartet will have the assistance of Mrs. Thomas Tapper at its third concert in Mendelssohn Hall next Tuesday evening. The programme will be: Beethoven's Quartet, G major, Op. 18, No. 2; Brahms's Sonata, for pianoforte and violin, A major, Op. 100; Schumann's Quintet, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello, E flat major, Op. 44. Mrs. Tapper, who has recently come from Boston, is a well-known pianist and has played frequently with the Kneisel Quartet. This is her first appearance in New York.

* * *

Sigismund Stojowski, pianist, is to give his second piano recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday afternoon. He will play Beethoven's "Appassionata" sonata, Mozart's A minor rondo, Schumann's Carnaval, pieces by Chopin, his own variations on a Cracovian theme, and a study and the E major polonaise by Liszt.

* * *

Jan Kubelik, the violinist, will give a concert in the Hippodrome this evening. He will be assisted by Victor Herbert's orchestra.

* * *

Harold Bauer will give a piano recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Saturday afternoon, and has arranged an uncommonly interesting and novel programme for it. It is as follows:

Rhapsodie in B minor, Intermezzo in A major,	Brahms
Novellette in F sharp minor, No. 8	Schumann
Sonata in A flat major, Op. 110	Beethoven
"Jeau d'eau"	Maurice Ravel
Impromptu in F minor	Faure
Scherzo in B flat minor	Balakirew
Etude, "Le Vent"	Alkan
Nocturne in C minor, Scherzo in B minor,	Chopin

* * *

Miss Harriette Cady will give a piano recital on Monday afternoon in Mendelssohn Hall. She will play a prelude and fugue from "The Well-Tempered Clavichord," which is a very good thing for her to do; a better thing than playing a dérangement of an organ fugue; Mendelssohn's "Variations Serieuses," Chopin pieces, and an interesting group of Russian compositions by Scriabine, Glinka, (arranged by Balakireff.) Tschaikowsky, and Arensky; then Leschetizky's "Venetian Barcarole," with a strange and gruesome explanation by the composer, and Moszkowski's "Caprice Espagnole."

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

They have an innovation in St. George's Church this Lent in a supplementary choir of little girls organized by Homer Norris, organist and choirmaster of the church, to assist in the Lenten services, They have proved very satisfactory, and the new choir will probably be continued later for other services. There are to be no radical changes in the regular choir. Miss Roth, the soprano, has been re-engaged, and Harry Burleigh, the popular bass of St. George's, is as much liked as ever. There has been special music at the evening services this Winter, and this month Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer" is to be given, and Gounod's "Gallia." On the evening of Palm Sunday there will be the annual performance of "The Crucifixion."

* * *

There will be practically a new gallery organ at St. George's next Fall, for the Vestry of the church has voted to have the old organ rebuilt during the coming Summer, and the music will have the improved quality given by a good instrument.

* * *

The South Church, Presbyterian, has re-engaged its soprano, Mrs. Gerrit Smith; contralto, Miss Marguerite Hall, and bass, Francis Rogers, and Dr. Franklin Lawson of St. Bartholomew's is to be the new solo tenor for the coming year.

* * *

Perry Averill, baritone soloist of St. Bartholomew's Church, leaves in May to take a position at the Memorial Presbyterian Church, in Brooklyn. The church of which Dr. Taylor is organist has been negotiating with Mr. Averill for some years and mutually satisfactory arrangements have finally been made.

* * *

In historic old St. Paul's Chapel the daily Lenten services at 12:05 have commenced, the special musical service for Tuesday being continued with its seven hymns. This service, with its music by the congregation, Mr. Edmund Jacque, the organist, acting as conductor in front of the congregation, is increasing in popularity. There was a congregation of nearly 200 present at last Tuesday's service. The congregation is composed largely of men, frequently including clergymen from different places who are interested to see how the service, which is unique, is conducted. There is hymn singing, but less of it at the other services.

* * *

At the Madison Square Presbyterian Church last Sunday the choir and new chorus, 30 voices in all, began their work with a good congregation despite the unfavorable weather. Prof. Parkhurst, organist and musical director, begins with this chorus preparations for more elaborate music in the new church, which the large new organ will aid.

The programme to be given at the church to-day with the chorus will be:

Organ prelude, gavotte	Gluck
Anthem, "Source of All Light"	Hauptmann
Choir hymn, "Rest of the Weary"	Parkhurst
Offertory; chorus, "Sing of the Blessed Home"	Weber
8 P. M.
Organ prelude, andante from fifth symphony	Beethoven
Chorus "Dona Nobis"	Haydn
Choir hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee" (Harmonized for double chorus.)
103d Psalm	Parkhurst
"Lo! 'Tis Night"	Beethoven
"O Thou Who Canst Not Slumber"	Mendelssohn

A feature of the evening service will be the rendering of the One Hundred and Third Hymn by choir and congregation antiphonally.

* * *

All Souls' Church, Unitarian, is to have a new tenor in Cecil James, from the First Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn. Mr. James takes the place of Kelley Cole.

* * *

At the Madison Avenue Methodist Church Charles B. Hawley, who was for a number of years the organist of the Broadway Tabernacle, where Walter C. Gale is now in charge of the music, is to take the place of Victor Harris as organist. Glenn Hall, the tenor of the church, is resigning to go abroad, and it is rumored that Mr. Cole of All Soul's Church will take his place.

* * *

George A. Flemming, who has been for the last eight years at the Central Presbyterian Church, Broadway and Fifty-seventh Street, is leaving to go to the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, of which the Rev. Dr. Kittridge is pastor.

* * *

Mrs. Corinne Rider Kelsey has resigned from her position as soprano in the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, to devote herself to concert work.

* * *

At the Church of the Divine Paternity, Mrs. Estelle Harris, soprano; Miss Cornelia Marvin, contralto, and Albert Quesnel, tenor, have been re-engaged and, with Gwilym Miles, will do the quartet work of the church the coming year. Whatever changes are made in the chorus of the church take place in the Fall—October or November.

* * *

J. Warren Andrews, organist and choir director of the Church of the Divine Paternity, began his series of Lenten recitals last Thursday. Miss Eva Emmet Wyoff, soprano, well known in Chicago, will be the soprano for the recital on Thursday this week at 4 o'clock, and Tom Daniel, bass. Haydn's "Creation" will be given at the church this evening by the regular quartet and chorus.

* * *

The Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, is to have a new soprano soloist in Miss Tudor, who has been singing in Orange, N. J.

* * *

Mrs. Josephine Percy, the soprano soloist of All Souls' Church, and Kelley Cole, tenor, of the same church, are to give a recital at Waterbury on Tuesday of this week, with Mrs. Cole accompanist.

* * *

Dr. F. S. Palmer, organist of All Saints' Church, (Madison Avenue and 129th Street,) begins this evening in the church at 8 o'clock a series of musical recitals. He will be assisted by Miss Martina Johnstone, violin, and by Miss Clara Smith, soprano. Organ numbers:

Grand prelude and fugue in G minor	Bach
Suite gothique	Boellman
Aria	Dethier
Pastorale	Guilmont
Berceuse	F. S. Palmer
Offertory on "Stabat Mater"	Marty
Toccata	Dubois

Miss Johnstone will play Thome's "Andante Religioso" and Handel's "Largo," and Miss Smith will sing the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," with violin obligato.

* * *

The Musical Art Society of Jersey City, of which Louis Dressler, organist of All Souls' Church, is the conductor, gave a big performance of "The Geisha" the other day, a big thing for amateurs, and with great success and crowded houses for three performances.

* * *

Three organ recitals will be given at St. Bartholomew's, Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, Leo Stokovski, organist, assisted by the choir on Wednesdays, the 14th, 28th, and April 11, at 8:30. The more serious music of such composers as Wagner, Tschaikowsky, and Bach will give a semi-penitential note to the recitals. The "Vorspiel" of "Parsifal" and "Symphony Pathetique" or Tschaikowsky will be among the numbers, and at the final recital, Wednesday, in Holy Week, the choir will sing Stainer's "Crucifixion."

* * *

The harp will be introduced again in the music of St. Bartholomew's this morning, and will assist the organ at all the regular services hereafter, as has been the custom in the church until the last year or so. Schutze, the harpist of the Opera House, will have charge of this part of the music. Handel's "Largo" will be the organ prelude for the morning service, the Introit will be old English, Boyce's "Blessing and Glory and Wisdom," sung by chorus and quartet without accompaniment. The offertory anthem by Stainer, "God so loved the world," will be sung in the same way. The prelude for the evening service at 4 o'clock will be from Brahms's requiem, "Behold all flesh is as grass." The anthem for the afternoon will be "Lo! ev'ry one that thirsteth," baritone solo by Perry Averill and chorus. The offertory anthem will be Palestrina's "Come, let us worship," sung unaccompanied.

The musical programme of the church makes its appearance to-day in a cover of heavily glazed paper bearing the name of the church, the month for which the programme is written, and a figure of St. Bartholomew in the centre, with appropriate decorations in conventional designs.

* * *

Frederick Wheeler, baritone soloist of the Church of the Divine Paternity, on the 1st of May, when Gwilym Miles returns to his old position in the church, will go to St. Bartholomew's.

* * *

The musical evening service at Grace Church, with its hearty congregational singing, will be continued during Lent, the hymns being appropriate for the season.

* * *

The boy choir at the Church of the Incarnation, Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street, this Lent will sing daily except Mondays at the weekday services at 5 o'clock. This afternoon Mr. Hedden is to have repeated by request the soprano solo, "Thou, O Lord, Art My Protector," by Saint-Saëns, given at the musical service last Sunday.

CROTCHETS.

Miss Zudie Harris, a young composer-pianist, who has returned to this country after six years of study, recently made her American début at Louisville with the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch. She played on this occasion her own concerto. This composition was finished early in 1905, and was first played by the composer under the conductorship of Pierre Monteux. During the coming season the work will be played by Miss Harris in this country, with leading orchestras, while a recital tour is also being arranged under the direction of Loudon G. Charlton. She will devote the next season to concerts, after which she plans to return to Europe.

The Serious Side of Art in Burlesque

⁂

Marie Dressler in "The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West"—The Latest College Play.

QUOTED recently in a discussion upon the art of burlesque, Marie Dressler was credited with the following observations:

"The better part of me is the serious part. The songs I love and the songs I sing when I am alone are serious, and I sing them an octave lower than they are written. You can't have comedy without a soul. If I excel in burlesque, which I think is a legitimate form of comedy and not mere clowning, it's because there are dramatic power and a certain amount of soul behind my work. I have a great deal of soul, and I ought to know, for I pay the penalty for it. I am never in the middle way of emotions; I am either sad or happy—sore or glad. If I weren't an emotional extremist I wouldn't act in burlesque, for burlesque consists in speaking a serious line in precisely the manner it ought to be spoken and then suddenly wrenching yourself away from it and adding the unexpected touch that produces laughter. But you must not cheapen or demean the line itself; the laughter you create must be in the touches that have nothing to do with the line. I used to recite a poem that I loved. It began this way:

"'Twas night; the evening shadows gathered 'round
And hushed my soul with thoughts of love."

"Now, I always put as much tenderness and reverie into these words as I possibly could. But when the time came to make the people laugh I just passed my hand across my face in an uncouth sort of gesture and the whole absurdity of a healthy-looking person of 200 pounds mooning around in the twilight with her thoughts of love seemed to strike the audience sufficiently hard. But in speaking the poet's words I declare I hadn't used an inflection that wasn't absolutely legitimate. It's by the unforced touches that you get at the spirit of true burlesque or of true comedy, either, for that matter. And when you force comedy—good night. Comedy can't be forced."

Such expressions coming from a woman whose whole apparent object in life is to make people laugh will sound, to most persons, a good deal like the nonsense indulged in on frequent occasions by the overzealous press agent. But whether the words quoted are exactly as they were spoken by Miss Dressler, or whether they are the coinage of a graceful writer able to give fluency to the usually bald and halting utterance of players, they have the merit of being in perfect harmony with our own impressions after a more or less extended and careful consideration of the work of this artiste. For Miss Dressler, in her own big, broad, and, occasionally, somewhat too coarse way, is an artiste of very exceptional capacity.

This fact has never been more clearly indicated than in the burlesque which engages her talents at Weber's Theatre. "The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West" is not, as burlesques go, the very best of its kind. But, whatever its merits and demerits, it is interesting because it has provided Miss Dressler with an excellent opportunity to demonstrate that she is the possessor of a comic expression not wholly dependent upon the grotesque facial, vocal, and physical contortion. There is much of this exaggerated method in Miss Dressler's playing of the Girl who owns the Polka ice cream saloon, but that which is best in her performance results from playing which is removed by a very narrow margin from the precincts of genuinely serious expression. Marie Dressler is one of those actresses—fortunate or unfortunate as their individual ambitions must determine—to whom Nature has denied the physical equipment necessary for those who would impress themselves as being serious. Hers is a comedy figure, a comedy face. She has been built on a large scale, and her methods of acting have generally responded to the plan of her personal appearance. It is all the more surprising, therefore, to find her in this new burlesque holding the natural propensities in check for the sake of a more legitimate and, as it happens, a more admirable result.

"The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West," like all of the Weber burlesques, has been built largely along rough-and-tumble lines. Much of its alleged humor is of the slap-stick kind, a fact which makes Miss Dressler's restraint all the more admirable. And it is an astonishing fact that in several of the longer speeches where the lines are most ridiculous, written, in fact, only to get laughs, the seeming sincerity of her utterance and the apparent genuineness of her emotion create impressive silence instead of the guffaw which is always ready on the lips of patrons of such entertainments, and which responds as quickly to the whack of a stuffed club or an awkward stage fall as to the more delicate bit of stage humor. The ability to hold the attention of her audiences by her more serious utterance and by-play until she is ready to add the unexpected touch that produces laughter indicates something more of resourcefulness on Miss Dressler's part than the mere possession of a sense of humor.

Fay Templeton is to-day the finest burlesque artiste on the American stage, and her imitative faculty is in a class by itself. When she sets out to mimic another actress's peculiarities she seldom fails to create exactly the illusion that she is seeking to create. In comedy she generally has the virtue of restraint which Miss Dressler frequently lacks, and she is never vulgar, which Miss Dressler, unfortunately, is at times. But in her successive and successful imitations Miss Templeton has always been at her best when she was, to quote the popular phrase, doing something comic. When she endeavors to imitate a woman like Mrs. Carter, for example, she will give an absolutely faithful reproduction of that actress's manner and vocal tricks, but her emotional phases do not ring true enough even for burlesque.

As Marie Dressler insists, there must be in some period of the exposition a seeming sincerity to point the way to laughter. And in this one respect, at least, Marie Dressler has the advantage over her rival in the field, a fact which has never been more positively demonstrated than in the present burlesque. She may not sound the exact notes of Blanche Bates's voice at all times, but she reproduces capitally the general effect of the Girl's slow, drawling, saccharine utterance, and her ability at burlesque is also splendidly expressed in the manner in which the walk and gesture of the Belasco star are reproduced. Here there is broadness in the exaggeration which is irresistibly and continuously funny.

Edward J. Connelly's take-off of Frank Keenan's performance of the Sheriff in the Belasco play is a fit companion picture for Miss Dressler's Girl. His make-up and dress are so nearly like the original that the two men might exchange places and the general eye would hardly notice a substitution. Mr. Connelly succeeds likewise in imitating the serious actor's cold, hard, acrid voice almost to perfection.

No one else in the burlesque amounts to much. Mr. Weber is especially disappointing in a rôle the colorful original of which would seem to have offered good material for burlesque. This character, Rash Tawkins, as he is called in the burlesque, has an underlying idea which is funny, but nothing has been built upon it. Rash is a disappointed bad man, whose sole ambition in life is to keep his mother happy in the thought that he is a "holy terror" out West. But he is the mildest desperado that ever pulled a gun, and everybody abuses him. The promise of fun contained in his first whining protest—"that's no way to treat a Holy Terror"—(he has just been kicked and relieved of his shooting-irons) is not fulfilled in his later scenes.

The chief difficulty with all these burlesques appears to be a fear on the part of authors, actors and producers that American audiences lack a sense of humor. Why for instance is it necesssary to bring out the printed label "atmosphere" when the cowboys (cow-gentlemen, according to Mr. Smith's text) build the two little sand heaps on the stage? The laugh comes before the placards are produced, which ought to be indication enough that our audiences do not need a guide-book and a map to enable them to see a joke. It is just such overelaboration as this that is the ruination of much theatrical comedy of an even more pretentious sort, and though it does not especially matter in such a case as this, it serves to throw an interesting sidelight on a very common general fault.

"Brown of Harvard" will not find a place in literature and it is not likely to be the subject of lectures at the University which it is intended to glorify, but it reflects rather more credit than discredit upon its author, Rida Johnson Young, when one reflects upon the scarcity of even fairly decent successful first efforts at playwriting.

Miss Johnson's play has one great fault and one chief virtue. Its fault is conventionality of theme leading to equal conventionality of treatment; its merit is directness of handling. It can hardly be imagined that Miss Young any less than her critics failed to realize that her story was commonplace and familiar, and she must have known also that its "big scene" was so nearly like some of its very immediate predecessors that any claim at originality would be at once discounted in the facts. But she has taken the well-worn material and handled it with more theatrical skill than one ordinarily expects from the novice.

Her characters, like her situations, are of the types familiar in all college plays, but though they pass through a series of stereotyped experiences in the course of the four acts, they are natural and, generally, agreeable.

Somewhat too much emphasis has been placed upon the fact that Miss Young allows a disagreeable incident to besmirch the otherwise pure white page of her college chronicle, and it has been very kindly pointed out that in order to redeem the play this ought to be expunged. But one wonders what would become of Miss Johnson's play if this advice were acted upon. If the unfortunate episode of Marion Thorne were omitted what would remain in the way of plot? It is all well enough to offer advice to young playwrights—and old ones, too, for that matter—but when a suggestion involves the elimination of the one incident upon which a whole play structure is founded there is reasonable justification for difference of opinion.

Any discussion, then, of the value of this incident in reality involves the play as a whole, and one must admit that the public would have been a little the poorer for its entire omission. For though "Brown of Harvard" is not an affair of much importance, it provides a couple of hours of very agreeable entertainment. Its author has displayed no unusual knowledge of the life that prevails in our great seats of learning, but she has been just about as successful in reflecting that life as her masculine predecessors in the field. No one would want to seriously assert that George Ade has translated university life to the stage, though "The College Widow," to be sure, scintillated wit and satire that place it a full lift higher than any play of its particular class before or since.

The acting of "Brown of Harvard" is in no way remarkable, chiefly because there is nothing in situation or character to call forth any very brilliant exhibition of talent. But the little piece is handled generally with sympathy and understanding. The selection of players has been judicious, and as a result a general atmosphere of buoyant youth is admirably maintained. Mr. Woodruff is wholly agreeable throughout and sufficiently passionate in his more heroic moments, while Walter Thomas, Theodore Friebus, William Rosell, and especially Howard Esterbrooke, fill in the minor figures to advantage. Laura Hope Crews has little to do, but does that little well, and Kate Lester, Catherine Calhoun, and Ethel Martin, with equally slight opportunities, succeed in adding some value to a generally competent cast.

AN ERA OF ACTORS.

H. B. Irving Lectures on Eighteenth Century Drama.

IN a lecture on the eighteenth century drama, delivered at the Royal Institution, H. B. Irving noted—in comparing the last three centuries, the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth—that "the first was the century of great drama, the greatest drama the world has ever known; the second a century in which the interest shifts from the drama to its exponents, the players; the third—our own—a century which will be noteworthy for the extraordinary advance made in the presentation of plays on the stage, the realization of the utmost that the theatre can do in the way of giving to the work of the dramatist a worthy setting, a century in which painting, music, history, and archaeology have all been pressed into the service of the theatre in a degree never thought or dreamed of by our forefathers."

Naturally, Mr. Irving confessed himself drawn to the study of the eighteenth century as above all things "the actor's century," and his lecture was for the most part an uncontentious tribute to the great actors of the time—Garrick, Quin, Betterton, Wilkes, Barton, Booth, Peg Woffington, and Mrs. Oldfield, and not least the actor-manager poet-laureate, Colley Cibber, who, contended Mr. Irving, "as a theatrical manager, with all his faults, extorts an admiration and respect."

⁂

As to the causes of the comparative greatness of the eighteenth century actors Mr. Irving emphasized particularly "the absence of long runs—the bane, from the actor's point of view, of our modern stage." "This," said Mr. Irving, "enabled the eighteenth century actor to cultivate and exhibit his versatility, and enabled him to husband his strength and maintain his freshness and escape the monotony that it is difficult to avoid under the conditions of the present-day theatre."

Mr. Irving went on to describe the players whose names are household words, while the stilted and inanimate tragedies and ephemeral comedies in which they appeared are utterly forgotten.

As regards the great eighteenth century actors as a body, Mr. Irving claimed for nearly all of them that they were of gentle birth, men of education and social acceptance. Wilkes, he recalled, was the grandson of a Judge, Booth the son of a country gentleman, Mrs. Oldfield the daughter of a Captain in the army, Quin the son of a barrister and the friend of Bishops. None the less, Mr. Irving added, the private lives and personalities of the players were naturally a good deal traduced at a time when personal scandal to a great extent took the place of serious criticism, which did not arrive till Leigh Hunt's time.

THIS WEEK'S OFFERINGS

LAWRANCE D'ORSAY IN "THE EMBASSY BALL," a comedy by Augustus Thomas, at Daly's Theatre, to-morrow evening,

FRANCIS WILSON IN "THE MOUNTAIN CLIMBER,"
a farce by C. Kraatz and M. Neal, at the Criterion Theatre, Tuesday evening.

LINA ABARBANELL IN "PAGAGENE," a farce by R. Kneisel, at the Irving Place Theatre, Wednesday evening.

TO-MORROW evening at Daly's Theatre Daniel Frohman will present Lawrance D'Orsay in a new comedy by Augustus Thomas, entitled "The Embassy Ball." This is Mr. D'Orsay's first appearance in New York since he was seen here in "The Earl of Pawtucket," by the same author who has written his new play.

In "The Embassy Ball" the scenes are laid in Washington, D. C. The necessary complications have been started in Paris a year previous, when Capt. Hawardon-Kellie, then an attaché of the British Embassy in that city, is attracted by the distress of a young American lady who has been arrested for riding a bicycle without the necessary French license. He aids her by going to the City Hall and signs what he supposes to be a bicycle permit, but which a careless official has made out on a marriage contract. The Captain is transferred to Washington, and the Paris document turns up in this country, causing many complications. Mr. D'Orsay, as the Captain, plays the part of a slow-witted Englishman, failing at all times to comprehend American ways. In his new play Mr. D'Orsay will be supported by a cast including George Clarke, Miriam Nesbitt, Forrest Robinson, Marian Barney, Ida Darling, Walter Hitchcock, Rose Hubbard, and Harold Heaton.

⁂

Francis Wilson begins his annual New York engagement at the Criterion Theatre on Tuesday evening, when he will be seen for the first time here in the new three-act farce "The Mountain Climber," written by the authors of "Are You a Mason?"

The story of the play is as follows: Montague Sibsey, to cover certain absences in Paris, where he has posed as a theatrical manager, wrote long and beautiful letters to his wife about the Alps and the dangers he had heroically faced. The description Mr. Montague Sibsey had copied from a book written by Arthur Lydbook. But on his fortieth birthday Sibsey means to turn over a new leaf; there will be no more Alpine climbing in Paris.

Unfortunately, his adoring wife has decided to fête him as a hero. She has had his letters published; the local Alpine Club of Streatham is sending a deputation. Sibsey's Swiss guides are being brought over, and the editor of a paper devoted to Alpine climbing comes to interview him. As the upshot Mr. Montague Sibsey finds himself bound to conquer a particularly inaccessible peak, and the whole family of his admiring wife and his step-daughters will see him do it. The rest of the play may be imagined from this opening. Everything goes wrong; he even meets the man whose book he had plagiarized. The wily old guide helps him out of his dilemma by getting a young mountaineer to change clothes as soon as the party have turned a corner and are out of sight for a moment, and Sibsey creeps back to the chalet. All would have been well had not an accident happened to his eldest step-daughter, and in his anxiety to see what is the matter, he loses his hold on the balcony and is detected by the young men of the party. The women arrive in London, whither he has preceded them to hide from his exposure, still believing in his heroism. He manages to bribe the young men, who are suitors for his step-daughters' hands, but the Swiss guides have followed him to London to obtain their rewards, which Mrs. Sibsey had forgotten to leave as directed by her husband.

The cast includes May Robson, Angela Keir, Edith Barker, Joseph Allen, and George Spencer.

⁂

At the Irving Place Theatre "Maskerade" will be presented to-morrow and Tuesday evenings. Wednesday night Lina Abarbanell will be seen as Bertha in R. Kneisel's farce, entitled "Papagene." Thursday evening Pierre Veber's four-act farce, "Lutti," will be given and continued throughout the week.

The Noble Red Man as a Stage Figure

It Is Not So Easy to Be an Indian Now as It Was in Olden Days---Creating an Atmosphere---Some Amusing Mishaps.

Edwin Arden as Niatawa.

"THE STAGE INDIAN," said Mark Twain some years ago, "was an original aborigine belonging to an ancient and extinct tribe that never existed."

One can imagine the humorist's memory running back, as he said it, to poke fun among the old playbills of half a century since, when "Poor Lo" trod the boards with a freedom that a few playgoers of to-day still recall.

Stripped of his boasted realism, the stage savage of our own day is not so new as he thinks he is. To be sure, he makes the old bow-and-tomahawk brave look silly and romantic, but the latter was dearly beloved in his day and generation and his name was legion.

⁂

They were funny enough, those redskins of the older theatre, who could one and all trace a clear, fair lineage to the pages of James Fenimore Cooper. Edwin Forrest himself, when he first played "Metamora, the Last of the Wampanoags," the most tragic and popular of romantic stage sachems, played him in a mustache and goatee. The later daguerreotypes, however, seem to show that Forrest was at last brought to realize the propriety of giving his chieftain at least a clean shave. But with all its romantic extravagance Metamora was considered by some one of the actor's greatest parts, and that in spite of the fact that he disliked it and seemed to be singularly prone to run into mishaps whenever he played it.

Joseph Jefferson, in his autobiography, describes a characteristic contretemps that befell the irritable Forrest one night toward the end of the piece.

Things had gone wrong throughout the evening and Mr. Forrest was in the last stages of exasperation. "A funeral pile of burning fagots was brought on at which some pale face was to be sacrificed. The two Indians in charge of this mysterious-looking article set it down so unsteadily that a large sponge saturated with flaming alcohol tumbled off and rolled down the stage, leaving a track of fire in its wake. 'Put it out,' said Forrest, 'put it out!' Whereupon the two Indians went down on their knees and began to blow alternately in a see-saw way, singeing each other's eyebrows at every puff. The audience could not stand this comical picture and began to break forth in laughter. 'Let the theatre burn,' roared Forrest.

⁂

"At last one tall Indian, supposed to be second in command, majestically waved off the two who were blowing and stamped his foot with force and dignity upon the flaming sponge, at which a perfect fountain of burning alcohol spouted up his leather legs. He caught fire, tried to put himself out, rubbing and jumping about frantically, and at last danced off the stage in the most comical agony. Forrest made a furious exit, the curtain was dropped, and the public in perfect good nature dispersed. I mingled with the crowd as it went forth," concludes Mr. Jefferson, "and I never saw the faces of an audience at the end of a five-act comedy wreathed in such smiles."

But, as Laurence Hutton points out in his "Curiosities of the American Stage," "Metamora" was far from the first of its kind. Curiously enough, the first Indian play in America seems to have been an operatic spectacle entitled "Tammany," written by Anne Kemble, a sister of John Kemble, and Mrs. Siddons. The piece was dedicated to and produced under the auspices of the Tammany Society of New York at the John Street Theatre toward the end of the eighteenth century; but even Columbus and St. Tammany in person, disporting themselves among stiff canvas trees and wigwams that were the most realistic settings the American stage had as yet seen, failed to make the piece a success.

A long line of "Pocahontases" led by "The Indian Princess," trailed behind the footlights of the old days. The subject was immensely popular, and the best actors of the day cheerfully stained their faces and arms, put on battered feather bonnets, and stalked about in blankets as stern Powhatans, while Indian maidens in dainty buckskins saved innumerable sturdy John Smiths. Charlotte Cushman, who was at that time given to playing male parts, appeared many times as "Rolfe" in Robert Dale Owen's version of the popular theme.

The success of "Metamora," for which Forrest is said to have paid the author, John Augustus Stone, $500, started a war dance of Oroloosas, Outalassies, Pawnee Chiefs, Hiawathas, and Wissahickons, until at last a reaction set in, and toward the middle of the century James Rees, himself a dramatist, author of "Charlotte Temple" and "Washington at Valley Forge," wrote that the Indian drama "had of late become a perfect nuisance." Mr. Hutton remarks that "a full list of the Indian plays more or less successful, known in other days and now quite forgotten, would be one of the curiosities of American dramatic literature."

To be a stage Indian in those days required no study or exertion. All you had to do was to stain your face, put on the regulation togs, learn to make a war whoop by patting your mouth with your hand as you yelled, and peer stealthily under your palm from around trees and rocks. For the rest you talked sublime, primitive sentiments, in extra good and usually poetic English, and stood about in tragic statuesque attitudes with your blanket falling gracefully over one arm and your hand hooked carelessly into your belt near your tomahawk. This was the accepted noble savage of the early Indian drama. Bad Indians crept around with knives and extra streaks of red paint on their noses, talking a gibberish that sounded aboriginally devilish.

The Pocahontas idea hung on bravely. You could always be sure some gentle, fawnlike Indian maiden would be on hand to stop all bullets, knives, or tomahawks aimed at the hero—usually at the expense of her life. And the curtain was fond of going down on her aged chieftain father sitting in front of his lonely wigwam and eying the landscape with primitive North American gloom.

⁂

Most of these theatrical redskins carried bows and arrows, which often made them ridiculous trouble. It is on record that during a performance of "Metamora" when a line of young braves in Indian file crossed the stage at a swift trot, the leader tripped on his bow, and the others piled over him like dominoes until two or three spilled over the footlights into the orchestra. This kind of thing was what particularly enraged Mr. Forrest.

After a while, however, people found a new entertainment in the frontier drama, with its more realistic rough-and-tumble hunters and backwoodsmen. One doesn't have to be so very old to remember "The Kentuckian" or Frank Mayo's "Davy Crockett." But even these romantic scouts were forgotten when Buffalo Bill, in the border plays that preceded the Wild West Show, put real cowboys and real Indians into his pieces. Audiences began to demand the genuine if somewhat soiled article, and to laugh at the old heroic braves. These border plays were usually built around a rousing night attack by a band of Indians on a body of United States troops. Buffalo Bill's real Indians never spoke a syllable beyond their native war whoop. When an Indian character had to say something the part was played by a white actor. But these pieces conveyed a yelling, dusty, up-to-date realism that made the Metamoras look stiff and pictorial.

Then along came John Brougham with one of the funniest burlesques ever written in English. His "Original Aboriginal Erratic, Operatic, Semi-Civilized, and Demi-Savage Extravaganza of Pocahontas" has left echoes of laughter and a trail of good stories that reach down to the present day. Its extravagant travesty gives one an idea of what the older Indian drama must have been like. The piece was presented for the first time at the Lyceum Theatre on Christmas Eve, under the management of the elder Wallack.

THEODORE ROBERTS as Tabywana in "The Squaw Man"

The whole thing is a fast and furious fusillade of atrocious puns and conceits. The scene is laid in Raleigh Avenue, Virginia, which thoroughfare is nothing more nor less than an aimless path through the primeval forest—as one of the characters remarks:

"An avenue
The strangest that I ever knew."

Mr. Hutton cites similar lines.

Captain John Smith sings of the royal Indian Court:

"I visited his Majesty's abode,
A portly savage, plump and pigeon-toed;
Like Metamora, both in feet and feature,
I never met-a-mor-amusing creature."

Mr. Brougham played "Pow-Hat-An I., King of the Tuscaroras, a Crotchety Monarch, in fact, a Semi-Brave," with a dense hedge of feathers towering above his brow and a club as thick as a lamppost. He benignly thanks his people at the end of the opening song, to the air of "Hoky-poky-winky-wum":

"Well, roared indeed, my jolly Tuscaroras;
Most loyal corps, your King encores your chorus."

Later he cries:

"Sergeant at Arms, say, what alarms the crowd; Loud noise annoys us; why is it allowed?"

Some one inquires of the monarch whether in the word "lie" he uses the vowel "I" or "y." To which he replies:

"Y, Sir, or I, Sir, search the vowels through,
And find the one most consonant to you."

The chieftain apostrophizes to tobacco:

"While other joys one sense alone can measure,
This to all senses gives ecstatic pleasure.
You feel the radiance of the glowing bowl,
Hear the soft murmurs of the kindling coal,
Smell the sweet fragrance of the honey-dew,
Taste its strong pungency the palate through,
See the blue cloudlets circling to the dome,
Imprisoned skies up-floating to their home—
I like a dudeen myself!"

The very mishaps of the piece seemed to turn themselves into lucky chances. Mr. Jefferson used to love to tell a famous tale of success snatched from defeat in an incident that happened during the first weeks of the piece.

Miss Hodson, the original Pocahontas, suddenly departed one night, bag and baggage, without so much as a whisper of notification. "No word of this proceeding reached the theatre until a few minutes before the curtain was to rise on the performance. Of course for some minutes there was a dead-lock. No one could suggest the faintest remedy, and Brougham was nonplused. At last he went in front of the curtain and explained the situation. He confessed he was at his wits' end—a long distance for him to travel—and really did not know what to do unless the audience felt disposed to accept the burlesque of Pocahontas with the gentle savage omitted. He said there was an old theatrical anecdote setting forth that on one occasion the character of Hamlet had been so wretchedly acted that on its next representation that part had been omitted by particular request. "Now," said Brougham, "if 'Hamlet' can be acted without the hero, why may not 'Pocahontas' be played without the heroine? You all know that 'Pocahontas' is a much finer play than 'Hamlet'; if you do not, I do, for I wrote it myself. Will you permit us to make the experiment?"

⁂

The cries of "Certainly; go on," were so encouraging that Brougham retired amid applause, and the curtain was rung up. The burlesque proceeded admirably until the music was played for the entrance of the absent squaw. The audience wondered what Brougham could possibly do. He was acting the father, Pow-Hat-An, and was on the stage awaiting the approach of his daughter. He immediately addressed the audience somewhat in the following words:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: That is the sweet strain which is supposed to bring Pocahontas on the stage. You are aware that she is at present in Baltimore, and the law of the land will not permit a Christian, much less a savage, to be in two places at once. You can yourselves vouch for the alibi; but if she were here she would say—" and here assuming the look and tones of the absentee, Brougham spoke her part first, then assumed his own character, and so kept up the dialogue. The audience, convulsed with laughter at the admirable imitation, acknowledged by their applause that Brougham had outdone himself through the wit with which he had mastered the difficulty.

⁂

Nowadays when the Indian finds his way into plays mainly in the guise of "atmosphere" no effort is spared to make him as genuine as may be. Theodore Roberts spends fifty minutes on his make-up as Tabywana in "The Squaw Man." Any one who has watched Mr. Roberts as he carefully molds each high Indian cheekbone from a big lump of brown putty slapped firmly on the cheek, neatly sculpturing his nose from the same material, delicately blending the edges into the flesh, and finally working the whole thing down into a rich bronze tint, will understand the modern search for realistic detail. Tabywana's face is so heavy an affair that it takes a palette knife and ten minutes' work to dispose of him after the performance.

"But the result pays," says Mr. Roberts, "because this finished detail is exactly what audiences are sure to look for these days. Why, when I first tried this make-up I even used to draw my eyes into just the right slanting narrowness by pasting bits of gauze back of my temples. I went further and experimented with false lips. It was extremely uncomfortable, however, and I found the effect hardly paid for the trouble. Nothing is too much to do for make-up, but there is also nothing in which you can so easily do too much.

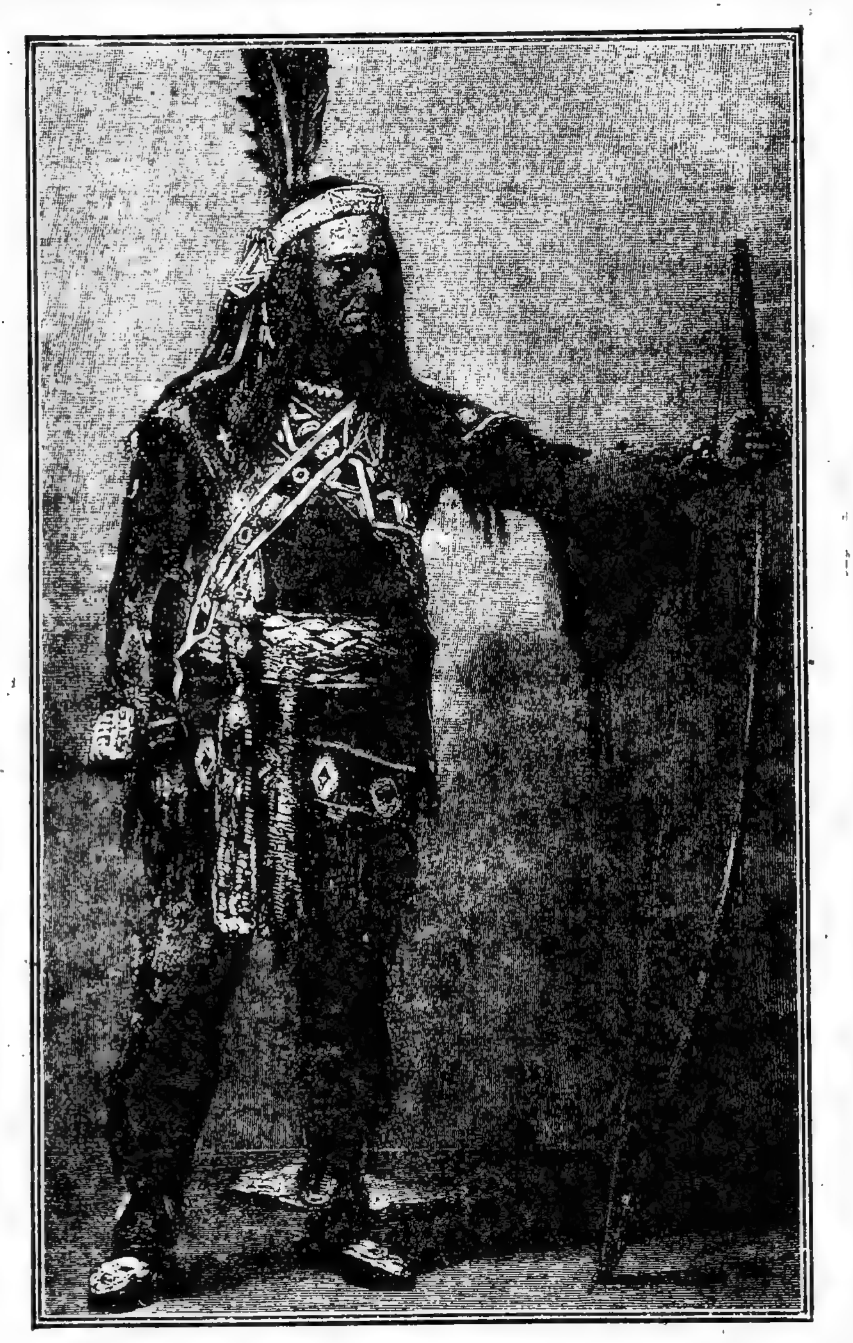
"When I studied my Indian for 'The Girl I Left Behind Me,' of which Tabywana is an elaboration, I was given a bundle of photographs from a Sioux reservation. I picked out one that struck me as practicable and copied it pretty closely. A year later, while I was still playing the part, I got a letter from a man who said he had been for eleven years interpreter to Sitting Bull. He had just seen the piece and intimated that he had been rather uncannily struck by my resemblance to one of Sitting Bull's old warriors named Spotted Tail, who, while he lived, had been my correspondent's particular friend. Of course I was not surprised on turning over the pictures I had used to find the name of Spotted Tail on my special model.

"The same principle holds true when you come to lines. In the days of 'The Girl I Left Behind Me' and 'Arizona' a picturesque gibberish that sounded like Indian talk was more than enough to meet all requirements. Not so to-day. This is the first time an Indian character has ever been put on the stage speaking his native language and supported by an interpreter. I am not likely to forget the endless hours I spent digging Indian words out of Baco White, who is no more communicative than the rest of his race, nor the time it took me to spell them out phonetically and memorize them afterward. You get many of your cherished notions of Indians sadly upset when you come to study them at first hand. I remember I worked a whole forenoon on Baco trying to get hold of the word for 'medicine man,' and when finally with the aid of pantomimic suggestion of herbs, sleight of hand, and magic, I made him understand, I found his tribe never had any such thing!

"I believe the Indian on the stage is most effective when used with white people for purposes of contrast, but even then you can't do him in the easy, war-paint-and-feather get-up of the old days. There was a time when Ristori dared to play Lady Macbeth in hoop-skirts, but the public has grown to be less romantic and decidedly more sensitive to genuine detail."

After finding himself the usual dash of local color on several New York stages this season, and having been mildly honored with a burlesque, the Indian has now a play all his own. The author of "The Redskin" claims he is the first dramatist who has ventured to put on a piece in which every character is a North American Indian. The De Mille Brothers, however, are said to have in readiness another all-Indian play.

Tyrone Power as Lonawonda in "The Redskin."



Edwin Forrest as Metamora.

Lashota (Bijou Fernandez) and Niatawa in "The Redskin."

J. M. BARRIE'S NEXT WORK.

JAMES MATTHEW BARRIE, English playwright of the early twentieth century, announces that his new comedy, which is to be given for the first time on any stage in London some time in April, is, like "Little Mary," intended "especially for English audiences." Whence it is probably safe to predict that it will be satirical. Whether or not in saying "English" rather than "British" audiences, Mr. Barrie means to let in America, one may feel fairly sure that the piece will prove at least palatable in this country.

"We owe much to all the English dramatists," wrote William Dean Howells recently, "but Mr. Barrie seems likely to make us most deeply his debtor, especially since Mr. Gilbert, his only rival in phantasy, fantasies no more. Even Mr. Gilbert at his best had not his sweetness; and that is so nearly all his own that I can think of but one other dramatist to be named with him for it, and I am rather glad that this was an American, the late James A. Herne."

⁂

MARIE TEMPEST'S NEW ROLE.

"ALL-OF-A-SUDDEN-PEGGY," in which Marie Tempest appeared this past week in London, with a light Irish brogue, a scene in a man's rooms, where she didn't in the least belong, and other similar marks of a sprightly young woman, is the play in which Fay Davis was to have been starred in this country some time this year. The [illegible] new heroine will have to act fully up to her name if she is to be seen on these shores before another season.

⁂

TWO PLAYS BY HEWLETT.

TWO plays by Maurice Hewlett were given at a matinée last Tuesday in London. The shorter was a pastoral play with music, called "Pan and the Young Shepherd." The other, "The Youngest of the Angels," is based upon an episode in "The Fool Errant."

⁂

TO BAR HER FRIENDS.

FLORENCE WARDEN, author of a new comedy, "Parlez vous Francais?" to be played for the first time in London this week, has evidently seen others suffer from the ill-timed and overzealous efforts of friends. Through a London daily she makes known that on the opening performance of the new piece theatrical managers, members of the press, and accredited members of the dramatic profession will be heartily welcomed, but no personal friends of the author are to be invited. She further expresses the hope that all those of the general public "who are interested in the stage and who appreciate the difficulties of a playwright outside a certain small circle in getting a hearing" will support her.

⁂

NOT THE ACTOR'S VIEWS.

DURING the excitement of the recent elections in England Beerbohm Tree, perhaps not without malice, put on Ibsen's political play, "An Enemy of the People," in which economic arguments are almost part of the scenery. During one performance at Her Majesty's a Liberal gallery gave way to its overtaxed feelings to such a degree that Mr. Tree had to come before the curtain and explain that Ibsen and not he personally must be held responsible for the diatribes against rampant democracy that leap from the tongue of Dr. Stockman.

⁂

BISHOP FRIENDLY TO PLAY.

THE Bishop of London has been saying a good deal of late about theatrical amusements. He professes himself a firm friend and patron of the drama even when it merely amuses.

"I have seen thousands of working people," says Dr. Ingraham, in Black and White, "dragged from the public house by the lighter kinds of plays. Its influence in the country districts is of the best. English villages, rich and poor, in many of the provinces, not only join in playing dramas, but even in writing them, making the scenery and costumes, and composing original music."

⁂

"THE WEDDING MARCH."

Story of M. Bataille's Comedy Produced by French Players in London.

THE French players in London have just been seen in M. Bataille's comedy, "La Marche Nuptiale." The story of which is thus described in The Pall Mall Gazette: Only four characters are of any moment, yet the cast numbers twenty-one. The four central characters are Grace and Claude, Suzanne and her husband, Roger. Grace and Claude, her music master, are in love. Grace's parents, by refusing their consent, put marriage out of the question. The lovers betake themselves to Paris, where they live almost in squalor. With a view to getting music pupils they call on Suzanne, an old school friend of Grace's and married to Roger, a well-to-do man of business. Suzanne is ready to help her old "chum," and so is Roger when he has had a good look at her. He takes Claude into his employ.

One day when Claude is away at the office Roger calls on Grace and makes her the usual proposals, which she rejects. A woman can love only one man, and the man she loves is Claude. On Claude's return she receives a shock. He confesses to her that he has embezzled 200 francs, and that the loss has been established. Grace becomes ill, and Roger has her to stay with him and his wife at their country house. Roger has overlooked Claude's misdeed, and Grace's every wish is forestalled. Roger renews his proposals, Grace reiterates her contention that no woman can care for more than one man. It is, however, pretty evident that the one man has come to be Roger. Suzanne asks Grace what she would do if Roger should fall in love with her. Grace reassures her,

HORSE SHOWS IN ORDINARY.

YOUR true lover of the horse does not have to wait until the Week of Weeks in November at the Garden to see a show of his beloved animals, nor does he or she have to content himself with following the round of open-air shows to get all the satisfaction his taste demands. To the knowing ones there are constant opportunities to see the best of the ribbon-winners at the auction sales of big stud-farms and private stables that are held so frequently in this city all through the Spring and Fall months. And the best of these horse shows in ordinary is that they don't require any expenditure of money to take them in.

Since most of these sales are held in the evening, and in stables so large that they afford room for hundreds of persons to look on at the game, they are almost invariably well attended. In fact, it would astonish most persons, who are not familiar with these spectacles, to see just how many fashionable men and women, to say nothing of the professional and stable contingents, will venture out on a stormy night to sit for two hours to watch a lot of prize-winning horses sold at auction.

As most of these sales rings are alike a description of one will serve to give a picture of all of them. Imagine a great riding hall, one hundred or more feet square, brilliantly illuminated with rows of incandescent electric lights fixed in the steel arches that support the curved roof. From this roof also hang half a dozen arc lights and great pots filled with growing palms and trailing vines. A gallery runs around three sides of this hall, this serving the double purpose of affording seats for the spectators and being a showroom for the carriage sales department of the stable. Above the gallery and around the four walls its painted surface is covered with large pictures in color, representing scenes on the race track and in the hunting field. Hung on the balcony railing are medallions of horses' heads, and between these are trophies of whiffletrees, guards' long horns, polo mallets and other "horsey" ornaments. Beneath the gallery the walls of the "ring" proper are almost covered with framed pictures representing famous prize winners, and such sporting scenes as horses are the principal figures in.

Outside the hall it may be raining and the night may be as dark as the night can be in a city's streets. But inside the sales stable there is nothing but life, light, and color. The ring itself, ankle-deep in tanbark, is crowded with a motley collection of men. There are millionaire horse owners rubbing topcoats or dress coats against the rough clothes of stablemen and cab drivers, or against the correct mackintosh livery of smart chauffeurs. There are all sorts and conditions of men brought together by one common passion, the love of a good horse. To judge by their talk one would never imagine that there was such a thing as a hot political campaign going on in the city, for the one and only thing that you overhear in their conversation is the unfailing topic of "horse."

There is no ring in the ordinary sense of that term. When a "hunter" is ridden into the hall, his rider being a young man in smart riding clothes, the spectators make way for the animal, and as he is put through his paces they form a human ring for him, with its circle just as clearly defined as if it was roped or fenced in. The same play is allowed a pair to a trap, and when a four-in-hand comes in there is some lively crowding back against the wall to make room for the four and the break to turn the corners in. Whenever the "ring" shows signs of crowding in the rider or driver or the stable attendants give the warning cry of "One side, please," which never fails of its effect.

The auctioneer and his clerk are perched in a boxed-in desk at one side of the ring, directly in front of the centre of the side gallery. This auctioneer differs from all other men of his class in town owing to the superlatively brilliant clothes and silk hat he wears. In no other auction room are such well-fitting clothes associated with the principal figure of the sale as these horse dealers wear. It is one of the conventions of his kind, apparently, to wear a huge boutonnière, for no one of them is ever seen without such an ornament on the night of a sale. Then, again, he really uses an ivory hammer to "knock down" the horses that are sold. It is a mallet of considerable size, and is quite as much in evidence as the gleaming "tile" of the man of prices.

The flower, and incidentally the chief display of color, of the sale, however, is to be seen in the gallery, which is invariably crowded with women and a smaller proportion of men. The feminine portion of the audience is made up of two types, the distinctively fashionable women of the "horsey" set and the women who are struggling to get into society and are always seen in places where it congregates if they can beg, borrow, or pay their way. To an outsider is would doubtless prove something of a surprise to hear the knowledge these women display of the horses that are shown in the ring. Their pedigrees, winning records, and values are discussed in the most knowing way in the world and the "stars" of the sales are always greeted with ripples of hand pats and murmurs of well-bred voices raised in approval of the animals' fine points.

In this gallery one can see a little touch that adds immensely to the picturesqueness of the spectacle. All around the walls there is a line of carriages of all kinds, and the seats of these traps are seized upon, early in the evening, by women as places of superior vantage from which to see what is going on down on the tanbark. It brings the atmosphere of an outdoor meet or show indoors, and as for the women themselves, they are apparently aware of the fact that they never look better than when they are on the box seat of a coach.

It often happens that one of these sales is held in a stable on Thirteenth Street, and as they are invariably fashionable functions, owing to the position of the men who own the horses, that tawdry thoroughfare takes on an unwonted air of brilliancy. It is crowded with smart broughams and opera 'buses, out of which appear brilliantly dressed women and men in evening dress who form a striking contrast to the ordinary denizens of a place best known for its cheap music halls of the lowest description.

Sometimes at one of these "horse shows" one is presented with some violent contrasts in the attire of the spectators. At a recent one those who know their New York and its people were amused to see a well-known young millionaire in the crowd wearing a shabby suit of blue serge, while a little way further along in the gallery the manager of the millionaire's stable was standing looking on, attired in a faultlessly fitting suit of evening clothes, with a boutonniere of his "owner's" colors in his buttonhole.

IF IMMIGRANTS WENT SOUTH.

A MEMBER of the Constitution League has figured out what sort of showing the people of Europe would make in the South if they all transferred their residence thither. The Constitution League is an organization formed to uphold the right of negroes to vote and to cut down the Congressional representation of the States where the black population is largely disfranchised. Immigration has been hailed by some as the solution of the "race problem." Here's the result figured out by the Constitution League's calculator:

"If all the people of Portugal moved to Missouri that State, with its present population, would not be as densely populated as Portugal is now. Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky could find room for all the people of the German Empire without being any more crowded than Germany is in 1906. The balance of the South could accommodate all the people of the Austro-Hungarian Empire without being more densely settled than Austria-Hungary. The South can take 240,000,000 people from Europe without crowding the negro out.

"Without coming on this side of the Mississippi, the South has room for about 130,000,000 people from Europe, and would then be not much more than half as thickly settled as Massachusetts is now. If Immigration Commissioner Watchorn should continue to receive a million immigrants annually at Ellis Island, and if half of these should go south, he would be kept busy for the next 500 years filling up Dixie, and even then the negro would find plenty of elbow room."

Some Recent Wedding Gowns

MRS. FRANCIS CUNNINGHAM BISHOP, who was Miss Gertrude Pell, and whose marriage to Mr. Bishop, a son of the late Heber R. Bishop—whose wonderful collection of jades was presented to the Metropolitan Museum of Art—wore a remarkably handsome bridal robe. It was of white satin, flounced with chiffon caught with sprays of orange blossoms, and the top was old point lace, the veil also being a long one of old point, an heirloom belonging to the bride's mother, Mrs. Walden Pell.

The veil was so arranged as to show the soft, low pompadour and the sides of the coiffure. The top of the gown was a deep yoke of old point lace, over which the full folds of heavy white satin forming the bodice were drawn in surplice fashion, these folds also forming the finish of the bodice, there being no girdle. The sleeves were short puffs of lace, with frills similar, there being also satin in the sleeve puffs.

The skirt had a deep accordion plaited flounce of chiffon rising very high in the centre front and slanting down at the sides until it was quite narrow at the sides of the train. This flounce was set with a ruched heading, and a box of rose ruching of the chiffon finished the lower edge. At intervals up the sides of the graduated flounce, and caught at the top so that they drooped, also slantingly, toward the back, were single sprays of orange blossoms, seven or eight inches in length.

The veil, long and narrow, extended well down the train, the latter being rounded and box-plaited at the top. The bride wore as ornaments a wide collar of fine pearls, with diamond slides, and a superb diamond necklace. This necklace was composed of ovals of diamonds from which swung crescents of diamonds, each end of the crescent being curved up to and joining the necklace between the ends of the ovals. These ovals had each a large diamond in its centre, around which was set a row of smaller stones, and the crescent or semi-circular pendants were also quite large stones.

The little maid of honor—not so little after all, but a young girl in short skirts—was Miss Leta Pell Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Wright, and niece of the bride.

* * *

Miss Wright wore a short slip of accordion plaited white chiffon, the bodice having a sheer lace-trimmed yoke finished by a Marie Antoinette fichu of chiffon, having lace ruffles. This was knotted carelessly in the centre front, the ends extending to the waist line. The girdle was white satin. The sleeves were loose accordion-plaited puffs of the chiffon banded with white satin, and finished at the elbows with lace ruffles. The bodice was accordion-plaited below the yoke. Around the bottom of the accordion-plaited skirt were three narrow bands of white satin a couple of inches apart, the lowest one perhaps three inches from the skirt's edge.

Her hat was a large, round, broad-brimmed affair of white lace trimmed with chous of liberty satin ribbon, and had a white ostrich plume or two falling off the left and back. She carried a basket filled with lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Leila Burnett of Boston, one of the handsomest of the Hub's débutantes of 1904-5, a blonde beauty of middle height and certainly very handsome, (not at all the thin, severe type one usually associates with Boston,) and the Misses Cynthia Roche, Maria Moran, and Laura Swan. It is only a few weeks since Miss Moran officiated as maid of honor at the marriage of Miss Alice De Goicouria to August Belmont, Jr., and Miss Roche was one of the attendants at the same wedding. These girls were also in pure white, it being a white wedding. Their gowns were white chiffon and white radium silk, cut with Dutch necks, pointed yokes, and elbow sleeves of the chiffon, and instead of hats they wore short tulle veils held fastened to their hair with clusters of three ostrich tips, white Prince of Wales feathers, and each carried a large, flat bouquet of white camelias and valley lilies, combined with maiden-hair ferns.

Their frocks had quite low, round necks and deep Vs of lace that extended almost to the waist line, the chiffon of the bodice being arranged in loose and simple fluffy fashion over the tight lining. The sleeves were loose and not very large, single puffs ending a little above the elbows. The skirts were gathered at the waist line and fell in full folds to the floor, on which they lay to the depth of several inches all around. The radium silver, with a lustre like moonlight on snow, formed a border some fourteen inches deep at the bottom of the skirts, and at its top, resting partially on the chiffon and partially on the silk, were oval medallions of lace some eight inches long, bordered by box ruchings of silk or something that looked like it. These medallions were also used on the sleeves, one on each, and elsewhere on the costumes.

Mrs. Eben Wright, a sister of the bride, and who is still in mourning, wore sun-ray plaited black chiffon over white silk and a very smart black hat rolled very much at the left side and trimmed with aigrettes.

Mrs. Ogden Mills was in green velvet, with a large green hat, trimmed with green plumes, and was very careful about protecting her arm so badly sprained last Autumn.

Mrs. Burke Roche wore one of the new plain princess gowns in gray broadcloth, built exactly like a long coat and being absolutely tight fitting, even the sleeves being the plain, almost tight coat sleeve, with a few gathers at the top. This robe closed at the left side of the front under a row of silver cabochons, arranged some three inches apart, the top one coming at about the shoulder line, as the side front lapped over and up to the shoulder seam.

The top of this robe, which was absolutely plain, not having so much as a strapping of the cloth or a bit of braid, was joined to the skirt portion by a seam going across the back and over the hips some five inches below the waist line. The front was in one piece, also joined in the same way, and in the centre was laid in a shallow but wide box plait, pressed and fastened on so closely as to be perfectly flat, but allowing the necessary fullness below the knees, where the plait was released. There was a collar or stock of the cloth showing a bit of white. The sleeves were cuffless, being merely hemmed, and a deep hem finished the bottom. Its simplicity and perfection of fit to its wearer's shapely figure were refreshing in these days of bouffant, bulging fripperies and multitudinous lines and varieties of material and trimmings.

Mrs. Roche's robe was topped by a rather large hat, with a moderately broad brim of chinchilla fur. It was set straight on the head, the front curving down a little, and was trimmed with a twist of pink liberty satin ribbon, fold, and chou, and pink ostrich plumes. When she left the church she donned her three-quarter-length, three-quarter-fitting chinchilla coat. The bride's mother, Mrs. Walden Pell, is in deep mourning, and wore an exquisite gown made with flounces of old black thread lace and a small black toque.

Mrs. J. Abercrombie Burden, Sr., was in rich deep blue velvet, topped by a blue velvet hat, a cross between an Amazon and an English walking hat in shape. It was trimmed at the left side with careless bows and of rich gold thread ribbon, about an inch and a quarter in width. These metallic loops extended well out to the back of the upturned brim, and starting from under them two ostrich plumes, matching the dark blue of the hat, drooped over the coiffure. The gown had a coat bodice laid in folds and plaits over a high belt, and had elbow sleeves, finished with white lace flounces. The trailing skirt was gathered at the waist line, and gave the effect of the three deep flounces, the velvet being apparently set on in three sections to the foundations. The top of each section shirred two or three times at the top, to form a heading fully two inches deep. There was, however, no flounce effect at the bottom of these sections; that is, the velvet of the lower edge was shirred in with the next section, instead of hanging loose, the velvet between the ruchings lying in full folds.

Miss Mary Stamps Bateson who married Walter Eyre Gibson Gaillard had a house wedding with Dr. Stires of St. Thomas's to perform the ceremony. She wore a quaint, old-time French wedding gown, that is, it was copied from one.

The skirt had wide plaits at the top and the train was not long. In the front the skirt opened over a petticoat of white chiffon and lace, and at each side of the skirt a graduated panel of duchesse lace was let in.

The bodice had a stock of point lace and a deep shirred yoke of chiffon with insertions of lace. This yoke ran very far down the front, almost to the waist line and a deep girdle of satin folds rose high each side of the front of the yoke.

The sleeves were single puffs finished with lace flounces about ten inches deep that fell from just above the elbows well toward the hand. Her veil was tulle with a short section over the face. She wore several pearl and diamond ornaments.

A charming lingerie house robe with an overtunic of crepe de chine is one of the interesting items in the trousseau of a recent bride. The lingerie slip is of fine white batiste, a princess slip cut to follow the outlines of the figure but loose all over and closing in the back. It has a stock made of a strip of the batiste between two rows of Valenciennes insertion. The yoke of the gown has three strips of inch wide insertion running around it, and across the front of the skirt section were run insertions of inch wide Valenciennes crossing the panel, the panel being made by the opening of the tunic. The white batiste trails on the floor all around and the insertions curve around the bottom; there are seven of them that show below the tunic. The sleeves are full and end half way between the shoulders and the elbows and are edged with six-inch ruffles of the lace.

The overdress or tunic is of pale-blue China silk, the top in Empire fashion, drawn in a bit under the bust and having a turned-back top falling into points edged with Valenciennes. The fold banding the garment in below the bust has its ends fastened together with a buckle in silver and blue enamel, and from this point the tunic opens enough to show about six inches in width of the white underdress, with its crosswise insertions.

The skirt of the tunic is gathered on to the short top under the fold of silk, and falls almost to the floor all the way around, being shaped up into seven points some sixteen inches deep. Around the sleeves, midway between the elbows and shoulders, liberty satin ribbon the same shade as the silk is tied with bows and ends at the outside of the arm.

Another robe in this trousseau is a white dotted mull, with a long full skirt gathered once at the waist line and showing many lace insertions and ruffles.

The insertions are arranged in five points, three down and two up at the sides of the skirt, and around the bottom of the skirt are two more insertions, outlining points some six inches deep. The lower row has its downward-turned points ending some four inches from the extreme edge, and the second row is six inches above the first. Each of these insertions has inserted under its lower edge a slightly ruffled, inch-wide edging of the Valenciennes, matching the insertions.

The bodice has a Dutch neck, finished at the top with a half-inch insertion of the lace. A half inch below this is an inch-wide insertion, and from this strips of half-inch insertions outline pointed tabs, the tabs, of course being of the mull. There are two of these outlined tabs on each shoulder, two inner lines touching and forming the shoulder seams. The front is plain—the bodice closes in the back, buttoning invisably between two inch-wide insertions of lace, each having an inch-wide frill of insertion edging it the insertions concealing the tiny pearl buttons closing the bodice.

In the front, at and below the waist line, there is a strip of the wider insertions outlining a section of the mull, four inches long in the centre—the mull section has pointed ends, and is three inches long at its edges and four inches long at the points, by two wide. The insertion outlining this has a ruffle of the edging. At each side of this section, which runs with its greatest length crosswise of the bodice, are two more running up and down over the bust, the points at the bottom being on a line with the insertion border of the crosswise centre one.

The elbow length sleeves have a single section in the top of each sleeve matching those on the yoke, that is, pointed at the bottom only. The sleeves are gathered just below the elbow into straight bands of the lace finished by a four-inch ruffle of the mull, with an edging of the insertion finished in turn by a ruffle of the edging.

The bottom of the waist, by the way, is gathered in at the waist line, and a folded girdle of pale blue liberty satin with a wide bow and two short pointed ends is placed at one side of the front. The latter is a bit of an innovation just now, when the ends and the chous or bow are almost invariably at the back.

A French wedding gown, of which a drawing has been sent to one of the prospective Easter brides, outlines the following robe:

There is to be a high stock and shallow pointed guimpe or vest effect in crosswise-tucked white chiffon, an edge of point lace finishing the top of the collar and having bands of tulle between the lace and the neck.

The robe itself is to be a tight-fitting princess, perfectly smooth and flat in the back, the skirt portion being gored to give fullness until a line below the hips is reached, and then begin the underlying double boxplaits, widening out into the long, rounded train.

From the underarm seams the fronts of the bodice portion are laid in surpliced folds, the right side extending over the left, the folds at the waist line being tacked firmly to the foundation. A seven-inch flounce of rose point starts on the left side of the bodice, under the overlapping right side, extends up along the side of the chiffon vest, across the back and down the right side to the waist line, where it is caught in plaits that reduce its width to three inches, then being released, it continues on down the left side of the front. Under this lace the robe closes invisibly. Two inches from the upper edge of the flounce, which is not straight, but scalloped on both edges, a single long line of artificial orange blossoms is fastened.

Around the bottom of the gown, extending to the sides of the train and then curving up and over toward the front, there is sketched a ten-inch flounce of point applique over a wider accordion plaited flounce of chiffon. The top of this point applique flounce is headed by a wide box ruching of white chiffon, and here and there tiny sprigs of orange blossoms are to be fastened.

The sleeves, which will be a novelty here, but not in Paris, where young girl brides are primly robed, have quite large puffs at their tops, over which the bertha flounce of rose point will extend in epaulet effect. From the elbows down the sleeves are to be tight fitting and are to extend over the tops of the short-wristed gloves. Deep cuffs of rose point half the depth of the tight section of the sleeves finish them as cuffs.

The suggestion for the veil is that point applique be used, the Brussels net centre to be left plain, and the border very deep but showing light and fragile appliques only. It is to be a long scarf, the end at the back extending to within eighteen inches of the floor, and the other end coming over the face and hanging half way between waist line and knees. This is to be so draped under a small round wreath of orange blooms that after the ceremony it can be drawn around to one side and will hang straight down over the longer section at the back.

Miss Grace Chapin is wearing a gray chiffon velvet carriage and reception gown that is as fetching as it is simple. Miss Chapin is slight, and the skirt with its full but clinging top that is gathered to a band suits her very well. This skirt sweeps the floor all around, but is several inches longer in the back than the front, and is plain, save perhaps for a tuck or two above the hem.

The little Eton jacket top—or if it is a bodice the lace inserted as a stock and vest gives it the appearance of a coat—has a wide girdle of velvet folds and the full back blouses out above it, a most trying fashion for any but a slight figure. The side fronts are also gathered into the girdle. The centre fronts are not, but hang loosely over the girdle to the waist line, being scallops of the velvet outlined with silver braid. These scalloped sections turn back from the edge of the jacket and extend all the way up and around the neck and down the other side of the front, with the scalloped edge lying on the jacket, the edges of the jacket being straight. These scallops are not over three inches across and two inches deep, and are fastened firmly to the body of the jacket.

The elbow sleeves are moderately full, gathered at the top, and finished at the bottom with a turned-back, scalloped band three or four inches deep, bound with silver to match the sides. Eight-inch lace flounces fall from under them.

The hat worn the other day with this was a flat cloth-of-silver gauze, with white aigrettes rising from the left side under a cluster of small oranges and their foliage, the aigrette plumes sweeping across the hat to the right side, where they rose. The whole hat was so set on that it tilted down at the right side.

Miss Mabel Gerry has a dark currant-red broadcloth princess robe for afternoon wear, with a guimpe of white lace, the guimpe showing in the back some four inches below the stock, and in the front extending to the bust line, and being about eight inches wide. The opening is edged with a band of plain silk braid perhaps an inch in width. The two lines of this braid extend down the back of the robe to the floor, while other straight lengths of it also extend down the front to the edge of the skirt. The gown is absolutely tight fitting and has no trimming except the rows of braid mentioned and several similar bands at the bottom and the sides, save on the sleeves. The sleeves are almost tight coat sleeves, and come to the wrists, tapering like the old-fashioned coat sleeves, and have bands of the braid at the bottom. At the top there are also bands of the braid set closely together and ending at the back of the arm, from which droop fringelike ornaments in the same shade of red in silk passementerie. These swing backward and then downward, and are graceful and effective.

With this robe Miss Gerry wears a small turban of red velvet trimmed with sable and small clusters of very dark red flowers and buds set in around the front and sides, forming the upright sides of the turban, while at the left, near the back, there are a couple of sable tails.

MARIE WELDON.

Personal and Otherwise

MRS. HARRY PAYNE WHITNEY, whose picture may be seen in the Pictorial Supplement, was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, a daughter of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt and a sister of Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, who made her début a year ago, and of Cornelius, Alfred Gwynne, and Reginald Claypole Vanderbilt. Her marriage to Mr. Whitney, a son of the late William C. Whitney and brother of Payne Whitney, who married Miss Helen Hay, was celebrated some years ago. The Whitneys now have two little children—Vanderbilt and Flora Whitney—the boy being named after Mrs. Whitney's family and the little girl after Mr. Whitney's mother, who was Miss Flora Payne, a daughter of the late Senator Payne.

Mrs. Whitney is slight and small, with very dark coloring and an air of distinction. Her style of dressing is quite removed from the ordinary and she sometimes wears odd but fetching combinations of color. Mrs. Whitney is an artist. At Newport she has a studio built on the cliffs, where she spends much of her time, and in New York she has had one in the Bryant Park Studio Building, but this Winter occupied one near Lexington Avenue, on Fortieth Street, where she modeled. Mrs. Whitney has accepted orders for the statuary of the new Belmont Hotel. She is also clever with her brush. At present she is at Aiken, S. C., at the Whitney villa, where she will remain until April. For some months Mrs. Whitney has had with her Mr. Whitney's only single sister, Miss Dorothy Whitney, who made her début this Winter. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney gave a cotillion for her at their town house, at the southwest corner of Fifty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue, the house occupied by the late William C. Whitney until he moved into the house overlooking Central Park at the corner of East Sixty-eighth Street, which James Henry Smith purchased after his death.

Mrs. Lycurgus Winchester of Baltimore, a photograph of whose portrait by Müller-Ury may be seen in the supplement, was Miss Katharine Griswold Pratt, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt of New York. Mrs. Winchester was married in Grace Church about two years ago, and the bridal procession, all beautiful girls, in Directoire coats, hats, and parasols in different shades, was one of the notable ones of that season.

Mrs. Winchester is the June type, very tall, with a splendidly developed figure, masses of very dark hair, large, dark blue eyes, and an unusually brilliant coloring. Within the last year the Winchesters have had a little daughter born to them and thereby have added another "April grandmother" to the ranks of the New York society matrons.

* * *

Miss Constance Pratt, a photograph of whose portrait is also in the pictorial section, is a younger sister of Mrs. Winchester and one of the beauties of New York. She is chataine in coloring, with nut-brown eyes, eye lashes and eyebrows matching the color of her hair, and a creamy complexion. She is of middle height and size, perhaps rather tall, and made her début two years ago.

* * *

Miss Constance Folsom, whose picture is also in the pictorial section, is one of the most beautiful débutantes of the Winter and the youngest of seven handsome sisters, and the only one that is not athletic in her tastes, her talents running along artistic lines. Miss Folsom is of middle height, with a remarkably brilliant coloring, she being one of the very few modern girls whose cheeks are really "as red as roses." Her hair and eyes are a brilliant brown, of the shade often called russet. Her début, scheduled for November, was delayed somewhat by the death of her aunt's husband, Joseph Whistler, at Lenox, and it was not until late in the season that she made a very quiet début at an informal tea given by Mrs. Folsom at the Gramercy Park residence.

Miss Folsom's father, George W. Folsom, is an amateur painter of no mean skill, and her sister, Miss Ethel Folsom, has a pretty talent with the brush. Her sisters include Mrs. Churchill Satterlee of Washington, who married a son of Bishop Satterlee; Mrs. Edward H. Delafield, Mrs. Clark Voorhees. The last two were the Misses Winifred and Maude Folsom, and their engagements to Mr. Delafield and Mr. Voorhees were announced simultaneously in THE TIMES of Easter Sunday two years ago. Another married sister is Mrs. C. Sidney Haight, who was Miss Margaret Folsom, whose husband, Lieut. Haight, is now stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

The débutante's unmarried sisters are Miss Ethel Folsom, now in Europe, who is giving up most of her time to the sick, and who has a convalescent home at Lenox, and Miss Georgette Folsom.

The Folsoms have a beautiful country villa at Lenox called Sunnyridge, and it was on the lawn of the latter place that Ben Greet and his company gave an open air performance of "As You Like It" for the benefit of Miss Ethel Folsom's Home for Convalescents.

* * *

Mrs. Dulany Howland, a photograph of whom appears in the group of society pictures, was Miss Marguerite McClure, or, as every one called her, Miss "Daisy" McClure, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David McClure. Her marriage to Mr. Howland took place at the McClure residence on West Forty-ninth Street, as she is a Catholic and Mr. Howland a Protestant. Mgr. Lavelle officiated. Mrs. Howland made an unusually handsome bride, as she has hair of the genuine red gold hue, and very deep gray eyes, so dark as often to appear dark brown in tone, and a pure pink and white complexion. Mrs. Howland's only attendant was her younger sister, Miss Katharine McClure. Mr. and Mrs. Howland are now South on their bridal trip, but are booked to sail on April 7 for Europe, and will not return to town for some months.

CHINA WAS NOT OFFENDED.

PROF. EVANS of Tufts College tells an amusing story of college life.

"Not long ago two Chinese boys were sent to Yale by their Government," says the professor. "They were bright chaps, and readily adapted themselves to American ways. They cut off their pigtails, wore American clothing, and talked American slang proficiently.

"Among other things, they developed a taste for late hours and questionable companions. They refused to be reprimanded, and did just about as they pleased.

"The Faculty, fearing to offend the Chinese Government if it expelled the students or punished them in any way, wrote to the Chinese Government, asking what measures it should take to compel the students' respect for the college rules.

"The Dean almost collapsed when he received this reply: 'Put them to death at once.'"

Society At Home & Abroad

LENT has fallen gently on society. The carnival lights were put out one by one and the season ended in a flicker. For the next forty days there will be renewed interest in bridge and there are to be many dinners and afternoons and luncheons and charitable entertainments. The few sewing classes have been organized and are going into the work with much zeal. Already the opera shows the signs of the times. The audiences have been small, comparatively, and there are many empty parterre boxes, although for Ash Wednesday and the first Friday in Lent there was a braver array than usual. Time was when the opera was distinctly a Lenten diversion, and March always saw crowded houses. But the vernal weather has set people thinking of Spring, even before it arrives, and of the country and of sports in the open. The short season in Florida has a few weeks more to run, and during that time Palm Beach will be in its glory. The set there this year is more Western than in former years. The New York element is not strong, and there are no great titles or notable personages to attract particular attention. In fact the West Indies, with improved steamship service, have taken some of the Florida travel, and Havana, with Mr. and Mrs. Longworth and a number of well-known people, has had a gay carnival.

In town the calendar of social events to come is meagre, and there are few weddings and fewer general entertainments, although, as before stated, there is no lack of gayety. Yesterday there was a Lenten wedding. Mrs. James Brown Lord, the widow of James Brown Lord and the sister of De Lancey Nicoll, was married to C. C. Cuyler. The engagement was rumored a little over a year ago, but only announced this Winter. On April 28 William Haiburton Bridgham and Mrs. Honorine Vail will be married. For Easter there are, so far, few nuptial announcements. It seems to be settled that Arthur Burden and Miss Roche will be married at Newport, and that the Minott-Sands wedding will occur at the same place. Both Miss Sands and Miss Roche are so identified with the Newport set that it would seem odd for them to be married anywhere else. From present indications the Newport season is not to be brilliant, many people remaining away and others being in mourning, but there is always a chance of a new element.

New Yorkers will dare Italian adventures in motors, notwithstanding the disagreeable experience of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr. Until a fortnight ago the Vanderbilts were at Monte Carlo with Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont. They had been taking short excursions in the country adjacent. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt were also on the Riviera. They will sail within a fortnight for this country, according to present plans. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., were in Paris last week. Mrs. Potter Palmer has taken a London house for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Honore Palmer sailed yesterday to visit her. Mrs. Palmer will have, as last year, a villa at Cowes for the yachting week. The rumors are being revived that a certain equerry of King Edward is still most attentive to Mrs. Potter Palmer and that she may be persuaded to marry an Englishman and settle in London. This was the same rumor prevalent two years ago at Carlsbad, where Mrs. Palmer first met King Edward.

* * *

The Watts Shermans did not sail last week owing to the illness of Mrs. John Carter Brown. They will go abroad later. The ships of the week took out many well-known people. Among those booked on the Caronia were Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane and Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly. They are to be abroad until May, and will take the customary trip in motors on the Riviera and through Italy. Mr. and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes and Miss Stokes were passengers on the same ship. They remain on the other side until the opening of the season in the Adirondacks. Mr. and Mrs. Brokaw, Col. Robert M. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Fitzhugh Whitehouse, Mrs. Louis Haggin, and the Countess Festetics also sailed. Mrs. Haggin and the Countess Festetics are going to Rome, where they will remain until June or July, when they return to this country to spend the Summer at Closter.

* * *

Lord Grimthrope was also on the Caronia. He is the second Baron of that name and is one of the Becketts. A relative married Miss Lee, who was an American. Lord and Lady Ingestre sailed later in the week. They were married two years ago. She was a Paget. Sir Charles and Lady Ross were in town for a few days. Lady Ross was Miss Ellison of Louisville.

* * *

An engagement announced in THE TIMES last Sunday was that of Miss Ella De Ruyter, sister of Mrs. Moses Taylor Campbell, and Augustus Drum Porter. Miss De Ruyter is one of the most popular women in New York society, and already dinners are being arranged in honor of her engagement. One was given last Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Amsinck. Miss De Ruyter is a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John De Ruyter. Her mother was a Miss Cromwell. On her father's side she is descended from the Dutch Admiral John De Ruyter.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Livermore and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Quentin Jones are at Miami. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock are also there for a few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Potter and Mrs. William B. Leeds were at the Royal Palm last week. From Miami one goes easily to Nassau, where there have been more Americans than usual this year. At Palm Beach were Mrs. Livingston Beeckman, Mrs. Frederick Edey, and Mrs. Willard Brown. August Belmont and Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Bird are among the later arrivals. Dr. Seward Webb has a party. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, who went with him part of the way South, have stopped off at Jekyl's Island.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney have gone to Aiken for the month of March. There is little of interest in that conservative settlement. No large entertainments have been given, but the same Long Island and Newport contingent are occupying their cottages, playing tennis and golf, riding to hounds and steeplechases. Mr. and Mrs. William Grosvenor and the Misses Grosvenor have gone from Providence to Aiken, where they will remain until the opening of the Newport season, when they will occupy their handsome villa in the City by the Sea.

* * *

One of the arrivals of the week was Lady Forbes, a sister of the Earl of Craven, who married Miss Bradley Martin. Her husband is Capt. Forbes of the Gordon Highlanders. He accompanies his wife to this country. Lady Susan Townley returned to Washington last Saturday. While here she was the guest of Mrs. John R. Drexel.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid are in Paris. They will remain a week and then go to the Riviera. They will be absent from London about a month, returning in early April. The Misses Mills will go to England a little earlier this year. Their cousins, the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Cavendish Bentinck, are to be married during the Summer. Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Lorillard Ronalds sailed on the Amerika on Thursday. They will pass the rest of the season abroad, returning in the Autumn. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Ronalds are on their honeymoon in North Carolina. Mr. and Mrs. John Boyd Thatcher were among the departures on the Amerika. Booked on this ship were also Mr. and Mrs. Larz Anderson, Ogden Mills Bishop, J. Bruce Ismay, and Nathaniel Thayer. The Countess de Chambrun sailed for Havre.

* * *

Two musicales marked the carnival's close. One was given by Mr. and Mrs. Salomon in their new home on upper Fifth Avenue, and the other by Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson, who on account of mourning have not entertained much this Winter. Caruso sang for the Wilsons and Mme. Nordica for Mrs. Salomon. The series of dinners given by Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish closed on Sunday night last. Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, who have been doing much entertaining, are to go abroad early in April and will possibly stay away the entire Summer. They are to visit Germany and England, and may take a house for the London season.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor have been cruising in the West Indies on the Wanderer. They were at Nassau for Washington's Birthday. They will go to various islands in the Spanish Main and then go abroad, returning as usual for the Newport season.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Redmond will leave shortly for Palm Beach. Mr. Robert Parsons, Mrs. Redmond's father, is already there. Others who have registered at the Royal Poinciana recently are Mrs. James L. Breese, Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Purdy, and Miss Gladys Berry.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hoffman have sailed for Europe. They were among those who were on the Caronia last week. Mrs. Hoffman was Miss Preston. Miss Marion Kemp and Miss Chiffon Kemp were also among the passengers. Miss Kemp has an apartment in Rome, and she lives there half the year. Recently she has been at the Gramatan Inn with her little niece, who is the daughter of Arthur Kemp. Mrs. Arthur Kemp, who is a sister of Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, is now Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell of Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Philip Livingston and Mr. and Mrs. Junius S. Morgan were on the same ship.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Bell Read, who were married a fortnight ago, went to the Pacific Slope for their honeymoon. They are to return about April 1, when they will make their home for the present with Mrs. Read's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Weatherbee. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pierpont Perry will return to town this week. They will make their home for the present with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lounsbery.

* * *

The Misses Mary and Cornelia Harriman have been visiting in the South. They will spend a part of the Spring at Arden. Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry and the Misses Gerry are to go to the South this month. Mrs. George F. Baker and Mrs. William Goadby Loew remain in California until the end of the month.

* * *

On Monday afternoon, March 12, a concert will be given at the Waldorf-Astoria by the Seamen's Benefit Society for the maintenance of the Harbor Mission boat Sentinel and for general work among seamen. There will be, in addition to the tableaux vivants to be given for the benefit of the Lying-In Hospital on March 22 in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, a concert and a French play in which Mrs. F. McNeil Bacon and Ernest Perrin of Paris will appear. Mrs. Bacon and Mr. Perrin were seen in several little plays of this kind last Summer at Newport. Tickets are for sale at the residence of Mrs. W. Pierson Hamilton, 32 East Thirty-sixth Street.

* * *

Thus, with all these charitable entertainments in view, society will be kept extremely busy during Lent. The bridge class established at Newport some years ago meets every Tuesday, and last week it was held at the residence of Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock on West Twenty-ninth Street. Other bridge classes meet weekly at the residences of Mrs. George R. Schieffelin, Mrs. Berryman, Mrs. Frank Sturgis, Mrs. Robert Remsen, and other well-known hostesses.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt returned last week from Washington. The North Star has been in commission, taking a party with Mr. Vanderbilt on a Southern cruise. Mrs. Ogden Goelet remains in New York, but Mrs. Robert Goelet and her son sailed for Europe last week. They join Mrs. Vanderbilt, Miss Vanderbilt, and Frank Riggs at Cannes. The Duchess of Marlborough, according to rumor, has joined "The Souls" and has given herself up to philosophical and literary work. She remains in England for the present. The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have been living quietly on their Scottish estates.

* * *

The joining of a fashionable English regiment by John Jacob Astor, son of William Waldorf Astor, has made some little sensation on this side of the water. Mr. Astor's sons have been educated in English schools and universities and are not now American citizens. Both have made serious studies and are general favorites in London society. Mr. Astor is anxious for one of them to go into Parliament. Mrs. Spender Clay is in London. She and her husband have taken a house in town for the season. They, however, intend to entertain but little. Mrs. Spender Clay is interested in philanthropic work.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ellis are passing their honeymoon in a cottage near the sea in Florida. Later they will come to town and join in the Spring the hunting colony on Long Island. The second week of March is scheduled for the opening of the hunt. P. F. Collier, who arrived last week from Ireland, where he has had Athlumny House, in the County of Meath, reports a most excellent season on the other side. Mrs. Ladenburg will go to Italy, where she is wont to pass the early Spring months. There have been successful meets of the hunt in Rome, where among other Long Islanders are Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer.

* * *

James Henry Smith has been at Lakewood visiting Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould. The Misses Gould were confirmed, and their aunt, Miss Helen, was a guest at Georgian Court. Mr. and Mrs. Gould have not been entertaining this Winter except in a quiet way. They pass a greater part of their time in town, going to Lakewood for the week end. Miss Gould is in town now for the Spring, when she usually gives a couple of "days." Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gould, who were abroad this Winter, are due here this month. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Gould are in Florida. Mr. Smith gives his regular house parties at his Tuxedo place at the week end. Like Mrs. Astor, Mr. Smith is planning his social arrangements with great regularity, going abroad at a certain time and returning about the same date each year. He has arranged to sail in April or May.

* * *

Mrs. Roosevelt will be present at the benefit performance at the Metropolitan Opera House on the 15th, when "Hänsel und Gretel" will be presented. The President has promised to try to be here also, but it is still doubtful if he will be able to leave Washington. As Mr. and Mrs. Longworth are to be in Washington next week, they may be persuaded to come over. Mr. and Mrs. Longworth arranged to spend some days in New York before they sail for Europe, but their departure will not take place until the late Spring.

* * *

One of the few March weddings will be that of Miss Evelyn B. Schley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Barney Schley, and Max Howell Behr. This will occur at the Schley residence, 845 Fifth Avenue, in this city. A complete list of the attendants was printed yesterday in this column. Among the Eastertide weddings are those of Miss May Peterson, daughter of Mrs. Wilson Peterson, to Malcolm Fay on April 17 at St. Thomas's Church; Miss Mabel Louise Storm, daughter of Mrs. Charles Eustis Orvis, to Joseph Ferris Simmons on April 24 at the same church, and Miss Evelyn Willis Hunter, daughter of Edward Willis Hunter, to Keith Donaldson, also at St. Thomas's, on April 25.

* * *

An interesting out-of-town wedding will be that on April 25 of Miss Annie McCauley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward McCauley, to Columbus O'Donnell Lee at the home of the bride, in Washington. Mr. Lee is a great-nephew of the late Mrs. Adrian Iselin and a brother of Joseph Jenkins Lee, Minister to Ecuador. In Easter week there will be one Neighborhood cotillion, the last of the series, and on April 18 the much talked of Assembly Ball at the Astor house will be held. This, as already described, will be a fancy dress affair, many of those who will take part wearing gowns and laces once owned by their grandmothers. A number of the patronesses belong to the artistic set, and there is no doubt that the ball will be a success.

* * *

There will be two sewing class meetings this week. On Wednesday the Helpers' Lenten Sewing Class will assemble at 51 East Fifty-eighth Street, and on Friday there will be a meeting of the Nursery and Child's Hospital Sewing Class at 116 Fifth Avenue. NEW THEORY ABOUT CLIFF DWELLERS.

A NEW explanation as to why the cliff dwellings are situated at such an immense height was advanced by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Francis E. Leupp, at the recent meeting of the New York State Chapter of the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association.

The theory was that at the time the Cliff Dwellers built their quaint homes, (probably as far back as the age of mammoths,) an immense stream flowed by almost on a level with the houses. This flow of water gradually wore down the bed of the river until it became so sunken as to leave the houses at an almost inaccessible elevation.

Another interesting point brought out by the Commissioner related to the fact that the doorways of the dwellings average only three or four feet in height. The builders had constructed these openings on the principle that as animals had small openings in the ground, human beings needed doorways only sufficiently large to allow the body to pass through.

Mr. Leupp described these dwellings when viewed as a whole as a sight of impressive grandeur, with the unbroken silence brooding over all.

BOSTON NAVY YARD'S TALL CHIMNEY.

THINGS, like men, are what they symbolize. Picturesque as many things may be, big things inspire sublime possibilities, and a bigger thing than Bunker Hill Monument, incredulous as it may seem, is the big chimney of the steam engineering department at the navy yard, Boston. It soars several feet higher from the ground than does the historic monument of Revolutionary deeds, and visitors look upon it with awe when they see it. Its principal dimensions are: Height above the ground, 241 feet; height above the top of the base, 237¾ feet; 24 feet square at the base, and 12 feet square at the top.

The foundation of this structure was begun Aug. 22, 1857; work was stopped for the Winter season on Oct. 23 following; work was resumed May 17, 1858; the last brick was laid Oct. 7, 1858, and the first fire kindled under it was on Oct. 12, 1858. In the structure there were used 1,026,000 bricks, 1,100 barrels of lime, 500 tons of sand, and 400 barrels of cement. The foundation is 18 feet deep below the level of ground, is 30 feet square, and contains 500 tons of granite. Inside of the cone of the chimney it is 6 feet 6 inches in diameter.

+ + +

One of the old brick masons yet living gives an interesting history of this big chimney. His story includes proof that a book agent will go anywhere on earth or above earth on business. The mason says:

"On completion of the work a dinner was furnished upon a platform erected at the top, which platform extended beyond the sides of the walls. About forty persons, including Government and city officials and the leading mechanics who had to do with the structure, were invited. A flagpole thirty feet long was erected at the top, from which a new American flag waved. At the dinner, Civil Engineer Joseph Billings, the designer of the chimney, was presented by the masons with a handsome gold chain. During the following week visitors were received at the top of the chimney every day, they being hoisted up in a large bucket worked by mechanical power.

"We had one heavy electric storm while at work on the chimney, the thunder and lightning being so severe that those who were at work on it never forgot it. At the time we were taking in the awning at the top, which was then about 225 feet from the ground, and one of the masons, by the name of Burnham, was so affected by the shock that he was laid up for several days. All had prayed for a thunderstorm to observe its effects, and they got all they wanted, and more, too. At another time, when we were about 215 feet up, our hoisting engine broke down and the only way to get to the ground was by the staging, down which the workmen climbed hand over hand. This was hard work for three or four, for they were large men weighing 200 pounds or more each.

+ + +

"A short time before the chimney was finished a woman book agent came to the chimney and called up the speaking tube that she wanted to see Otis Little, the Superintendent. Not knowing who it was, he went down, and found it was a woman peddling 'Livingstone's Travels Through Africa.' When Little found it was a mere book agent he became much [illegible] [illegible]ding the agent was a young woman, but soon recovering himself, he suggested that she go up to the top of the chimney. At first she felt too timid for such an adventure, but upon Little daring her and promising that she would sell fully half a dozen books, she decided to attempt it. A large tub was attached to the hoisting rope, the one that the masons used for going up a half dozen at a time, and into this Little and the woman got and were hauled up by the engine.

When they reached the top platform two of the workmen assisted her out by the arms and set her down. Within ten minutes she sold eleven books, which she admitted paid her well for her daring. When they went down again the engineer thought he would give her some new experience, and, lowering the tub slowly at times he would then let it go down a few feet with a jump. She didn't enjoy it a bit. I do not remember that any other woman or any other book agent ever got to the top of that chimney."

In the designing of this chimney the designer had an eye to the future development of the steam engineering department and did not confine himself to the immediate needs, which cannot be said of builders as a rule. With the enlargement of the machine shop, the foundry, and the boiler shop, which was begun a year or more ago, the chimney is of a size more than sufficient for the new requirements.

WHEN JOHN OBEYED.

THE story told by Mark Twain the other day about the estimate of John Fiske, the historian, of two of his childrens' aunts, brought forth an illustration of the reasons for that opinion. Mark Twain's story was that when Mrs. Fiske one day went to her husband in horror and reported that his young son had said that Aunt Mary was "a fool" and Aunt Martha "a d—n fool," the historian replied, after careful consideration, "Well, that is about the distinction I should make."

A man in the audience, who knew both the aunts, after the meeting told this:

Aunt Martha was one of the strictest disciplinarians I have ever known. She demanded chiefly obedience of her children, instant, unquestioning, silent obedience, and she usually got it. One afternoon as she was working in her sewing room a great storm came up, and she sent her son John to close the trap door leading to the flat roof of the Queen Anne cottage.

"But, mamma—" said John.

"John, I told you to shut the trap."

"Yes, but ma—"

"John, shut that trap!"

"All right, mamma, if you say so, but—"

"John!"

John slowly climbed the stairs and shut the trap. The afternoon went by and the storm howled and raged. Three hours later the family gathered for dinner, and when the meal was half over and Aunt Mary had not appeared, Aunt Martha started an investigation. She did not have to investigate very long. John answered her first one.

"Please, mamma, she is up on the roof."

SOMETHING NEW UNDER THE SUN.

IT was just at the height of the fashionable shopping hour when two masculine individuals looking somewhat bored [illegible] the corner of Sixth Avenue and proceeded to saunter up Twenty-third Street. Suddenly the man in tan-colored spats stopped with a jerk and exclaimed: "By Jove, at last! A new thing I do believe!" His blasé companion in the gray paddock gazed in the direction indicated and remarked under his breath: "Well, I'll be —"

What they saw was a magnificently gowned woman, her hat gorgeous with many plumes, carrying aloft an ordinary white sign, bearing in black letters: "All suffering from corns and bunions can find immediate and permanent relief by calling on Dr. Brown."

Struck dumb with astonishment, these seekers after the new and strange hurried through the crowd for a nearer view. Their evident intention was to pass the object of their curiosity, then turn about and obtain a full view of the woman brave enough to face the public under such circumstances. They accomplished their purpose, that is, they got a good look at a [illegible] up with a signboard held to his shaky old person by straps and other things—the whole outfit was of a height to bring the advertisement just in the proper place over the head of the unconscious shopper to produce the effect of its being carried by her. A sorrowful voice, presumably belonging to one of the disappointed youths, was heard to remark: "Stung again!"

MARCH 1906

THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Ethics of the Pictorial Mart

* * *

Commercialism in the Art Collector Sets a Bad Example to the Dealer.

A KNOTTY problem involving commercial and amateur ethics is to confront some jury of free and enlightened citizens in the imminent future, one that touches the responsibility of the professional seller of pictures to his client, that of the client to the seller, and again the responsibility of an art collector for the genuine character of his pictures, long after these have been dispersed at auction.

The suit brought by a noted firm of dealers of Paris and New York against Mr. D. H. King, Jr., to obtain from him the difference between $74,000 and $25,000 may prove of no small value in settling a number of questions which are now open to debate. The house of Gimpel & Wildenstein agreed to sell four old pictures to Mr. King for $74,000 some time last Winter, when that collector was looking about for extra attractions wherewith to raise the average of his private gallery prior to selling it off in March. The D. H. King sale was an interesting episode in the list of events during the season of 1904-5, and although the prices attained were, generally speaking, lower than one might have expected, in view of the excellent attendance at the sale and widespread advertisement of the event, yet it was felt that many of the pictures went for all they were worth.

It now appears that Mr. King paid only $25,000 on account of the $74,000 agreed upon, reserving further payment till after the sale, an arrangement perhaps unwise on the part of the sellers, as it now appears, but by no means uncommon in transactions of this kind.

* * *

Dealers and clients enter into all sorts of arrangements, sometimes buying partly in cash, partly in discarded pictures, or partly cash, partly notes running for a greater or less number of days. There was nothing out of the way in Mr. King requesting and the dealers allowing a reasonable delay for the $49,000 still due. It showed confidence on the part of the dealers in the quality of the pictures.

What struck Mr. King very disagreeably at the sale was the wide difference between the $74,000 he had agreed to pay and the $38,000 the four paintings brought. Even a rich man dislikes to lose $36,000, not to speak of the costs of the auction in addition; and when one is a keen business man one looks about for consolation. The various reasons given for refusal to pay anything more on this losing speculation need not be considered one by one; they will be brought out at the trial. One reason alleged, however, casts a somewhat unfortunate light on the collector as a judge of pictures; namely, that the "Comtesse d'Argenson," portrait by Nattier, was a copy, and the "Marquise de Saffray," portrait by Mme. Vigée Le Brun, had been considered in Paris sufficiently doubtful as an original to have the words "attributed to" attached to it in a catalogue.

Had Mr. King regarded his reputation as a connoisseur worth $49,000, would he not have paid the money and credited experience by an equal sum? If the four pictures had sold for $74,000 and over, would he not have pocketed the money and left the buyers at his sale to earn the experience? He set a poor example to the dealers by injecting commercialism into esthetics. But it appears that he holds his reputation as a judge of old pictures very cheap, for he declines to pay, while the pictures themselves have passed out of his possession and cannot be returned to Gimpel & Wildenstein unless the present owners volunteer to surrender their purchases. Mr. King plays at heads I win, tails you lose.

* * *

One can readily see how pleasantly intricate and diversified are the questions involved. Is it right, when about to sell their collections, for amateurs to give them backbone by acquiring canvases to which fashionable names are attached, thus allowing buyers to suppose that they have before them paintings which represent a lifelong acquaintance with works of the masters? In the present case the four pictures were only one-third the property of Mr. King, two-thirds the property of the dealers. And when the venture (or shall we call it, in Wall Street parlance, the gamble?) fizzled out, was it good ethics, was it indeed quite fair for the man who played the game to leave the owners of two-thirds in the lurch?

One asks these questions with becoming modesty, not as implying a knowledge of the finer shades of chiaroscuro where commercialism and the esthetic overlap, but distinctly bewildered at the various facets the matter presents.

Suppose, for example, that jealous rivals in the picture trade suggested to Mr. King that the dealers in question were making large gains, and anyhow the pictures were no better than they should be! It is so easy to assume the tripod in art matters and deliver a verdict which in the nature of the objects themselves can not be gainsaid—nor corroborated. Suppose he is the victim of the backbiting which goes merrily on between persons in the same way of business, and it turns out, after all, that a majority of experts credit Mme. Vigée Le Brun with having painted the lady with the harp, Marquise de Saffray, or whoever she may be. Then we may regret that he is such a poor loser, and feel that some reparation is due to the dealers whose expertness and good faith have been impugned. But we may be cruel enough to note how this lawsuit can lead to public good, if it brings nearer the time when a wabbly connoisseur has some guarantee that runs with his purchase.

* * *

Caveat emptor! was the cynical cry in Roman times, but there is no reason why the buyer of pictures should not have the right to file a caveat with the seller, not to consider the matter closed until he has had time to investigate. As it is, there are dealers who practically give their clients three, six, or twelve months to assure themselves that all is fair and aboveboard, agreeing to refund the purchase money if reasonable proof is brought that the pictures are not what they seemed. In a way this is a hardship for the dealer, who is not infallible and may be deceived by others more astute, or may be led to credit attributions made long ago which have become traditions accepted by every one. "Caveat emptor" seems a rule rather particularly pertinent to dealings in old masters, concerning which there is such a conflict of authorities one with another. Yet the best class of dealers do not take advantage of it.

This guarantee of the buyer by the seller for a reasonable term demands some concession on the side of the buyer. That concession is a slightly higher price. As a matter of fact the dealers who bear the best reputation for care exercised in protecting their clients get higher prices for their pictures than others. Usually this does not hold before the leveling lottery of the auction, except in so far that the sale under the hammer of pictures belonging to certain dealers inspires greater confidence and attracts the serious buyers. It complicates matters to enforce the rule of them and guara [illegible] for auctions. Yet last year we [illegible] such a guaranteed sale.

* * *

An ideal which shows no immediate signs of attainment would be some tribunal to which owners of pictures might apply, to learn exactly what they have, when and by whom painted, and, roughly, what the value. Individual experts by profession labor under the sneers of their fellows and the ill-concealed scorn of dealers, who have their own ways of deciding what is what. Salaried experts for museums usually succumb to the impulse to depreciate objects which they may wish eventually to acquire for their own establishments. And they are apt to grow quickly doctrinaire. Forever looking at antiquities from the point of view of a historian, forever seeking "specimens," they inevitably lose, if ever they possessed it, sense for appreciation of beauty. And so they fill the public collections with ugly things that mean nothing to any except a few students of technique and the history of art. They forget that the main thing is beauty. Instead of buying four or five indifferent specimens to fill the gaps, they should range the world for what is beautiful.

Nowhere has this ideal for lovers of ancient things been reached; we can only say that Paris and London contain more persons in the habit of deciding such questions than does at present New York. But even in the old country they are difficult folk, kittle cattle. The record of their mistakes—and worse—is amazing. The best thing is to remember that they are of no great importance, because old pictures, just like modern pictures, are for our enjoyment, and what has that to do with the name of the artist or the date when it was painted? CHARLES DE KAY.

Works of Art Illustrated

Paintings as well as furniture, porcelains and tapestries made in France during the reign of Louis XV. have been long the rage in Europe, after suffering something like an eclipse for a century and a half. Pictures by Watteau, Boucher, Largillière, and Nattier fetch enormous prices to-day, compared to what they brought twenty years ago. In the pictorial tinted supplement is a reproduction of a Nattier at the Ehrich Galleries which opens a chapter in the life of Louis XV., beloved of readers of Court scandals.

It is called "Le Point du Jour et le Silence," or "Dawn and Silence," and has the distinction of having brought the painter Nattier to the attention of the King and the Court—to have made his fortune, in fact. For it represents in the two goddesses reclining on dark-brown rolling clouds two favorites of Louis XV., sisters, who belonged to a family of five women, variously gifted with brains or with beauty, four of whom ruled in succession the moody and pleasure-loving monarch.

In 1740 the Duchesse de Mazarin brought to Nattier's studio two of her nieces, daughters of the Marquis de Nesle, whom she had to protect, owing to the impossible career of their father, a debauched and half crazy noble of old family, who had ruined himself and them by unheard of extravagance. One was already married. She was the Marquise de la Tournelle, and became later, by the King's grace, the Duchesse de Châteauroux. She it is who reclines elegantly to the left, dropping water from a classic braker and holding over the head of the other goddess a wreath of daisies. The other was Madame de Flavacourt, a younger sister. She represents "Silenée" and has stolen from Cupid, asleep to the right and rear, his bow and arrows, while she raises the other hand in a gesture that warns against waking him. Strange to say, two other sisters had been the King's favorites, namely Madame de Mailly and Madame de Ventimille; only the year before the latter had died in giving birth to a son.

The brothers de Goncourt state in their historical work on the lady pictured as "Dawn" that the dead sister, Mme. de Ventimille, was the first person at the Court to encourage Louis to assert himself as a man against the tutelage in which he lived under the old Cardinal.

* * *

"The Unpublished Memoirs on Lives of Members of the Royal Academy" speaks of this allegory, alluding to it as the masterpiece of Nattier. The picture excited so great a stir at the Court, ever ready to prophesy concerning the filling of the vacant post of favorite, and naturally inclined to believe in the powers of younger and prettier members of the same family, to fascinate the King, that the curiosity of the Queen was excited. Having seen the work, she was so much struck by the close resemblance to the two beauties that she gave Nattier a commission to paint the Princess Henriette. So that we have here a painting which may have been the turning point in the careers of these two sisters, assuring them of the King's attention, while it is certain that it was the turning point of Nattier's own career.

These two sisters did not have the natural force and brains of the dead favorite, but they had the beauty which was not hers, and more education. With the protection of their eldest sister, Mme. de Mailly, who kept some power long after the King had wearied of her, and introduced by their aunt, the Duchesse de Mazarin, they soon took part in the petits soupers of Louis along with his special intimates, adding their youth and beauty to the bevy of elderly women who enjoyed his favor. Maurepas, the King's Minister, did what he could to thwart the efforts of the Nesle sisters to keep the post in the family, although in fact they were his own relations. It was a kind of civil war between cousins. But he had to meet the intrigues of Richelieu, then rising to power, who saw the chance of making himself indispensable to the King. The Goncourts paint the singular situation. Maurepas took advantage of his near relationship with the Duchesse de Mazarin and more distant relationship to the sisters to combat their ambition and that of Richelieu in their own family circle.

Nattier's drawing is superb, and the coloring is charming. The undergarment of "Dawn" (Madame de Tournelles) is embroidered with sprigs of flowers. Dull red and fine dark blue in broad masses are supplied by the outer draperies. But if these colors can not be told in the reproduction, the peculiar and original management of line can be seen all the better, the parallel lines of the arms and shoulders of the goddesses, moving from the left upward to the right, the parallel lines of the bodies and heads, moving from the upper left to lower right. This bold repetition of line is accompanied by a general similarity of faces, alike enough for sisters, yet different enough to spell differences in character. The elder acts as protector to the younger, as if she were crowning her at her introduction to the Court. This picture will be included in the sale of old paintings in the Ehrich Galleries, which is set for March 21. As in last year's sale, so in this, a guarantee of the genuineness of the pictures will be given, the buyer having the option of returning a purchase within a certain number of months, if he can give reasonable proof that an error has been made.

The bronze by Mr. Gutzon Borglum representing Hercules stampeding the man-eating steeds of Diomedes, King of Thrace, which was presented to the Metropolitan Museum by Mr. Stillman, is an admirable study of horses scurrying over the rocks. When shown in the window of the new building of the Gorham Manufacturing Company on Fifth Avenue, many people who never visit the regular exhibitions had a chance to enjoy the frantic rush and spirited modeling of this huddle of horse. Hercules, clinging like a limpet to one of the group, adds to the effect of swift movement by his prone attitude. His figure not only suggests a rapid flight, but no little enjoyment of the situation, as if he were a bad boy relishing the dismay of the grooms of Diomedes at the loss of the horrid monsters. It will be remembered that the King, in the semi-mythical dawn of Greek consciousness, indulged a passion for sacrificing the casual stranger who set foot on his territory to his flesh-eating pets. Instead of throwing them to the dogs, he threw them to the horses, in which he had bred this singular taste. The group is reproduced in the tinted supplement to-day. Mr. Borglum's studies of Indians and their horses prepared him well to cope with a classical subject of this kind. It recalls the frequent parallels drawn between the life of Greeks in early ages and that of American Indians. Was it not Benjamin West, at Rome, seeing the Apollo Belvedere for the first time, who exclaimed "Why, he looks like an Indian chief!"?

Through the courtesy of Messrs. Wunderlich & Co. we are able to reproduce Whistler's portrait of Miss Alexander as a child, the Miss Alexander whose marriage was cabled from London last week. The print will be found in the pictorial supplement. It is from a fine photogravure belonging to a series of reproductions of works by Whistler. The original is one of the best of the portraits by the late apostle of nocturnes and airscapes, in which he has given, more than was his wont, attention to the personality of his sitter. Very modest and feminine is this small girl, very well-bred and charming. Had she not been painted by Whistler, it is exceedingly doubtful if the cable would have been troubled to announce her marriage, for it was that, not any prominence in literature, art, or science, which occasioned the interest shown in her identity. Whistler's variegated squabbles with Messrs. Eden and Leyland have come near conferring immortality on them. Had it not been for his irascible character we should never have heard of these worthies, but they had the good or ill fortune to give him commissions.

What the Artists Are Doing

TWO large canvases dominate the interior of Irving R. Wiles's studio at present, partly from their size and partly from the importance of the sitters to the painter's brush, for they are both portraits. One, which just has been completed, is a three-quarter length standing figure of Dr. John W. Burgess, the Dean of the Faculty of Political Science at Columbia University. Mr. Wiles worked at the portrait in the studio of Dr. Burgess's wife, who is an artist, and has introduced into the background some of her studio fittings, and also one of her copies of Murillo. The second canvas, which is not quite finished, is a full length of Miss Julia Marlowe in the costume of Viola in "Twelfth Night." The costume is of white, heavily embroidered with gold, the only touch of brighter color in it being in the red sash and the little cap. In this picture Viola carries her sword resting in the hollow of her left arm, while the right arm is raised as she adjusts the folds of her cap and its flowing ends. The background is a landscape and the figure is practically life-size.

Bryson Burroughs is working at several studies of the activities in the quarries at Dorset, Vt., from sketches he made last Summer.

* * *

E. H. Potthast has come down from the heights of the Alps and their snows long enough to paint a landscape theme which he found on near-by Long Island. A line of trees with underbrush occupies the centre of the canvas and curves away to the right, so the spectator is looking at the trees from an angle. Meadow land is seen through the trees, which are touched with the first golden hues of Autumn, and a road with meadows beyond lies to the left of the composition. With this Mr. Potthast is carrying along a Dutch genre study of two young women, one sitting in a doorway sewing, the other standing outside gossiping. Beyond the dusky foreground of the interior and through the open door one sees a sunny garden, with an old pump, worn to a faded gray by the elements.

Eliot Dangerfield is going to Charleston, S. C., next week, to deliver an address on the closing day of the art exhibition in the Fine Arts Building in that city. The subject he has elected to talk on is "Art, Its Expression and Development."

* * *

Jerome Myers is at work on some landscapes in pastel of scenes around Fort George, and has practically completed two new studies of life over on the east side. One of these is an Italian religious procession in Mulberry Street at night time, the other is "The Free Dinner," a title which explains the nature of the composition. The studies for the last named picture were made at one of the Salvation Army feasts last Winter. Mr. Myers's "Recreation Pier," which was shown at the Pennsylvania Academy, has been invited to the forthcoming annual show of the Society of American Artists.

E. A. Abbey is to send a stein, decorated by himself, to the Salmagundi Club for its annual sale of these mugs held for the benefit of the club's library fund. The presence of this stein in the sale will probably set a new high mark in the prices realized. The highest price realized last year was $232.

Ruth Payne Burgess, the President of the Woman's Art Club, has been working recently on two ideal heads, one called "Monna Anna," the other "Mimsey." The first named is a study of a girl with an "old-fashioned" face, the quaintness of which has been brought out by the arrangement of the hair and the use of a drapery of old yellow lace over the shoulders. The "Mimsey" is an attempt to realize the character of that name in Du Maurier's "Peter Ibbetsen," and shows a girl sitting sideways in a chair with one hand resting on the arm and the head turned almost full face toward the spectator. A big black hat rests on her mass of yellow hair.

Walter Florian has just finished a full-length portrait of the venerable figure of Father Ducey, the rector of St. Leo's. He is represented in his soutane with the right arm hanging by his side and the left one crooked at the elbow, the left hand being drawn in a characteristic position. The artist has also painted a portrait of Alfred Butes, an Englishman living in this city, and a standing figure of Mrs. Sailing Baruch.

Talk of the Studios

Charles Schreyvogel has just received a belated bronze medal from the International Jury of Awards at the St. Louis Exposition for his picture, "Custer's Demand." This is the picture which caused quite a controversy among the critics several years ago. It was then the subject of an attack from another artist, a painter of repute for Indian types. Mr. Schreyvogel stood by his guns, however, and bided his time. Now the painting has received a bronze medal and at this late day, when the artist had scarcely entertained any idea of being the recipient of such an award. All of the characters portrayed in the picture are from actual life. Gen. Custer is, of course, the central figure, and round him on horseback are a number of well-known Indian chiefs and army officers, including Col. Schuyler Crosby, under whose guidance Mr. Schreyvogel painted the canvas.

"The Rear Guard" is the title of a new painting of army life on the frontier just started. Two mounted troopers, with firearms in hand, are guarding a caravan on the plains, their steeds kicking up a whitish dust as they go prancing along over the dry soil of the arid West. Several big prairie wagons with covered tops fill the background.

Only five artists were fortunate enough to realize sales from the recent exhibition of oil paintings at the Salmagundi Club. These were Charles C. Curran's "Autumn," which brought $250; T. Addison Millar's "The Iron Door," $250; Leonard Ochtman's "In May," $500; Clark Voorhees's "Spring," $300, and D. J. Gue's "Passing Shower," which sold for $200.

Recent oil paintings, charcoal drawings, and pastels by Carroll Beckwith may be seen in the Powell Art Gallery, 983 Sixth Avenue, from 9 A. M. to 6 P. M., until March 16.

M. Raimundo de Madrazo has arrived here from abroad, and taken a studio at 11 East Thirty-second Street, where he will fulfill a number of portrait commissions.

* * *

Glimpses of Park Row, the "L," the Stock Exchange, lower Broadway, which is styled "The Golden Cornice," [No. 100;] St. Paul's, Union Square, Forty-second Street, and the lofty Times Building are shown in the etchings of New York "Sky Scrapers," by Joseph Pennell, now on view at the galleries of Frederick Keppel & Co., 4 East Thirty-ninth Street.

* * *

At the galleries of Fishel, Adler & Schwartz, 313 Fifth Avenue, Miss Ada Lagercrantz is holding an exhibition of recent miniatures and pastel portraits, which will continue until March 5.

* * *

Horatio Walker, who is represented at the present one hundred and first annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, has recently been awarded the Academy gold medal of honor. This is a distinction bestowed upon American artists and sculptors in recognition of high merit achieved at an Academy exhibition, or who may be represented in the permanent collection at Philadelphia.

* * *

Alphonse Jongers, the portraitist, with a studio in the Sherwood Building, has just received five new commissions, including those of Mrs. Mandell of Boston and Mrs. Irving Lehman of New York, and also has been commissioned to paint portraits of Isaac and William Guggenheim. His present work will occupy him well into the Spring.

* * *

F. K. M. Rehn, the marine painter, has recently completed a landscape entitled "August Afternoon." While Mr. Rehn is perhaps best known as a marine artist, he does not confine himself altogether to painting pictures of the sea. It is possible that he may give an exhibition of a series of pictures painted in Italy before long.

* * *

Herbert W. Faulkner, a member of the Sherwood studio colony of artists, is holding an exhibition of Venetian scenes in the St. Louis Museum of Fine Arts, where the pictures of the Glasgow School are now on view.

* * *

At the new Albright Art Gallery in Buffalo, N. Y., Carlton T. Chapman is represented by a collection of sixteen of his well-known marines. The exhibition will continue until March 17. Mr. Chapman is still engaged in putting the finishing touches to his large canvas depicting the sea fight between the Bon Homme Richard and the Serapis, which he contemplates sending to the annual exhibition of the Society of American Artists.

* * *

Nicholas R. Brewer, one of the artist colony in the Van Dyck Studio Building, has returned to New York from a trip through the Northwest, where he painted portraits of a number of prominent people, including a likeness of former Gov. Pillsbury of Minnesota. He is now engaged in painting a large mural decoration for the church of Our Lady of Lourdes on West 142d Street.

American water color artists are looking forward with much interest to the forthcoming annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society, which will open to the public on May 3 in the Fine Arts Building, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street. Exhibits must be received on or before April 20 and 21. A large exhibition is being planned. The annual meeting of the society will be held on March 21, when further plans will be discussed.

It is the intention of the society to give an exhibition on a broader scale than heretofore. Artists generally concede that this society of water colorists has contributed its quota to the cause of American art. As a light and beautiful medium water color has been employed throughout the ages. While some of the great oils of Turner, for instance, have turned black or yellow or faded, his water colors, of which there is a magnificent collection in the National Gallery of London, have remained brilliant and sparkling as when first painted. An effort will be made to have several famous American painters now living abroad represented at the coming exhibition of the water colorists.

Van Dearing Perrine has spent the Winter studying the various aspects of nature from the Hudson Heights. He will open an exhibition of his latest paintings at the New Gallery, 15 West Thirtieth Street, which will continue for a month. This will be his second annual exhibition at the same place.

* * *

Paul King, who received one of the Innis one-hundred-dollar prizes for his painting, "Hauling in the Anchor Line," at the recent Salmagundi Club exhibition of oils, has also been awarded the Shaw purchase prize of $300. Samuel T. Shaw is a well-known member of the club. The prize picture was shown at the National Academy.

Carl Rungius has a studio at Greenpoint, L. I. He spent last Fall in the wilds of New Brunswick studying the ways of moose and elk. He is now painting several pictures of these moose and elk in his Greenpoint studio.

* * *

Emil Carlsen has recently started to paint a new marine, which he may send to the forthcoming annual exhibition of the Society of American Artists.

On some of his Western trips he is absent several months, when he spends his time hunting and sketching grizzly bears, mountain lions, lynxes, and roaming deer and antelope. His knowledge of the habits of these animals is gathered by actual experience.

August Schwabe, a Newark artist, received a gold medal for his design of a religious subject for a large stained glass window at the St. Louis Exposition. Recently he has had several commissions for stained glass designs. He is also engaged in completing a number of portrait commissions for Newark folk.

Some New High Water Marks

* * *

Tea Has Reached $122 a Pound, an Anvil $1,300 ---Some Auction-Room Romances.

IF one fancies the taste of "Golden Tip" Ceylon tea he will have to pay $122.50 a pound for it. If his desire runs to whalebone, he will find it quoted to him at the mere trifle of $15,000 a ton. If he proposes to buy old United States stamps—the five-cent Buchanan, for instance, or the one-cent vermillion "Philadelphia carrier"—he will find the prices set at $226 and $92.50, respectively. If it be the Whistler portrait of Henry Irving which he wishes to hang in his gallery, lo! there stands J. P. Morgan to bid against him with a bagatelle offer of $25,200 for the canvas.

These are not fairy-tale figures. They are actualities realized within the last eight weeks. Moreover, such prices for paintings and postage stamps are far from record level, even though tea and whalebone do not often play such rôles in the market. Sales like these, however, bring up once more that ever-new subject of the financial romances of the world's auction rooms. Almost weekly come contributions to the strange story, with the high-water marks pushed up and up with every month, till men wonder less at the prices paid than that buyers could be found to pay them.

"Record" prices are entertaining things, no matter how one looks at them. For instance, as one reads of $20,000 being paid last Spring for a Sevres vase less than seventeen inches high, one sees behind that six-minute contest such a triumph for Mme. de Pompadour as must have done no little good to the presumably restless shade of so beautiful but so erring a lady. Roundly was she abused by her own brilliant generation for persuading Louis the Well-Beloved to lavish millions of livres on the Sevres factories, but at such figures for the ware the French monarch could have made no better investment than buy in all that was made to resell it to-day to long-pursed collectors.

Silver at $2,360 an ounce again should cover at least the cost of production, or land at $4 a square inch should repay one for advertising it. These high levels were touched last June, the one at the famous Christie salesrooms in London (for a 1660 wine flagon,) and the other in New York when a diminutive lot at the corner of Broadway and Wall Street changed hands for three quarters of a million dollars.

$91,000 for a seat on the New York Stock Exchange, Dec. 20.
$81,375 for a rock crystal vase, sixteenth century, May 26.

HISTORY IN THE BACKGROUND.

In the case of the snuffbox the history of yesterday and the day before had of course much to do with its price. So, too, when a lock of hair brings $16 or an old anvil $1,300, as last December's news had to tell, one only asks, "Whose were they?" It was Thackeray's hair—and it brought more than the novelist made out of his first book. It was John Bunyan's anvil—and old iron, (even 280 years old,) never before commanded such a figure.

Hair from the right man's head usually brings a fancy price; curly or straight, red or black, nothing counts in the hair market but the owner of the scalp that grew it. Lord Nelson holds this record. When twenty-four of his hairs brought $625 newspaper readers took notice, but November last brought a comparatively better sale than this, when nine (by actual count) of the Admiral's "head-grown spears" commanded $350. Wellington locks come cheaper; one may get a first-rate little bunch for $7.50. Byron, who had hair that was especially beautiful, stands fairly steady in the market at $95 per lock. Napoleon, who wore some of his right in the middle of his forehead, ranges all the way from $5 up to $100.

Nineteen five brought at least six other big sales in the field of historic relics. Metternich's desk leads these, the French Government buying it in for $200,000—a fairish sum even for gold-mounted rosewood. The others scale down the financial thermometer as follows:

$7,500—A chair used by both Washington and Jackson.
4,500—A letter from Mary Queen of Scots; 14 pages.
700—An oak bedstead, once used by John Wesley.
450—One manuscript page from Lincoln's last message.
250—The original (MS) report of Congress on Arnold's treason.

OLD BOOKS AND NEW BEASTS.

All the world can spend money on books, but at least one man knows, too, how to make money out of them. In April, G. D. Smith, the New York literary dealer, paid $6,664 for Ireland's famous "History of the Stage," and his bookish confreres said he had paid too much by at least the $664. But Mr. Smith only had to hold the thirty volumes twenty-four days till he had found a purchaser at exactly $1,000 clear profit. The other annalist of the drama, Doran, if he visits the auction rooms unseen, must have been gratified at hearing his thirteen volumes go, (in the Cope sale, Philadelphia,) for $6,000.

July last witnessed two monumental transactions of this sort, with London the scene each time. A clean copy of the fourth quarto of Shakespeare's "Richard III."—one of the three copies known to be extant—brought $8,750, while a Caxton volume, dating back to the days when that pioneer printer ran his small shop in the very Abbey of Westminster, "fetched," (the Englishman would say,) only $2,000 less.

Trotters and pacers do better even than this. November saw Cresceus change hands for $21,000 and The Abbot for $26,500; Dan Patch had brought $60,000, and Major Delmar $40,000. Grahamstown, South Africa, witnessed a $3,000 trade where a pair of ostriches were held equivalent to that very good money.

The oddest things of all the auctioneer puts up seem to get the highest prices. An egg of old Sindbad's roc drew $2,500, though it should in fairness be added that the man who bought it came from Hoboken. An auk's skin was able to separate another collector from $2,000, and does it not seem but yesterday that F. R. Pierson, the Tarrytown millionaire, paid $20,000 for a certain prize-winning carnation pink?

In flowerland, indeed, such big prices are becoming the rule rather than the exception. Orchids are becoming more profitable than coal mines. April saw three of the gorgeous but bizarre blooms sell at $1,350, $1,200, and $1,100, respectively. In June the "Roger Sander" set the record with $4,592, its real name having something to do with it, it maybe, for it was catalogued as the "Odontoglossum Crispum," after which the $1,380 received for one of T. M. Crook's raising, (Preston, England, August,) seems a bit tame.

Enthusiastic philatelists will not care to see stamps included under "freaks," but the fact remains that the average man in the street gasps a little when he reads of a penny "letter license" going for $200. That it was the Transvaal stamp issued in 1877 had little to do with its price; it embodied an error, (all such are doubly dear to the heart that harbors the collecting bacillus,) reading "Transvral." And $200 was called a bargain figure for it.

Postage stamps are goodish investments—sometimes. In March two collections were sold, one in London and the other in New York, their totals being $7,000 and $8,900.

$650,000 FOR EIGHT PICTURES.

In the great field of portraiture even the highest priced pacer and the rarest of rock crystals must yield place. Stock Exchange seats may hold their own, but not "Agra" diamonds. The year 1905 saw no more art sales than the average, but it has chronicled some decidedly above-the-average figures. To instance only eight canvases from the multitude that changed hands one finds his total figuring up to $650,025. The sales referred to were:

November—Ruben's "St. Roch," purchased by Andrew Carnegie	$300,000
July—Van Dyck's portrait of Charles I. and his Queen	85,000
October—Rembrandt's "Betrayal of Samson"	82,500
February—Millet's "The Laborer's Return"	70,600
June—Hogarth's "Assembly at Wanstead House"	13,750
June—Raeburn's portrait of a woman; bought by J. P. Morgan	45,675
July—Botticelli's "Virgin and Child, with Angels"	30,000
May—Romney's portrait of the Horsley children	22,500

CLIMBING THE LADDER.

The feature of picture sales perhaps of greatest interest to "rank outsiders" is the phenomenal advance often to be noted in the winning bids. In instance of this a single case will point the lesson. In 1860 a drawing by Lavreince, the eighteenth century French artist, changed hands for $20. In 1895 it was resold for $4,000, but, as if this of itself were not more than enough, it brought $6,600 last March.

Nor is such climbing the ladder of dollars and cents peculiar to paintings. There was sold an auk's egg in April which the then owner had procured for $25 in 1869. He surrendered it for $1,050. A Nanking vase, bought twenty years ago for $125, realized $29,500 in May, while a comfortable Plymouth Rock hen, after winning a pleasing little bunch of poultry show prizes, was sold for $750—and the point of the last item lies in the fact that the seller had bought the bird not half a day earlier for $10!

When Conversation Lagged.

They were at the theatre together, and conversation lagged. At last, during the entr'acte, he turned to her and ventured:

"Don't—don't you think the acoustics here are very bad?" She hesitated an instant.

"Why, no," she said a little uncertainly, "I don't smell anything."

Limedrop's Finish.

"So Smitherby married Limedrop's widow. Good friend of the husband's, wasn't he?"

"Yes, indeed. Said he couldn't bear to see him suffer, and, the widow being willing, euthanaziated him."

CAR BARNS IN 42D ST. MAKE BRILLIANT BLAZE

Four-Alarm $200,000 Fire the Biggest in Months.

LIFE MAY HAVE BEEN LOST

Gas Tanks in Danger, but Wind Helped the Firemen—Blaze Out in Less Than Two Hours.

The car barns at the foot of West Forty-second Street, covering half the block between the river front and Eleventh Avenue on the uptown side of the street, were destroyed early last night in the most spectacular fire the city has seen in several months. The flames leaped high in the air and lighted up the whole west side. Embers were carried by the breeze over the city as far as Fifth Avenue.

The loss is estimated by Fire Chief Croker at $200,000. Before the blaze was under control the entire section bounded by Forty-first and Forty-fourth Streets, Eleventh Avenue and the North River was menaced by the flames. The gas plants, both to the north and south of the burning structure, were saved only by the fortunate direction of the wind, light elsewhere, but fanned to a small gale by the flames themselves.

Long before the flames were under control a report had spread that a man had lost his life in the blaze. His name was not known, however, and there were only a few who had seen him.

As Engine Company 65 dashed up to the Forty-third Street side of the burning car barn some time after the first alarm was sounded two men shouted that they could see a man standing at the second floor window. Lieut. Gorgan of Engine Company 65 put up a ladder to the second floor and mounted it. He found no one at the window, but the men below cried that just as the Lieutenant reached the sill the man had fallen back into the flames. The fire, shooting from the window, quickly compelled Gorgan to beat a retreat to save his own life.

Who this supposed victim was and how he happened to stay so long in the building after the fire started no one could explain.

The location of the burning building alone was enough to prepare the firemen for the hardest kind of a fight. When the first engine arrived tenants were already leaving the four-story brick tenements in the neighborhood, carrying with them everything from frying pans to a bedspring.

Four alarms in all were sent in. They had the effect of calling out more fire officials than any blaze since the advent of the new city administration. Commissioner O'Brien arrived after the third alarm; so did Deputy Commissioner Hugh Bonner, one of the oldest and best-known fire fighters in the city. Chief Croker, according to his custom, arrived soon after the second alarm.

About the time part of the wall of the big car shed tumbled into Forty-second Street somebody started a story to the effect that the Commissioner and his Deputy were giving orders superseding those of Chief Croker. As a matter of fact Commissioner O'Brien viewed the blaze as though he were a private citizen, and when he saw that it was well under control went home again. Chief Croker took charge as usual, and Deputy Commissioner Bonner made a few suggestions to the commanders of the different companies, just because he couldn't help it.

The fire started at 7:45 o'clock in a trolley car which had just been run into the shed. Those in the building at the time said it was caused by the blowing out of a fuse or some defect in the insulation. Cotton waste and some oil in cans were responsible for the spread of the flames. There were forty-two cars and seven sweepers of the Forty-second Street and Thirty-fourth Street lines in the shed at the time.

For some reason everybody connected with the place became frightened and scattered. Somebody, however, had presence of mind enough to send in an alarm. Before the first engine arrived, no efforts having been made to check the blaze at its starting point, the whole building was in flames.

It was too late to enter the three-story building when the firemen got there. Flames were shooting from the roof and from the three exposed sides. A second alarm was sent in after a few minutes, and a third immediately after the second. Chief Croker sent in a fourth without hesitation as soon as he took note of the surrounding structures.

The last alarm called out every piece of fire-fighting apparatus between Fourteenth and Fifty-ninth Streets. The engines went clanging through the streets with idle Sunday evening crowds in their wakes. The reserves of the West Twentieth, West Thirtieth, West Thirty-seventh, and West Forty-seventh Street Police Stations were called out, and fire lines were stretched across West Forty-second Street at Eleventh Avenue and at Forty-first and Forty-fourth Streets. Crosstown cars were stalled at Tenth Avenue, and the West Shore Ferry passengers were turned back.

In the meantime the reserves were having their hands full with the tenants on Forty-second and Forty-third Streets, east of the burning buildings. Even those farthest from the fire in the tenements on the block were glad enough to get out, and fathers, mothers, and children, bearing their household goods, flocked into the streets, blocking them on the Eleventh Avenue line. Their possessions lined the sidewalks across the streets from the fire, and, once safe, they viewed the spectacle with a good deal of equanimity. Nearly all were negroes or Italians.

The big building of stone and brick, running across the block from Forty-second to Forty-third Street, furnished an

DRIVEN OUT BY WALL'S FALL.

Blasting and Rains Make 102d Street Retaining Wall Collapse.

The collapse of a retaining wall between East 102d and 103d Streets forced last night twenty-four families to move out of their apartments in short order, and will cause thirty or forty more to find new quarters with as little delay as they can.

Near Lexington Avenue 102d Street is much higher than 103d, and a retaining wall was built in the Winter to keep the yards of the former street from spreading themselves over those of the latter. A good deal of blasting has been going on in the neighborhood, and this, combined with the heavy rainfall of the last day or two, and the thawing out of the mortar in the retaining wall, caused the wall to collapse at about 7 o'clock last night at the back of 122 East 103d Street.

This is a double-decker six-story tenement, and was put up six months ago by Gruenstein & Mayer of 230 Grand Street. At the time the wall fell Mrs. Sarah Love, the janitress, was sitting in her room, while her daughter Annie was playing with her brother Benjamin and a friend, Helen Kunkel. There was a tremendous crash and a shower of stones came in through the window, shattering the glass and sashes.

No one was hurt, and Benjamin, who is only nine years old, at once rushed off to the East 104th Street Station and reported that the building was falling. Meanwhile Mrs. Love had fainted in her rocking chair, and the little girls, in spite of their own alarm, dragged her out into the hall and called for help. The other tenants were far too busy with their own terrors to pay any attention, and Annie and Helen between them managed to get Mrs. Love out into the street.

The reserves and Hook and Ladder Company 23 turned out at once. They found that the retaining wall for thirty feet had fallen. Its fall had undermined the back of the tenement house, and there was a fear that the rear wall itself would come down. The emergency gang of the Building Department was summoned and Capt. Tappen ordered all the families in 122 East 103d Street to move out. Two of them preferred to take chances and remain. A man called Smyth said he had no place to go to and was not going to budge, and a Jewish family did not credit the danger.

The Building Department set to work to prop up the rear wall of No. 122, but it is doubtful if they can save the house. Moreover, the ground behind the fallen retaining wall is so insecure that there is danger that all the back yards of that part of East 102d Street will slide into the yards of 103d Street. The houses from 119 to 127 East 102d Street are in danger of sliding down also, and it is probable that the thirty or forty families that inhabit them will be made to clear out.

E. B. VREELAND FOR LEADER.

Roosevelt's Choice to Succeed Odell, Says Congressman Wadsworth.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, March 4.—Congressman E. B. Vreeland of Cattaraugus will be the next Chairman of the Republican State Committee, Congressman J. W. Wadsworth of Genesee believes.

"I thought it was generally known that the President favored the selection of Mr. Vreeland," said Mr. Wadsworth, who dined with George Urban to-day. "He has so expressed himself publicly, and it is my belief that the selection will be made.

"Vreeland is a bright man, a shrewd, clean fellow with splendid ability."

"Won't the charge be made against him that he is a Standard Oil man, and that corporation influences are behind the appointment?" he was asked.

"Vreeland a Standard Oil Man?" asked the Congressman. "Why, they won't say that, and they can't, truthfully. He has no Standard Oil affiliations that I ever heard of."

"Is it not strange that the President should favor Vreeland at this time, after he has voted against the President's Rate bill?" was asked.

"Mr. Roosevelt evidently believes he is the man best suited for the place and favors him. I deem him a strong man."

"Is he regarded as an anti-Odell?"

"No. Therein lies a strong element of his strength. He has no factional differences and no bitterness."

Asked for an expression on the Albany situation the Congressman protested that, as he had just arrived from Washington, he knew nothing of the Albany situation.

WRECKS SALVATIONIST HOME.

Nitro-Glycerine Thrown Into Stove by Tramp Who Was Ejected.

Special to The New York Times.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., March 4.—Infuriated at being shut out of the building because of disorderly conduct an intoxicated tramp put nitro-glycerine in a stove and blew off the upper two stories of the four-story Salvation Army Hotel at Market and Sixth Streets, this morning.

Four white men applied for lodging late Saturday night, but before they could be assigned to quarters all became disorderly and raised such a disturbance that the Salvationists put them out by force. One of the men said as he was ejected that he always got even for such treatment, "good and plenty and right quick." The three others echoed his threats, but the officers paid practically no attention.

This morning one of the men who had been ejected was seen in the building, but he got out hurriedly before any one had a chance to speak. A few minutes later the explosion occurred. One man who was asleep on the third floor had part of one of his feet blown off. A detective arrested Charley Kenney this afternoon. He was identified as one of the men in the party that raised Saturday night's disturbance.

CHINESE PARTY HARMONIOUS.

Story of a Quarrel Among the High Commissioners Is Denied.

SEATTLE, March 4.—Chinese residents deny the story that there was a quarrel in the Imperial High Commission, now on the way to the East, and that because of it three members were left behind.

They state that the three members in question went to study the schools of Oregon and California. They were following the plan formed in Peking, and will rejoin the main party in the East.

A $1,000,000 STADIUM FOR COLUMBIA ATHLETES

Location for Athletic Field Along the Hudson River Front.

TO ERECT A WATER GATE

Plans Also Provide for Fields for the Use of Public Schools Athletic League.

Columbia is to have an athletic field that will be the largest and the most magnificent in the world. It is to be built right at the gates of the university and is to entail an expenditure of $1,000,000 or more to erect.

The ground on which it is to be built does not exist, but is to be reclaimed from the Hudson River. It will extend when completed from 116th Street to 120th Street, west of the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, out to the pier line.

A retaining wall is to be built at the extreme limit permitted by the United States Government, and the inclosure thus created will be filled in. On this will be erected three athletic fields, one for the use of the Columbia University, and two, on either side of this north and south, for the use of schoolboys in the Public Schools Athletic League and for a public playground. On the roof of the stands to surround Columbia's field will be erected recreation piers for the public. At least this is the big project outlined by the committee of the alumni that has the whole scheme of supplying Columbia's athletic needs in hand.

William Barclay Parsons, who is Chairman of the committee of three that has conceived this idea, said last night that the details of the plan had all been completed, and it had been placed in the hands of President Butler to be carried out. The first step will be to secure the consent of municipal authorities to use the land thus reclaimed. The great public benefit to be derived leads the committee to believe no difficulty will be met in securing this consent, as Columbia is to bear the entire expense of the undertaking. The question of raising the money will then be faced. While a million dollars is a big sum to raise, it is believed the wealthy alumni of the university will come to the aid of the institution, and that the money will be forthcoming in due course.

The idea is to do more than supply the athletic needs of the university students and of the city's school boys, but it is to provide an architectural structure there that will not only be a thing of beauty and an immense attraction from this viewpoint, but it is intended to erect on the river front a water gate, which shall afford an approach to the city, where it may welcome visiting dignitaries in a manner befitting the size and importance of the metropolis.

The plan is the one to which veiled reference has been made by the Columbia authorities for some months, ever since the students were peremptorily commanded to abandon football, in fact.

The movement is in charge of a committee of alumni of the university, consisting of William Barclay Parsons, George L. Rives, and D. Le Roy Dresser.

The plans for the structure have been drawn by another alumnus, Henry F. Hornbostel. They provide for an inclosure large enough to accommodate a quarter-mile running track and provide a baseball diamond and fields for other sports. Stands will be erected on three sides that will seat 35,000 people.

On the side of the field facing the river no stands are to be erected, but here is to be placed the water gate surmounting a front of masonry of artistic design and arrangement and useful for the provision of locker rooms for athletic teams and crews. The gate will lead into the inclosure, where may be accommodated a whole military brigade that may assemble to welcome distinguished visitors.

Besides the main field for Columbia's use, the whole plan contemplates two other fields to the north and south of it. Here may be laid out other baseball diamonds, running tracks, and tennis courts for the use of schoolboys. The cost of filling in the ground alone required to build these fields is estimated at no less than $400,000.

Another advantage accruing to the public from this scheme of the Columbia authorities is that on top of the roof covering the stands there may be erected a large and commodious recreation pier. This is contemplated, with the idea of relieving the crowded condition on the 130th Street pier, the only one uptown.

MOB ATTACKS EDITOR.

Free Fight Follows Anti-Catholic Lecture in Illinois.

Special to The New York Times.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., March 4.—The village of Washington, in Woodford County, is aroused over a series of anti-Catholic lectures by William Clark, an editor from Rock Island. It had been planned to give the final lecture to-morrow night and charge admission. Mutterings of the residents who were not in sympathy with his utterances had been heard throughout the week, and trouble had been anticipated.

The feeling culminated at the close of his final free lecture to-night, and when he emerged from the hall there was a rush for him by a mob of several hundred. The lecturer was well protected by his sympathizers, and a general fight ensued, in which many heads were punched and faces bruised. A shower of stones was thrown and numerous windows were broken. No one was seriously injured, however.

As soon as possible Clark was taken to a near-by livery stable and made his escape, apparently none the worse for the attack.

PRESIDENT ON HAPPINESS.

CHICAGO, March 4.—Mrs. Estelle Ryan Snyder of 235 115th Avenue, Maywood, is the possessor of a letter of congratulation from President Roosevelt regarding her first literary effort, which deals with the Western States. Last week she forwarded a copy of her book to President Roosevelt, asking him for his opinion. Saturday she received the following reply:

"A thousand thanks for your book. Stick to your ideas of home life, and happiness will be yours perennially.

DYNAMITE TERROR AT BOISE.

Over 600 Pounds of the Explosive Stolen—The Town Guarded.

BOISE, Idaho, March 4.—On the heels of Steve Adams's confession comes the news that between 600 and 800 pounds of dynamite and dynamite caps have been stolen at the Star powder house, located in the hills east of the city.

Last night employes of a hardware company, upon going to the powder house just beyond the Boise barracks, found that about 400 pounds of dynamite and caps had been stolen.

Gov. Gooding immediately had a hundred or more guards thrown over the city and especially around the penitentiary. These guards were placed because almost all of the men whose names have been mentioned in connection with the prosecution of the officers of the Western Federation of Miners hal received threatening letters, signed "Kneebone," the name alleged to have been adopted by the "Inner Circle" to strike terror to those whom they wished to frighten.

Armed men were also last night placed around the homes of Gov. Gooding, Special Prosecutor James H. Hawley, W. E. Borah, and a number of others.

The excitement attending the discovery of the theft mentioned was hardly passing away when it became known that all the other powder magazines in the near-by hills had been broken into. There are a half dozen powder magazines in the hills, and all are said to have been entered and powder stolen.

The circumstances surrounding the dynamite thefts are being as closely guarded as the alleged confessions of Orchard and Adams. The dynamite stolen is known as "Grade No. 1," which contains about 75 per cent. nitro-glycerine.

WANTS ROOSEVELT AT KIEL.

German Professor Then Would Have Kaiser Visit America.

BERLIN, March 4.—Prof. Albrecht Wirth of Munich contributes a signed article to Der Tag on the possibility of President Roosevelt and Emperor William exchanging visits. Prof. Wirth has connections with the Foreign Office and his suggestions therefore have interest.

"Congressman Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Longworth are expected in Berlin in May," he says. "This is not the first time that the President's daughter will have represented the United States diplomatically. Her journey to East Asia had an official character, which was expressed by her accompanying a member of the Cabinet.

"President Roosevelt himself is not permitted to leave American territory; but as an American warship is also American territory, as President Roosevelt has already proved in practice, why cannot the President give another example by visiting Kiel? Emperor William could then choose a return visit of the same form, going on a warship to waters near Washington. These visits would add much to the mutual friendship of the two countries."

HAS A MAD DOG CHAINED.

East Orange Physician Hopes to Learn Much About Rabies.

In order that he may observe and study every manifestation of hydrophobia, Dr. Arthur W. Smith of 18 Prospect Place, East Orange, has, securely chained up, a real mad dog. The animal has been ill for three days now, and Dr. Smith thinks about three more days will finish him.

The dog is a handsome terrier with a pedigree. It was bitten weeks ago by a wandering cur, and on Friday began to act strangely. It went out on a raid and killed fifteen chickens. Then it began to worry inanimate objects and was chained.

Developments of rabies are strongly marked. The dog has the characteristic yelping cry, spasmodic contraction of the throat muscles when it attempts to swallow water, and it attacks anything brought near it.

Dr. Smith says the dog will be violent by this morning, and he will make a careful study of the progress of the disease. He also says, without explaining the matter further, that the animal will not suffer and that if he finds its distress becoming too great he will at once kill it.

HIS GRIT SAVED A TRAIN.

Engineer Stuck to His Post When He Saw Landslide Just Ahead.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., March 4.—Running in excess of forty miles an hour, Lackawana passenger train No. 919, leaving Binghamton on the Syracuse division at 6 P. M., crashed into a landslide two miles above Lisle on Saturday evening. Charles Wilson, the engineer was slightly hurt.

The absence of fatalities in the accident was due to the coolness of the engineer, who stuck to the throttle when the headlight of the engine showed the mass of earth on the tracks ahead. Wilson shoved his air brake lever past the emergency notch and reversed his engine; but the momentum of the train was so great that when it crashed into the landslide every wheel left the tracks and the heavy locomotive and coaches pounded along the ties for over three hundred feet.

The collision unseated every passenger in the train, two being hurled the length of the coach, but no one suffered anything worse than slight contusions.

ENTHUSIASM IN PARIS FOR THE BRITISH KING

Edward VII. Has Long Talks with Fallieres and Rouvier.

AMERICA SUPPORTING FRANCE

Vote at Algeciras Not Only Shows the Feeling of the Powers, but Is a Check to Germany's Programme.

PARIS, March 4.—King Edward's visit to Paris is attracting great attention, enormous crowds cheering his every appearance in the streets to-day.

The cordiality of the greetings exchanged between the King and President Fallières when his Majesty made an official call at the Elysée Palace to-day was much remarked. The conversation between the two lasted half an hour. Later the President returned the call at the British Embassy, where a State dinner was given this evening at which President and Mme. Fallières and Premier and Mme. Rouvier were among the guests. There were no speeches at the dinner. After it King Edward, President Fallières, and M. Rouvier conversed for nearly an hour in the smoking room.

In the course of the day ex-Presidents Loubet and Casimir-Périer left their cards at the British Embassy. The King invited M. Loubet to dinner on Monday.

The voting at Algeciras yesterday on the proposition of Sir Arthur Nicolson, chief of the British delegation, to proceed to the immediate discussion of the Moroccan police questions gives great satisfaction here, showing, as it does, that France has ranged with her a large majority of the powers. The vote is regarded as showing that France is able to count upon the almost unbroken support of Europe. French officials have declared for some time that if a vote were possible it would give France a sweeping majority.

It appears that yesterday's division did not produce a recorded vote, yet the powers aligned themselves with sufficient precision to amount to a vote. All the French journals give the division in the form of a vote, the eight voting in the affirmative being France, Great Britain, Russia, Spain, Portugal, the United States, Italy, and Holland, and the negative three powers being Germany, Austria, and Morocco.

The semi-official Temps seems to accept the decision of the conference as a vote in favor of France's proposals, saying:

"The vote, though referring to a question of procedure, is valuable to us from more than one viewpoint. Not only have Great Britain, Spain, Russia, and the United States clearly adhered to our ideas, which was foreseen, but Italy, Belgium, Portugal, and Holland unhesitatingly recognized the loyalty of our proposition."

The result also affects the diplomatic status of the controversy. Germany wants to settle the bank question before that of the police, but France does not wish to grant concessions on the bank question until she is sure that Germany will make a reciprocal move concerning the police. Therefore, the decision of the conference to consider the police question requires that Germany shall say whether she is or is not prepared to change her attitude relative to the police. Germany's answer will thus determine whether France will yield on the bank question.

The indications are that if Germany refuses to give way regarding the police, France will not yield on the bank, thus accentuating the deadlock by carrying it into the open conference.

WILMINGTON, Del., March 4.—Lemuel Hitch, aged 62 years, passenger conductor on the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Railroad for twenty-eight years, was found dead in bed to-day by his daughter. Daniel C. Hitch, aged 57 years, his brother, was buried this afternoon. John R. Hitch, a third brother, younger than the others, and a freight conductor on the Delaware division, is seriously injured at his home here. He was hurt while attempting to board a train at the Edgemoor Delaware yards on the railroad.

The family who have been visited by this series of fatalities is known throughout Delaware.

TOWN OF TACLOBAN BURNED.

Capital of Leyte Was the Fifth Largest City in the Philippines.

MANILA, March 4.—Tacloban, capital of the Island of Leyte, has been destroyed by fire. The financial loss is reported to be $600,000.

Tacloban was the fifth largest city of the islands, and was situated in an important hemp district. A number of warehouses were destroyed.

Government assistance will be rushed.

The population of Tacloban in 1903 was 11,948. The city had an active trade with Manila.

BURGLAR LOST HIS COUNT.

Chauffeur Admits Entering Eight Houses—Not Sure About Others.

SCRANTON, Penn., March 4.—Edward Griffiths, a chauffeur, a member of a respected family, was arrested last night on suspicion of being the lone burglar who, since Dec. 1, has ransacked fifteen residences. To-day he broke down and confessed eight of the burglaries.

He said he might have been guilty of the other depredations, but he was not sure, as some of the houses were selected at random and he did not know the names of the occupants. He will have his memory refreshed to-morrow. His detection was effected through attempts to dispose of some old coins stolen from one of the houses.

800 PERSONS ADRIFT ON ICE.

It is Feared Finnish Fishermen and Families Will Perish.

HELSINGFORS, March 4.—It is feared that 800 fishermen and their families who are afloat on the ice in the Gulf of Finland are doomed to perish.

A fortnight ago about 1,000 persons were fishing when the ice parted and was driven by a storm into the Baltic Sea. Later the ice split, the wind changed, and yesterday a block on which there were 200 persons came ashore at Fredericksham.

The fate of the others is unknown.

WON AT LONGWORTH WEDDING

Couple Who Attended White House Wedding Announce Betrothal.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 4.—The engagement of Quincy A. Shaw, second, of this city and Miss Nannie Mitchell, announced to-day from Polm Beach, is additionally romantic because the betrothal of the young people, who are hardly out of their teens, dates from the Longworth-Roosevelt nuptials, which they both attended.

Mr. Shaw is the elder of Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw's two sons.

CZAR PARDONS SCHMIDT.

Leader of Sevastopol Mutineers Was Willing to Die for Freedom.

ODESSA, March 4.—It is announced from St. Petersburg that Emperor Nicholas has pardoned ex-Lieut. Schmidt, who commanded the Russian cruiser Otchakoff during the mutiny at Sevastopol and who was recently sentenced to death by a court martial.

Addressing the court before sentence was passed upon him Schmidt said:

"I will believe that my pillory will be the frontier post separating old slavish Russia from new free Russia. If I could buy Russian freedom with the most terrible death I would die smiling."

VILLAGE FALLS INTO A LAKE.

Inhabitants of Tavernola, Warned by Loud Roaring, Escape.

ROME, March 4.—The village of Tavernola, built on the perpendicular cliffs above Lake Iseo, in the Province of Brescia, was almost entirely destroyed this morning by the rocks suddenly giving way, apparently because the lake had eaten into the base of the cliffs.

Fortunately the diaster was preceded by a loud roaring sound which alarmed the 1,000 inhabitants, who had time to make their escape. One fisherman was killed.

About 200 feet of rock and the houses on it were swallowed up by the lake.

MAY NEED TRANSPORTS.

Government Negotiating with the Great Northern Company.

SEATTLE, Washington, March 4.—The Great Northern Steamship Company, it was said to-day, has been requested by the War Department to name a price for the chartering of the steamers Minnesota and Dakota to be used as transports.

The company has replied, naming a price which is satisfactory, the report says.

ST. PAUL, March 4.—Louis W. Hill, Vice President of the Great Northern Railroad, when the dispatch relative to the Government's request for a charter price on the Great Northern steamers Minnesota and Dakota was shown to him to-night, declared that no negotiations looking to the chartering of the vessels had been in progress.

PROHIBITS STUDENTS' WAR.

Cornell Faculty's Conditions for Annual Freshman Banquet.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., March 4.—The Cornell Faculty has declared war on the annual freshman banquet, with all its attendant warfare between the sophomores and freshmen. It is the intention to abolish the present custom even to the extent of forbidding any kind of a gathering. President Schurman said yesterday:

"The Faculty will not tolerate interference with university work preceding the freshman banquet or with the persons of freshmen by sophomores, and has requested the President to prohibit the banquet unless assurances are given by the students that it will not be accompanied by any disturbance on their part."

Great indignation is expressed by the students, and there are many who urge that no attention be given to the new rule.

SEABOARD'S OFFICES BURNED.

Valuable Records Destroyed in Sunday Blaze at Portsmouth, Va.

PORTSMOUTH, Va., March 4.—The general office building of the Seaboard Air Line Railway here was destroyed by a fire which started at 8:30 o'clock this morning. Only the walls were left standing. Many valuable records and official papers of the road were burned. The building cost about $50,000 and the loss is estimated at one-half that amount. President Barr, whose office was in the building, and Vice-President F. F. Cost, of the Seaboard, reached Portsmouth from a Cuban trip just as the fire was under control. Many river tugs and the Government fire apparatus from the navy yard were called out. There were 325 men employed in the buildings, but all were away over Sunday. It is probable that the building will be replaced with a much larger one, although there is some talk of the general offices being moved to Norfolk.

FIRST CARMANIA BABY.

Born in Midocean Wednesday—Not Named After the Liner.

The first baby to be born on board the new Cunard turbine liner Carmania came into the world in midocean last Wednesday. The baby is a boy, the son of Russian parents, who were among the 1,001 steerage passengers arriving here on the Carmania yesterday. The saloon passengers made up a purse of $60 and presented it to the parents. Strange to say, the boy was not christened Carmania. His parents decided that when he grew up he might object.

REFORM HOUSE PARTY SPLITS ON SOCIALISM

J. G. Phelps Stokes and Mr. Hunter Object to the Party Tag.

MILLENNIUM PLAN LACKING

Visitors at Noroton Agreeing as to Evils, Dispute Remedies—Plea of One $20 Wage Earner.

Special to The New York Times.

NOROTON, Conn., March 4.—The house party, with social reformers of various shades of belief for guests, which had been in progress at Brick House, the Summer home of Anson Phelps Stokes on Collender's Point since Friday, broke up to-night. Though, according to Robert Hunter, the settlement worker, who issued the invitations and was the host, "every topic under Heaven was discussed," he admitted as the last of the guests left that no practical result had been achieved by the conference. This was ascribed by such of the participants as would discuss the events of the gathering to the uncompromising attitude of a group of "practical" Socialists who attended.

Both Mr. Hunter and J. G. Phelps Stokes, his brother-in-law, who assisted Mr. Hunter in doing the honors at the house of Mr. Stokes's father, took exception to the characterization of the house party as a Socialistic gathering. They both denied that it had been arranged with any view of reorganizing the Socialist Party in this country or anything remotely akin to any such plan.

From participants in the conference, however, it was learned that Socialism was the topic around which the discussion mainly revolved, and that in the talk on that subject a very decided clash of opinion developed.

J. G. Phelps Stokes declared:

"A grave wrong has been committed in characterizing this gathering as a Socialistic conference and classing all the men who attended it as Socialists. The fact is that Socialism, in a political sense, was not discussed at all, and that only a small minority of the guests were of that political faith. The object were merely to bring together men who have accomplished something along the line of political and social reform throughout the country and men who have written on these subjects and to obtain an interchange of their views with an idea of seeing how we can profit by their experience.

"We discussed graft in politics, the relations between capital and labor, and a great many other topics, but not Socialism per se. We sought to analyze existing industrial conditions, for the purpose of learning whether there existed oppression of the workers. If there is such oppression and any wrongs, of course, every fair-minded man would like to see them removed by the best means available. That is the spirit that actuated our discussion, which was most informal. There is no idea of forming any organization or publishing any magazine. These subjects were not even touched upon."

"What direct results were accomplished by the conference, if any?" Mr. Stokes was asked.

"Men who are sincere and have the welfare of their fellow-men at heart could not well meet to discuss how to best attain this end without bringing about some good. The results may not be noticeable at once, but they will be later, I have no doubt."

CAUSE OF ITS SECRECY.

Mr. Stokes said he at all times had been willing to throw the doors wide and invite the press to attend, and that in screening it with secrecy he had simply heeded the wishes of some of the guests, who did not like to have it known that they had been identified with the conference.

Leonard D. Abbott, a magazine writer, one of the five Simon-Pure Socialists who attended said:

"I do not know that there was any specified purpose in the house party, beyond that of bringing together for discussion a lot of persons of congenial tastes. If there was any other purpose Mr. Hunter did not divulge it. I do not think any practical results will come from this conference, any more than there came from the conference held a year ago at the Stokes Summer home. The elements represented in the gathering were absolutely infusible.

"There was a decided clash of opinion between the practical specialists who attended and the social reformers representing other shades of opinion. The Socialists were uncompromising in their attitude because they felt, as they explained, that they were right, both from the point of view of logic and of social ideals.

"There are a whole lot of men who are toying with socialism. They feel in their hearts that they should be with us, but not having fought the thing out with themselves, and not being idealists in the full sense of that term, they do not care to stand up and be counted.

"The Socialist movement in this country is too crass—there is hardly enough respectability, strength, and intellect in it to attract men like Mr. Stokes. Five years from now there will be a procession of demi-semi-Socialists declaring themselves Socialists just like young Patterson, when they discover that there is no middle way. Mr. Hunter is more of a Socialist than any of his set."

"They wanted to reform everything, from the United States Senate to the Street Cleaning Department, and they wanted to do it right away, and apparently expected to accomplish it through the expression of fine sentiments, which are all very well in their way," said another participant who would not permit his name to be used.

Regarding the existence of the evils themselves, there was practical unanimity. The guests, it was said, were a unit in their desire to see them eradicated and the millennium hastened. It was when the means to usher in the new era came up for discussion that the clash occurred.

Senator Everett Colby of New Jersey, who fought the bosses over there and won out, had made a long speech, in which he had pointed out what he, as a Republican, had accomplished, and said that the Republican Party could do the same thing in other parts of the country. Senator Colby was outspoken in declaring that he had no use for Socialism, though he had the most sincere admiration for men of different opinions as long as they were honest, had the welfare of the people at heart, and the courage of their convictions.

Mr. Hunter, who acted as moderator of the gathering, after David Graham Phillips, the magazine writer, had made a few remarks, called upon E. J. Ridgway of Everybody's Magazine to give his views. Mr. Ridgway said that, between the many conflicting opinions that were being expressed, he was at sea and would like enlightenment.

It was then that Morris Hilquit, the Socialist orator of the East and one of the National leaders of the movement, got up and made a speech, which was described by some of the participants as the feature of the conference both for eloquence and elucidation of Socialist doctrines. Mr. Hilquit pointed out that the Socialist Party had the machinery for the fight against political corruption and every form of injustice, if only the men of intellect and influence who, down in their hearts knew that Socialism was the only right way out, would be less afraid of being called Socialists and would take the step across the line.

Mr. Hilquit was followed in similar vein by Victor L. Berger, the Socialist leader of Milwaukee, who has built up a strong following in his home city and expects to be elected Mayor at the next election.

At this point J. G. Phelps Stokes took the floor. He spoke long and earnestly, giving reasons why he could not become a Socialist in the sense in which that word is used politically. He said he had a profound belief in the rights of property, and that he thought it would be a misfortune and a wrong for the State to take over the industries of the country according to the Socialist programme, except in cases where private administration of property or industries worked an injustice to the public or the workers. Mr. Stokes held that the just employer should be left alone.

According to one of those present, Artuhr Brisbane got the floor after some other speakers had given widely varying views for the betterment of society.

"It seems to me," Mr. Brisbane was reported as saying, "that we are all at sea with the exception of the Socialist speakers, who seem to have reason and logic on their side, a fixed programme for future work, and beacon lights to guide them. Mr. Berger's speech had the ring of a Martin Luther."

As the Socialists and the other reformers got deeper into the subject the discussion grew warmer. One man with Socialistic tendencies, when he got the floor, sent a sweeping glance around the drawing room where the conference was held—a glance which took in paintings, tapestries, and costly hangings, carved furniture and liveried servants, and said:

"I am earning $30 a week, and I've got to support a family and be a social reformer on that. It is only reasonable that there should be a difference of opinion regarding ways and means to bring about the betterment of society."

MUST WIN BY BALLOTS.

Some of the guests had been invited because they were supposed to be men with a practical understanding of human nature and political conditions. Some of them were outspoken. One of them said:

"It is all very well anad proper to have lofty sentiments and ideals. We cannot do without them, but if we are to do any good we must bend our efforts to winning political victories. And such victories are never won by mere talk. They are won by votes. We must go out and get votes, just as the existing political parties do. We must win by ballots and see that they are put in the ballot boxes, and after they are put there we must see that they are counted, and counted right."

There were only five practical Socialists in attendance, but it was said that they dominated the discussion. Besides Mr. Abbott, this list included Mr. Hilquit, Mr. Berger, John Spargo, author of "The Cry of the Children," and Gaylord Wilshire, editor of Wilshire's Magazine.

Mr. Hunter occupied the middle ground. Prior to the last campaign Mr. Hunter sympathized with the Socialists to the extent of sending them a $25 contribution to help in the municipal campaign. That was before the Municipal Ownership League had been organized.

When that body appeared in the field with Mr. Hunter's brother-in-law, J. G. Phelps Stokes, as its candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, Mr. Hunter appeared as a speaker at their meetings, and incurred the displeasure of the Socialists. After a red-hot discussion by the Socialist Campaign Committee that body decided to return the contribution of Mr. Hunter with a communication saying that they had no need of the money of any man whose heart was not wholly with them.

It was learned yesterday that the social reform house parties had their genesis in a small and select social reform luncheon club which used to meet once a week in a Fourteenth Street restaurant, but now has quarters of its own. Arthur Brisbane, Ernest Crosby, David Graham Phillips, ex-Senator John Ford, Mr. Stokes, and Lincoln Steffens, with many others, it is said, are members of this club. Jack London goes there too, when he is in town.

Only about half a dozen of the forty guests who had been invited remained at the Stokes home over night. They were Senator Colby, Victor L. Berger, Mr. Ridgway, William Kent of Chicago, Mr. Phillips and George Frederick Williams of Massachusetts. Finley Peter Dunne who won fame for his Dooley dialogues came up for luncheon to-day.

Mr. Hunter, before leaving, said that about forty invitations had been sent out about two months ago. He expressed regret that many of those invited had not come. These included Gov. Folk of Missouri and Senator La Follette of Wisconsin. Joseph Medill Patterson remained away to-day.

"I wish to explain," said Mr. Hunter, "that the invitation to Mr. Patterson, who is a friend of mine, was sent long before he had declared for Socialism. I had no idea he was inclined that way. I knew that he was in favor of municipal ownership."

NEW REVOLVER WAS LOADED.

Woman, Examining Husband's Purchase, Kills Her Sister.

GETTYSBURG, Penn., March 4.—Mrs. Isaac H. Werkert accidentally killed her sister, Miss Eliza Weaver, last night while examining a revolver purchased by her husband. She thought it was not loaded.

A bullet entered Miss Weaver's brain, and Mrs. Werkert is in a serious condition from the shock.

STATE PRISON POPULATION.

Totalled 12,584 at Last Count—Commission's Recommendations.

ALBANY, March 4.—The State Prison Commission's annual report, made public to-night, shows that the total prison population of the State on October 1, 1905, was: State prisons, 3,452; reformatories for males, 1,656; houses of refuge, women, 480; penitentiaries, 2,227; county jails, 4,769. Total, 12,584.

The recommendation include: Amendments to the indeterminate sentence and parole law relating to State prisons, so as to embrace within its mandatory provisions other classes of offenders than those specified in the present law, and so as to require that the difference between the minimum and maximum sentence shall not in any case be less than one year; the establishment of a State Reformatory for male misdemeanants and a better enforcement of the law requiring jail prisoners to be separately confined and those serving sentence to be systematically employed.

PROUD FATHER FALLS DEAD.

'Twas the Happiest Moment of His Life, He Had Just Said.

There was no prouder father in all New York than Charles Davine, a young upholsterer, who lived at 168 East One Hundred and Twentieth Street, when he learned three days ago that he had a tiny daughter. He fairly bubbled over with joy and decided that the event demanded celebration.

He sent invitations to all his friends to come to dinner last night, and when they had assembled he brought out the baby girl from the adjoining room, where she was resting beside the mother, and passed her around for inspection.

"I tell you," he said, "a man ought to be mighty thankful when he is blessed with a little one. I'm happier than I ever was in all my life."

The baby was taken back to her mother, and Davine returned to his guests. As he entered the room in which they were seated he suddenly put his hand to his heart and fell forward on his face. Policeman Donnelly of the East 126th Street Station was called in and summoned an ambulance from the Harlem Hospital. The surgeon in charge said that Davine had been stricken with heart failure, and that he was dead when he fell.

BOULDER KILLS AN ENGINEER.

Rolls from a Hillside on His Train—Fireman Does Not Hear It.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 4.—Albert French, engineer on the West Newton express of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, was fatally crushed to-night by a boulder which rolled down a steep hillside which hangs over the tracks. The train was running forty miles an hour.

The fireman did not hear the crash or witness the accident. When the train failed to slow up as station lights flashed into sight he crossed the cab to learn what was wrong. He found the engineer dying in his seat, his hand vainly trying to seize the lever and shut off the steam.

The train was run back to this city. French died an hour later in Mercy Hospital.

Coroner Stops Girl's Funeral.

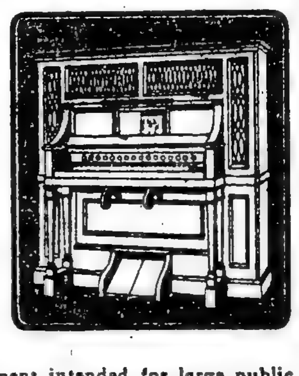
Coroner Harburger is investigating the death of nineteen-year-old Rachel Bennett, who died yesterday at the home of her father, Aaron Bennett, 172 Clinton Street. The attending physician, Dr. Lichtenstein of 235 Henry Street, refused to sign a burial certificate. The girl's father and two brothers declared that death was due to tuberculosis, but the Coroner found nothing at all to indicate this. He has ordered an autopsy.

"The greatest music in the world has been written for the Orchestra."

The Facts About

The Orchestrelle

1. The Orchestrelle is a musical instrument a little larger than an upright piano.
2. You do not have to be a musician or know anything about music in order to play it—and play it well.
3. It is called "The Home Orchestra" because it brings into the home the great music that has been written for the orchestra, with its wide range of coloring and tonal contrasts. In this respect it goes far beyond the effects that can be obtained from a piano.
4. The performer uses stops to control the different tonal effects, these stops being plainly labelled "violin," "trombone," "flute," "oboe," etc.



5. The actual sounding of the notes is done by a perforated roll, as in the Pianola.
6. This perforated roll is plainly marked with the orchestral directions (taken direct from the composer's score) so that the unskilled performer knows exactly when to call upon the strings, the reeds, the horns, etc.
7. The Orchestrelle is not an instrument intended for large public halls, but is specially voiced for the drawing-room or music-room of average size.
8. While the Orchestrelle can be played at once, by anyone, it is possible to greatly improve in one's playing of it. It therefore furnishes a fascinating study of which one does not tire, since an endless variety of readings of a composition can be given.
9. The price of the Orchestrelle ranges from $600 to $3500. It is purchasable on moderate monthly payments.

We have published some very interesting literature about this unique instrument and its possibilities which any one can have upon request.

POLICE HUSTLE CROWD AWAITING MARK TWAIN

Bungle at the Majestic Theatre Angers Y. M. C. A. Men.

WOULDN'T OPEN THE DOORS

Mr. Clemens Gives Some Advice About the Treatment of Corporations and Talks About Gentlemen.

Members of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association found that entering the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon to hear an address by Mark Twain had a close resemblance to a football match. No one was injured, but for a few minutes the police were hustling the crowd backward and forward by sheer force, a mounted man was sent to push his way through the thickest of the press and the jam was perilous.

The doors of the theatre should have been opened at 3 o'clock, and about three hundred persons were there at that time. It was an orderly crowd of yaung men with a sprinkling of elderly ones, but Capt. Daly of the West Forty-seventh Street Station would not allow them to be admitted until he had summoned the reserves. It took twenty minutes for these to arrive and every moment the crush grew greater. Still there was no disorder and the police as they formed into line had to face nothing more dangerous than a little good-humored chaff.

The crowd was ranged in a rough column facing the main doors of the lobby. The Young Men's Christian Association authorities came out several times and asked the Captain to allow the doors to be opened.

"If you do it, I'll take away my men and there'll be a lot of people hurt or killed," he replied. "I know how to handle crowds."

Then he proceeded to handle the crowds. He tried to swing the long solid line up against the southwestern side of Columbus Circle and force them in by the side entrance of the lobby, instead of the one they faced. First he sent a mounted man right through the column. The patrolmen followed and in a moment the orderly gathering was hustled and thrust in all directions.

Capt. Daly's next manoeuvre was to open the side door. The crowd surged up, but he had them pushed back, and closed the door again. The crowd was utterly bewildered. Then the Young Men's Christian Association authorities opened one-half of the door on their own responsibility. Through this narrow passage the crowd squeezed. The plate glass in the half that was closed was shattered to atoms, and the men surged forward. A few coats were torn, but in spite of the way in which they had been handled everybody kept his temper. If there had been any disorderly element present nothing could have avoided serious accidents. In the end all but 500 gained admission.

Hold Police Responsible.

At the opening of the meeting, the Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani, the Chairman, said: "The management desires to disclaim all responsibility for what has happened. [Cheers.] The matter was taken out of their hands by the police. [Hisses.] We wanted to open the doors earlier, but our lords and masters, the police, took the matter into their own hands and settled it in their own way. [Hisses.] You have been accustomed long enough to being brutally treated by the police, and I do not see why you should mind it. [A voice: "You're right."] Some day you will take matters into your own hands and will decide that the police shall be the servants of the citizens."

At the end of the meeting, Charles F. Powlison, Secretary of the West Side Branch, stated he had been asked to submit a resolution condemning the action of the police, but it had been decided it was better not to do so.

Mark Twain was introduced as a man "well worth being clubbed to hear." He was greeted with a storm of applause that lasted over a minute.

"I thank you for this signal recognition of merit," he said. "I have been listening to what has been said about citizenship. You complain of the police. You created the police. You are responsible for the police. They must reflect you, their masters. Consider that before you blame them.

"Citizenship is of the first importance in a land where a body of citizens can change the whole atmosphere of politics, as has been done in Philadelphia. There is less graft there than there used to be. I was going to move to Philadelphia, but it is no place for enterprise now.

"Dr. Russell spoke of organization. I was an organization once myself for twelve hours, and accomplished things I could never have done otherwise. When they say 'Step lively,' remember it is not an insult from a conductor to you personally, but from the President of the road to you, an embodiment of American citizenship. When the insult is flung at your old mother and father, it shows the meanness of the omnipotent President, who could stop it if he would.

Mark Twain Got the Stateroom.

"I was an organization once. I was traveling from Chicago with my publisher and stenographer—I always travel with a bodyguard—and engaged a stateroom on a certain train. For above all its other conveniences the stateroom gives the privilege of smoking. When we arrived at the station the conductor told us he was sorry the car with our stateroom was left off. I said: 'You are under contract to furnish a stateroom on this train. I am in no hurry. I can stay here a week at the road's expense. It'll have to pay my expenses and a little over.'

"Then the conductor called a grandee, and, after some argument, he went and bundled some meek people out of the stateroom, told them something not strictly true, and gave it me. About 11 o'clock the conductor looked in on me, and was very kind and winning. He told me he knew my father-in-law—it was much more respectable to know my father-in-law than me in those days. Then he developed his game. He was very sorry the car was only going to Harrisburg. They had telegraphed to Harrisburg, Pittsburg, San Francisco, and couldn't get another car. He threw himself on my mercy. But to him I only replied:

"'Then you had better buy the car.'

"I had forgotten all about this, when some time after Mr. Thomson of the Pennsylvania heard I was going to Chicago again, and wired:

"'I am sending my private car. Clemens cannot ride on an ordinary car. He costs too much.'"

Definition of a Gentleman.

Mark Twain went on to speak of the man who left $10,000 to disseminate his definition of a gentleman. He denied that he had ever defined one, but said if he did he would include the mercifulness, fidelity, and justice the Scripture read at the meeting spoke of. He produced a letter from William Dean Howells, and said:

"He writes he is just 69, but I have known him longer than that. 'I was born to be afraid of dying, not of getting old,' he says. Well, I'm the other way. It's terrible getting old. You gradually lose things, and become troublesome. People try to make you think you are not. But I know I'm troublesome.

"Then he says no part of life is so enjoyable as the eighth decade. That's true. I've just turned into it, and I enjoy it very much. 'If old men were not so ridiculous'—why didn't he speak for himself? 'But,' he goes on, 'they are ridiculous, and they are ugly.' I never saw a letter with so many errors in it. Ugly! I was never ugly in my life! Forty years ago I was not so good-looking. A looking glass then lasted me three months. Now I can wear it out in two days.

"'You've been up in Hartford burying poor old Patrick. I suppose he was old, too,' says Mr. Howells. No, he was not old. Patrick came to us thirty-six years ago—a brisk, lithe young Irishman. He was as beautiful in his graces as he was in his spirit, and he was as honest a man as ever lived. For twenty-five years he was our coachman, and if I were going to describe a gentleman in detail I would describe Patrick.

"At my own request I was his pallbearer with our old gardener. He drove me and my bride so long ago. As the little children came along he drove them, too. He was all the world to them, and for all in my house he had the same feelings of honor, honesty, and affection.

"He was 60 years old, ten years younger than I. Howells suggests he was old. He was not so old. He had the same gracious and winning ways to the end. Patrick was a gentleman, and to him I would apply the lines:

So may I be courteous to men, faithful to friends,
True to my God, a fragrance to the path I trod.

When inquiries were made last night at the West Side Branch as to whether a complaint of the action of the police would be made by the association to Commissioner Bingham, it was said to be improbable that any official action would be taken.

HONOR ROBERT EMMET.

O'Neil Ryan Principal Speaker at Cain-na-Gael Meeting.

It looked bad for England last night at the Majestic Theatre, where the Clan-Na-Gael of New York City had gathered a big crowd to celebrate the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of the birth of Robert Emmet. A violent burst of applause hailed O'Neil Ryan of St. Louis, the orator of the occasion, when at the climax of an impassioned speech he cried:

"God's curse upon England, and give us strength to strike her down!"

A long set of resolutions was enthusiastically adopted which said that no concession has ever been granted to Ireland by England except through force; that Irish freedom can be gained only by physical force; that England is now down to a low point of weakness, her army being unfit and her navy in decay; that Ireland has 20,000,000 of its people scattered over the earth who command a great deal of moral, intellectual, and physical resources, and that the present Irish Parliamentary Party is undeserving of confidence or support.

Telegrams were read by the Clan-na-Gael Secretary from similar meetings in Buffalo, Boston, Washington, St. Louis, Chicago, and other places, which seemed, so far as could be made out from the brief dispatches in some cases, to voice practically the same sentiments.

Though admission to the theatre cost money, yet the green-and-gold playhouse was filled to the limit. The meeting was scheduled to start at 8 o'clock. By 7:30 o'clock the entrance was jammed. The theatre was decorated throughout with the green and gold flag of Ireland and the Stars and Stripes of America. Many Judges sat upon the stage with the orators. William Temple Emmet, a great nephew of the Irish patriot, presided.

There were fourteen numbers on the programme, eleven of which were Irish songs. "The Emigrant's Lament," a sad tenor solo by James Brady, stormed the house.

Judge Ryan was down to speak on "Robert Emmet." He began his oration by summarizing the various movements for Irish freedom. He took occasion to say that the Irish are by nature orators, but that the home country needs men of action more; that the Irish in America capture a number of little local offices and are reputed to be great politicians, but that Ireland needs much more the services of statesmen.

"If we had an Irishman as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations at Washington," he said, "he would be worth more to the cause of Irish Republicanism than are ten thousand city office holders."

The speaker declared that Ireland should be what America is—a republic; and that she has a right to win it by physical force. "We know that an insurrection in Ireland any time soon would be a crime against Ireland," Judge Ryan said in his conclusion, but he stuck to his declaration that physical force must be used to free his country; and he emphasized his remarks thus:

"England is on the down grade, and she now has to fawn upon America for a good part of her strength. Let her go—let her go on down to a place it would not be polite to name."

The resolutions adopted at the beginning of the meeting prophesied that an Irish republic would soon be realized, and the speaker voiced the same prophecy. He concluded his oration by bitterly complaining of the action of John Redmond in handing over to the Liberal Party in the recent English elections the Irish influence, without exacting pledges for Irish home rule.

STAGE IRISHMAN HISSED.

Boston Comedian Angers Ancient Order of Hibernians.

BOSTON, March 4.—Under the auspices of the Suffolk County Branch, Ancient Order of Hibernians, a mass meeting was held in the Majestic Theatre to-day in commemoration of the birth of Robert Emmet. Speeches eulogistic of Emmet's lift and work were delivered by James E. Dolan, national president of the organization, and Mayor John F. Fitzgerald.

A sensational feature of the celebration was the outburst of wrath on the part of the audience when a comedian who had been engaged to sing Irish songs, essayed to give "a correct imitation of an Irishman coming down the street behind a St. Patrick's day parade." The audience immediately began to hiss, and cries of "Leave the stage" were heard. The comedian apologized, and explained that he intended no insult.

In prefacing their addresses, both Mr. Dolan and Mayor Fitzgerald emphatically denounced the "stage" Irishman.

ARCHBISHOP ON THEATRES.

Finds in Theatregoing Signs of Decadence Like That of Ancient Rome.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, March 4.—Modern theatregoing is a sign of decadence like that which afflicted ancient Rome at the time the people sold their liberties, their birthrights, and their glories for "bread and games," Archbishop Glennon declared today. He delivered a sermon against salacious plays and books and counseled his auditors to limit their love for the drama, in the Lenten season at least, to the contemplation of the tragedy of the Cross.

Significance was found in the fact that the utterance followed closely Mme. Bernhardt's appearance here in French plays of the type of "Sapho" and "Camille." In part the Archbishop said:

"You avoid the cancer hospital and the pesthouse, while night by night you rush madly to enjoy the sad procession of moral lepers exposed amid the plaudits of the multitude, the cancerous growths, the deadly vices, that destroy the souls of men.

"Roué and demi-mondaine are depicted with startling realism, and men's depravity and women's shamelessness are held forth as the expressions of genius and fit means for entertaining a Christian people.

"You say, even still there is genius back of it all. Yes, perhaps. But it is only the genius that gilds the tomb, the phosphorus that accompanies the last stages of putrefaction. No, we want honor, virtue, truth, in our hearts and homes. We want these also in our books and theatres."

amazing spectacle to the onlookers between 8 and 9 o'clock. The flames illuminated the entire west side water front as they leaped high into the air, and the sparks streamed in cascades for blocks across the city.

The only danger to human life at this time was immediately under the building to the east of the car barns on Forty-second Street. This is a brick building, four stories high, but the rooms are so low that the four stories do not breast the three stories of the car barns.

The building is variously known as the Terminal Café, the Annex Hotel, and Wagner & Fay's. The numbers are 647 and 649 West Forty-second Street, and indicate a big saloon on the ground floor.

Roundsman Dunn of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station led a squad of men into the building where, he said later, he understood some eighty people who did not care much about the fire were housed, and drove them out. Lines of hose were dragged through the halls later, and the blaze was attacked from adjoining roofs.

The tenements from the hotel to Eleventh Avenue (more than half a block) were all vacant by this time. Similar scenes were being enacted on the Forty-third Street side, where from 624 to 632 the little brick tenements of the old-fashioned type were largely tenanted by employes of the American Ice Company.

While the tenements were being cleared the car sheds had become a furnace, and a great canopy of flame enveloped the entire building. Through the windows cars were seen to crumble until they collapsed and disappeared.

Hundreds of firemen manned the hose outside, but the water pressure appeared to be low, and no progress was made. Several lengths of hose burst in the street, and thin streams spurted vertically to a height of twenty or thirty feet.

Each mishap of this kind was the signal for a renewal of activity on the part of the firemen. They fell flat on the hose in groups of six and ten, and by main force apparently checked the wasteful leaks.

On the south side of Forty-second Street the most serious anxiety was manifested. The Consolidated Gas Company's plant extends the whole length of the block from Eleventh Avenue to the piers, and for fear the wind would shift the most strenuous efforts were made to avoid a fresh outbreak of the flames.

Naphtha stored by hundreds of gallons was drawn off and stored elsewhere where it was safe. The same precautions were taken in the gas plant in West Forty-fourth Street, where some of the sparks did alight, but were extinguished before they had a chance to communicate with any of the inflammable material stored there.

While the attention of the spectators was distracted in a measure by the auxiliary dangers, the car sheds were being rapidly wrecked. Sullen explosions of small volume indicated that the flames had reached the closets where cans of oil were stored, and these were followed by the shooting aloft of ribbonlike flames of various hues from the main body of the fire.

These explosions were signals for a general stampede on the part of the crowds of spectators which had made their way through the fire lines. These spectators were entitled to witness the spectacle for the reason that all had police cards or fire badges. Their presence moved Deputy Fire Commissioner to remarks. He said:

"I can't imagine what all these people are doing here, or where they got their badges. I never saw so many people inside fire lines before. It is simply an outrage. They plainly have no business here, and if you ask them why they are here they can't give a legitimate reason.

"The fire badges and police cards are all right for the newspaper men, who are entitled to be here. This matter should be looked into. Mere spectators who do nothing but look on plainly hamper the firemen in their work."

While the Deputy Commissioner was talking, the fire, which was then threatening not only the whole block but adjoining properties, suddenly changed its aspect. The south wall, nearest the river, suddenly fell into the street, the members of Engine Company No. 2 barely escaping with their lives. Mr. Bonner gave the alarm. As he said later: "I gave the old Indian yell—I couldn't help it."

Then the west wall fell in, the flames receded, and from that time on were mainly confined within the building. One of the men of Company 2, Thomas McDonald, was slightly cut by glass when the south wall collapsed, and his was the only authenticated injury of the whole fire. Ambulances were on hand, but no one was taken to a hospital.

The E. S. Higgins carpet factory, an old building on the north side of Forty-third Street, was in danger for a time, but its stone walls and iron shutters and roof helped in a large measure to prevent the spread of the flames.

The fire boats Zophar Mills and McClellan protected the ferry house. One of the water towers was on the scene, but it was not in use and appeared to be out of commission.

DON'T BE OVERSTRENUOUS.

Dr. Parkhurst Calls It Plain Suicide—Prays for France and Germany.

At the morning service in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church yesterday the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst made reference to the Franco-German situation in his invocation. He prayed that the two nations which confront each other in an attitude of war might be induced to turn away from their evil intent, and that the counsels of other nations, including our own, might be heeded, and operate to defeat the wicked purposes of those who would plunge the peoples of two great countries into bloodshed and mourning.

The doctor preached from the text, "And that ye study to be quiet." His discourse was an argument against overexcitement, which he said had come to be known among us under the title of "strenuousness." He spoke approvingly of a member of his congregation who had told him that when he moved to his present place of business, on a leading thoroughfare, he had made a resolution never to get in a hurry any more, and to take a day or a week off whenever body or mind required rest.

"It is not likely that that man will ever be a millionaire," said Dr. Parkhurst, "but he appears to be getting a good deal out of life, and it is a pleasure to preach to him, because he is not intellectually dizzy or morally topsy-turvy when he comes in here.

"Nature," Dr. Parkhurst said, "is never in a hurry. Nature does some things very fast, but there are no heated bearings. Throughout the physical universe there is a dignified serenity that is eloquent of the tranquillity of its Author and Creator.

"People may say that this idea of perfect tranquillity is too ideal to be practicable," he continued, "but calling the ideal hard names does not improve the situation. The pace that kills comes from doing things in a small way, not having a splendid purpose in view. It is a part of the new delirium that we have come to know as strenuousness.

"People too often become impressed with the idea that there is not only a great deal to be done in the world, but that no one else can do it so well as they, and that, in fact, somehow or other they are indispensable, and that things will never be so well done again when they are out of the way. Now, hurry is a species of infidelity. Such people are really volcanic eruptions of human self-seeking and greed.

"There is a species of moral lunacy abroad, and people who think they are intense, but are really hysterical, are burning themselves up before they are properly candidates for a crematory. Killing one's self by inches by such a process is just as much suicide as it is to draw a razor through the jugular vein. And people have no more right to kill themselves than they have to kill other people. You can call it devotion to work, or burning the candle at both ends, or what you will, but it is essentially suicide long drawn out—and not always so very long, either.

"The cyclonic hysteria of the times is fatal to a proper appreciation of the finer things in life. The angel Gabriel could not preach a sermon that would make a real abiding impression upon a man who has just spent six days in a [illegible]

JUSTICE GAYNOR TELLS OF CORPORATE ABUSES

Says Mergers Fleece Public, but Awakening Is Near.

ROCKEFELLER AND REBATES

"Superior Genius?" Asks the Speaker, "Superior Rascality" by Railroads—No Man Worth $80,000 a Year.

Supreme Court Justice, William J. Gaynor, addressed the People's Forum in New Rochelle, yesterday on "Corporate Abuses." The subject which had been assigned to him by the management of the Forum was "Public Franchises—Their Use and Abuse," but he made the change indicated without public explanation.

Justice Gaynor in his lecture, which occupied nearly an hour and a half, touched on the gas situation, street railways—elevated, surface and underground—and also spoke of rebates and discrimination in freight rates.

Justice Gaynor said that the public was being fooled by the managers of large corporations. He spoke hopefully, however, of an awakening of the public intelligence, and said that it was close at hand.

By way of clearing the air of misapprehensions that he seemed to feel might be evoked by what he was about to say, the speaker emphasized that he proposed to speak only of public service corporations—those in which the public had a real interest. The others, he said, he was not worried about at all.

The points which Justice Gaynor made in his lecture which seemed to arouse the greatest interest were these: That the great corporations, when their dividends grew larger than seemed convenient, merged—leased to another company, with about the same men in the new as in the old—that in his opinion $80,000 a year, such as was paid to an insurance head, was more than any man's service on earth was worth, and his praise of President Roosevelt for having the courage to impress upon Congress the necessity of acting on the rebates and discriminating in freight rates. "To put it up to Congress," as he said, "either to pass upon the matter or go home in disgrace."

Not less interesting, however, was what he said of the contempt of corporations and their officials for the Government and the law.

What Would a Decent Man Do?

"The contempt and disrespect of these people is growing," he declared. "The courts and all are held in contempt and subservient to them. What would a decent man here in this community do if he heard an officer was looking for him to subpoena him to court to testify? Would he hide in his house, and have his wife and children and servants say they did not know where he was?

"Would he hurry into some other State, or go aboard his yacht, if he had one, and put to sea to escape service? Or would he come forward like a decent man and say, 'Here am I?' And if he lied or sneaked away, would he not be condemned by that community as dishonest and dishonorable? Would any one offer him his hand on his return?

"And if a man with an overgrown fortune made out of the abuse of public franchises does that thing, is he a decent member of society? Is he fit to mingle with honest people? No; he is all the more contemptible and guilty. No amount of church or Sunday school teaching can make such a character decent or respectable. He is no better than Hamilton, the insurance lobbyist who ran off to France to escape examination before a legislative committee.

"These people have been crying out anarchist and the like against decent people, but I say unto you that they are the anarchists, and will destroy our system of Government if they are not checked in their career. There is no prejudice against honestly acquired wealth in this country. It is against wealth acquired by trick and device, by the favoritism of laws, by the misuse of public franchises, which is under the ban of honest people."

Speaking of the gas companies of the City of New York, Justice Gaynor said:

Are Not Private Concerns.

"Gas companies and railroad companies and the like are not mere private companies like companies manufacturing wallpaper or carpet or clothes. On the contrary, they have a public franchise to do a public duty or service, and for that purpose the Government's power to take the property of individuals for public purposes has been conferred on them by Government.

"A private business may make all it can; it has competitors, and government has nothing to do with it. But a public service corporation should not be allowed to make out of the public more than a fair return upon its actual necessary investment, and I believe it is agreed that the legal rate of interest is such a fair return."

Of the street railroad companies, Justice Gaynor said:

"The street railroad companies are also organized and received a franchise to do the public or governmental service of carrying passengers. They are not in a private but a public business. When your elevated roads were built they paid large dividends on an inflated stock and bond issue of about $33,000,000. Of course it would never do to make these dividends so large that the public would not stand for them, and call for a reduction of fares.

Leased for 999 Years.

"So another company is formed, and the companies which own the roads are leased or turned over to it for 999 years, (which is the fashion,) it agreeing to pay the interest on their bonds and 7 or 8 per cent. on their stock, and keep the rest of the earnings, and declare them out in dividends on its stock of $60,000,000, chiefly or all water, and in that way the public, treated as a big numskull, is to be lulled and fooled by not reading of any very large dividend.

"What a howling wilderness there must be in the mind of a man who thinks the public will always believe that?

"The earnings keep growing, but the stock is made larger and larger, so that when the earnings are apportioned to the stock the dividends may not appear too large.

"The history of the surface roads is the same but larger. One after another they leased themselves to the Metropolitan Street Railway Company for 999 years, the lessee company agreeing to pay the interest on their bonds, and a yearly dividend on their stock ranging from 18 to 8 per cent., the lessee company to keep all surplus earnings for its stock.

"The lessee company had a capital of $20,000,000. Next the New York City company turned itself over to the Metropolitan Securities Company, with a capital of $30,000,000, and the other day this company passed under the control of the Metropolitan-Interborough Company, which I have already mentioned as having acquired the Interborough Company, which controls the underground and overhead roads, and thus all the city railroads of New York City have been merged. Their earnings are to be pooled and the watered stocks and bonds of all of them taken care of.

"What the paper capital of the new company is to be we only learned yesterday by a news dispatch from Albany, viz., $155,000,000. The grand total of stocks and bonds of the other surface companies which I have given in succession is upward of $220,000,000.

"Over in Brooklyn the case is the same."

Speaking of the underground railway Justice Gaynor said:

All Strictly Within the Law.

"Here we have a piece of financing at the public expense for the benefit of a few private individuals the like of which is not to be found in the whole world. And it was all done in strict accordance with statute law. But, my friends, that makes it no better in a moral sense. That laws can be obtained for the doing of such things is the wonder and the danger and the outrage. What is its history? Why, it is very brief.

"The building of the tunnel and the track cost $35,000,000. The City of New York paid every dollar of it. But the day the work was completed, and everything was ready for the trains, did the city own it? Was it the city's to lease to the highest bidder, or operate it itself, if it saw fit? Not at all; it belonged to the contractor who built for the city with the city's money for a term of fifty years with a right of renewal for twenty-five years more.

"That means forever for all practical purposes, for the tunnel will be obsolete in seventy-five years. If it be then of any further use it will have to be rebuilt. But some say it is only for seventy-five years, as though they were saying seventy-five days. Think of the changes that will take place here in seventy-five years! Even the child born to-day will not be alive then.

"If any man had done what the city did, viz., built this tunnel with his own $35,000,000 by a contractor, and then gave the tunnel to the contractor for seventy-five years, he only to pay 4½ per cent. on the cost and none of the principal, his relatives would have had his sanity inquired into and a committee put in charge of the remainder of his estate. No jury would have hesitated to declare him incompetent. And yet this business was done by 'leading' citizens, as they are called. 'Misleading citizens,' some prefer to call them.

"The extent," continued the speaker, "to which railroad corporations have violated their duty and the law of their being by carrying the freight of some at a lower rate than is exacted of their rivals in the same line of business, and so much lower as to enable them to undersell and thereby ruin such rivals and drive them out of business, and establish a monopoly in themselves, forms the most criminal chapter in our history.

"I happened to be in the oil fields of Pennsylvania about the time the oil fields were first being developed and saw the huge derricks and the pumps there. I did not see that the derricks or the pumps of Mr. Rockefeller were superior to those of his competitors. Superior genius you will say. Not at all. Superior rascality of oilthe railroad companies who carried his oil cheaper than that of his competitors."

John Ford acted as chairman of the meeting. He paid his respects to the Rapid Transit Commission, calling it an "autocratic institution."

John S. Crosby also explained the principles of Single Tax to the audience.

RECEIVERSHIP GRAFT STIRS MAYER'S PROTEST

Attorney General Wants New Laws to Protect Estates.

COURT OF CLAIMS CROWDED

Continuous Session Proposed in Mr. Mayer's Annual Report—Clearing Up Franchise Tax Litigation.

ALBANY, March 4.—Attorney General Julius M. Mayer, in his annual report, which will be submitted to the Legislature to-morrow night, discusses the unsatisfactory condition of the present law in regard to the expenses of receiverships. Declaring that these expenses in many instances have been entirely disproportionate to the results attained, and that extra allowances and large attorneys' fees have depleted such estates, he recommends changes in the law to lessen the expense.

"I realize that to obtain good service it is necessary to pay competent lawyers fair compensation. Nevertheless, the necessity of obtaining capable lawyers to conduct these receiverships is no excuse for exorbitant charges.

"Much of this expense could be obviated if the fee of the attorney was fixed by contract when he undertook his employment. His employment should bear some relation to the assets collected, just as the receiver's commissions bear such relation."

The Attorney General calls attention to the fact that the expense of the special franchise tax litigation, with a few exceptions, is being borne by the State, although the State Treasury is not benefited by the result. He suggests that this burden should be shared by the tax district which ultimately will benefit. The report makes the following suggestion regarding the Court of Claims:

"The number of cases before this court is naturally increasing. Very shortly the interest account on claims will be a substantial item. Wherever property is appropriated for the purposes of the barge canal the interest, of course, will run from the time of appropriation until final determination by the courts. The Attorney General suggests for your consideration the advisability of making this court a court holding practically continuous sessions, and that the members of the court should devote their whole time and attention to the court and be prohibited from practice, receiving fair compensation for their services."

The State has been successful during the year in a majority of the litigations to which it has been a party. Of eight cases argued in the United States Supreme Court, seven were decided in favor of the State while the State was successful in fourteen out of seventeen cases argued in the Court of Appeals. In the Appellate Divisions forty-eight cases were argued, thirty-four being decided in the State's favor, many of the decisions against the State being subsequently reversed in the Court of Appeals. During the year 1,628 suits and proceedings were finally disposed of, and $25,302.63 was recovered for the State.

"When the Supreme Court of the United States handed down its decision sustaining the constitutionality of the special franchise tax law on May 29, 1905, there were pending in the Attorney General's office 788 certiorari proceedings, which had been awaiting its final determination. Of these 249 were disposed of prior to Jan. 1, 1906; 210 were pending in contested litigations, and 329 were awaiting final adjustment. The total assessed valuations of the special franchises in the cases thus finally disposed of prior to Jan. 1, 1906, aggregate $85,965,119.48. The amount of the assessed value involved in contested litigations pending before referees is in round numbers $613,000,000."

There were 2,223 claims, representing an aggregate of $4,184,534.12, pending on Jan. 1, 1905, and in the year 291 claims were filed, representing $696,365.97. The total disposed of in the Court of Claims was 558, 213 being dismissed, with no award to the claimants.

Twenty-three persons have been convicted in the year of crimes against the election law, nineteen are serving sentence, three had sentence suspended, and a certificate of reasonable doubt was granted in the remaining case. A number of indictments are pending.

Attorney General Mayer concludes with: "The most important subject requiring attention in the coming year will be the enforcement of the pure-food law. This law presents numerous interesting questions which will doubtless come up for adjudication in the courts."

$75,000 AWAITS E. SCHMID.

There is $75,000 or $100,000 in Germany awaiting Ernst Schmid, who married Catherine Goetz on Aug. 31, 1865, and George A. Smythe, a lawyer, of 964 St. Nicholas Avenue, is looking for him or his heirs.

In 1846 one Carl Schmid and his wife, Frederica, came to this country from Germany, with their sons, Adolph, Ernst, and Albert, and their daughter, Frederica. They settled in or near New York. Five more children, four girls and a boy, were born. According to the records, the body of Laura, the two-and-a-half-year-old daughter of Carl, was found on Sept. 3, 1853, floating off Pier 8 in the North River, and two days later the body of the mother was brought ashore at a dock in Brooklyn.

No address of the pair was found in the records, but there is a paper extant to show that Mayor Edward Lambert of Brooklyn, as Coroner, held an inquest in Mrs. Schmid's case.

There is no official record here of Ernst Schmid's marriage.

NEW PLOT IN URUGUAY.

Montevideo Clubs Raided and Conspirators Arrested.

MONTEVIDEO, March 4.—Learning that plans for a revolutionary movement were in progress, the Government has raided the Opposition clubs, arrested the plotters, and instituted a censorship on telegraphic dispatches.

The Government will present a statement of its action to Parliament to-morrow.

There has been no disturbance here, and order is being maintained throughout the country.

JAPAN'S RAILWAY PROJECT.

Bill for Nationalization of Lines Introduced—Fate Doubtful.

TOKIO, March 4.—A bill introduced in the Diet provides for the nationalization of the railways and authorizes the Government to compel companies to sell out to it at a price based on the cost of building plus twenty fold the average profits of the last three years.

The bill will be strongly opposed and its fate is doubtful.

Recent dispatches from Tokio were to the effect that the Cabinet had decided to submit to the Diet a bill providing for the nationalization of the railways and that it was because of his opposition to the measure that Foreign Minister Kato resigned.

LITTLE HOPE AT ALGECIRAS.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

ALGECIRAS, March 4.—It is hoped that at the meeting to-morrow of the General Committee to consider the police question the conference will decide, if the Germans are not prepared to make a substantial concession, either to dissolve in the course of the next ten days or to suspend the sittings, which is practically the same thing.

Those who remember the startling dénouement of the Russo-Japanese Peace Conference must be chary of making predictions, but nearly all the delegates regard a rupture as practically certain.

The Germans, however, seem to be desirous of prolonging the agony, and it is not impossible that they may find means of evading for a time the fundamental issue on which the fate of the conference depends. They have detected in their French colleagues a strong reluctance to break off negotiations and a consequent inclination to yield on minor points, and they evidently cling to the hope that the French Government, in view of the approaching general election, will finally yield on the main points.

Material concessions on the part of the Germans can hardly be expected. We know that Russian pressure was twice applied in Berlin in vain and that Austrian friendly representations, not to speak of the efforts of other powers, were altogether fruitless. It is difficult, therefore, to imagine where the deus ex machina, whose advent is predicted, is to come from.

There is a rumor to-day that the old idea of allotting to different powers the policing of the seaports on the Atlantic Coast is about to be revived by Germany. This idea, which suggests the partition of the Shereefian Empire, has long been entertained in Berlin and repeatedly put forward in a hesitating and tentative fashion, but it has never been viewed with favor, especially by those who desire the independence of the Sultan and the integrity of his dominions. If it should be revived now we must first of all consider whether the fact points to a serious project for a compromise or merely to a new move in a Fabian game.

RUSSIA SEEKS CHINA'S TRADE.

Plans to Make Vladivostok a Great Port of Entry.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—A renewed attempt on the part of Russia to establish a permanent foothold in Northern Manchuria by making Vladivostok the port of entry, thereby offsetting the loss of Dalny and Port Arthur, is described in a report made public at the State Department. The report recently reached Washington from one of the department's agents in China. It is in part as follows:

"Even while Vladivostok and Harbin were burning plans were hastening for the coming campaign of development. The scheme advertised contemplated the establishment of a steamship service which would make Vladivostok the home port, the welcoming and the protection of invested capital, and the invitation to use the railway as the means of transportation to Europe for the products of China and especially of tea.

"The docks are to be enlarged, they say, godowns built, and cargo landing facilitated. This means competition with the Japanese, and an interesting condition will result. The Japanese merchant marine have apparently recognized this, and while Japanese affairs are being adjusted in the former war zone their steamers are getting ready to enter the Vladivostok trade. It is also argued by those who are interested in Vladivostok that it is naturally the port for American Manchurian commerce, being closer and easier of access in every way.

"Heretofore Shanghai has benefited largely by the Manchurian carrying trade, but if there is the outcome indicated in the foregoing, China's greatest port will suffer. American cargo will be landed at Yokohama, Koba, Moji, or Nagasaki, or it will go direct, and there will be a great curtailment of the cargo at Shanghai which is landed here for transhipment.

"It is already announced that the Chinese Eastern Railway will institute a system by which all charges at fixed rates can be paid in America for shipments to any point in Manchuria reached by the line.

"If the half of the optimistic views of those who talk from the Russian standpoint concerning Northern Manchuria and the Chinese Eastern Railway come through the world will speedily see that as a matter of fact Russia has suffered very little by the outcome of the war as it relates to her development projects in the Far East. In any event in the immediate future Northern Manchuria seems, according to the present programme, indicated as a good field for American enterprise."

HAD A DOUBLE WEDDING.

Witnesses Found the Ceremony Easy, So Had One of Their Own.

Public announcement was made in Newark yesterday of a double marriage that took place in New York on Sunday, Feb. 18. Three of the contracting parties were residents of Newark and the fourth lived in Morristown. Two of them were brother and sister—Joseph and Leonora Francisco, son and daughter of Guy Francisco of 9 Nassau Street, Newark. Joseph married Miss Harriet Kimble, daughter of Henry Kimble, while Leonora became the wife of Le Roy C. Hayes of Morristown.

On the eve of the double wedding the two couples went to the Little Church Around the Corner, where Mr. Hayes and Miss Francisco were married by the Rev. Dr. Houghton. After leaving the church Francisco and his fiancée, seeing what a simple thing the ceremony was, decided to duplicate the ceremony. So the four went to the Collegiate Church, where the Rev. Dr. O. S. Molin made Francisco and Miss Kimble husband and wife. Then they all returned to Newark and kept the marriage a secret. They are all living now at 9 Nassau Street, Newark.

KILLING IN BOYS' DISPUTE.

16-Year-Old Italian's Toy Rifle Shoots a 12-Year-Old Playmate.

Louis Fink, 12 years of age, son of George Fink, a carpenter of Broadway, West Brighton, was shot and killed last night by Manuel Pricano, who has been in this country only a short time. The Italian declares the shooting was entirely accidental, but some of the other boys who were present tell a different story and say a quarrel was in progress.

The boys were shooting with a Flobert rifle in a vacant lot near Broadway, West Brighton. Pricano is 16 years old. He can speak little English. His story is that, when they were through shooting, he put the gun under his arm and started away. Others tried to get the gun to continue shooting, and one of them must have pulled the trigger from behind him.

Some of the other boys say there was a dispute, and that Pricano pointed the gun at Fink, warning him to keep away. The bullet struck Fink in the temple. Pricano was arrested.

WAS SHOT AT THREE TIMES

In Odessa When the Slaughter of Jews Began—In Moscow When the Revolution Started.

Across the seas from Russia Abraham E. Lubarsky can now go to bed nights without fear of being shot at by Cossacks when he takes the air in the morning. Mr. Lubarsky, who is a wealthy tea merchant of Odessa, got to New York yesterday on the American liner St. Louis. For the last few months he has been in the midst of trouble. Wherever he went there was a riot or a revolution or a strike the next day.

"A Jew's life in Russia is not worth as much as a bad cigarette," said the tea merchant, illustrating the statement by flipping the ashes off a slender one from Turkey, as he sat in the parlor of Solomon Schechter at 620 West 115th Street, radiant with happiness at being only three stories from American soil.

"I was shot at three times," he added, "but never got hit. I was in Odessa last October when the slaughter of Jews occurred. A month and a half later I went to Moscow, and hadn't been there three days before the revolution broke out."

If Grand Duke Michael's clothes had not been covered with dust, and his legs and body tired out by much rough traveling, the Czar might never have found out about the big railroad strike last Fall, says Mr. Lubarsky. It happened this way, he says:

Prince Chilkoff, Minister of Railways, would not tell the "Little Father" about the strike on the railroads. No matter what happened the ruler of the Russian Empire was kept in ignorance of it. But one day Grand Duke Michael set out from his estate to go to St. Petersburg. Before he had gone far he had to get out and find horses to carry him the rest of the way. It took him some ten days to get to St. Petersburg.

Once there, he walked into the Czar's presence—Prince Chilkoff couldn't keep Grand Dukes out—all dusty and tired.

"Why so worn and weary, uncle?" the Czar asked.

Then the story of the railway strike came from Grand Duke Michael's lips. Then it was that Witte played his trump card and induced the Czar to issue the famous manifesto proclaiming freedom of speech, press, and person.

This manifesto was issued on Oct. 28. The next day the "pogrum," or slaughter of Jews, broke out in Odessa and in more than 200 other places in Russia at the same time.

"It was an official movement," said Mr. Lubarsky last night. "The police were the only ones who shot at Jews in Odessa, where I was, and the Government never denied that the massacre had its inspiration in official circles. The Black Hundred, an organization that calls itself the League of Russian Patriots, was at the bottom of it.

"Gen. Bogdanovitch himself is the head of the Black Hundred. Its members are those who are either officials themselves or are closely in touch with the official party. Levov, the author, publicly denounced Gen. Bogdanovitch after the pogrum, and challenged the General to bring an action for libel. But the challenge was not accepted.

"The Black Hundred had planned for the pogrum to take place before the Czar's manifesto, for they knew the manifesto would come sooner or later, but Witte's sudden move brought the proclamation out before the Black Hundred expected it. Then came the massacre the next day, just as everybody was rejoicing at the new freedom.

"During the riot I got out of my carriage in front of my office. A policeman lifted his pistol as if to shoot at me, and I brandished my cane at him as though I would strike him. Seeing me do this, he thought I must not be a Jew, for surely no Jew would threaten a policeman! But just then my employes began to shout my name, 'Lubarsky!' from the windows. At that the officer knew I was really a Jew. As I went in the door he shot, but the bullet went past.

The Slaughter in Moscow.

"It was a thousand times worse in Moscow. A month and a half after the Odessa riots I left for Moscow. Three days later Gen. Dubassov came to put down the revolution that he knew was going to take place. It did take place in three more days. The people were slaughtered by the hundred.

"One rule Gen. Dubassov made was that every revolutionist should go into his house at 5 o'clock in the evening and not come out until 7 in the morning. All lights had to be put out and the shades pulled down. If the order was disobeyed it was an excuse for a Cossack to shoot.

"A Cossack is a wild beast. He will do anything his superior officer tells him to do. He likes to kill anybody, but has a slight preference for a Jew. I have seen a Cossack shoot down a man, then stick his bayonet through the dead body and throw it into a back yard so nobody would see it. One morning about 6:30 o'clock the Cossacks set fire to the houses in Presny, a section of Moscow and of course all the inhabitants had to run out to save their lives. Then the Cossacks shot them because they were out of their houses before 7 o'clock. In a half hour that morning 1,500 were killed.

"The organization called the Soma Borona (Self Defense) does a great deal of good, said Mr. Lubarsky. It is composed of young Jews who have armed themselves to resist the outrages. The Cossacks have learned to fear the Soma Borona and dodge its members religiously."

MARCH TO NON-UNION MUSIC.

Innovation in St. Patrick's Day Parades in Prospect This Year.

Edward Canavan, delegate of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, now known as Local 310 of the American Federation of Musicians, caused a sensation at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union by announcing that there would be no union music at the coming St. Patrick's Day parade. The Ancient Order of Hibernians, which is composed largely of labor unionists, will form the bulk of the parade. Canavan was asked for an explanation.

"Well," said Canavan, "we found that the managers had engaged a number of non-union bands, and under the constitution of Local No. 310 we cannot work with non-union men."

Most of the Irish delegates had left the hall, but Delegate Dooley of the Double Drum Hoisters' Union, who is a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, was still there. He got up on his feet, and Canavan asked:

"Am I to understand that your union refuses to furnish music for the St. Patrick's Day parade?"

"That's about it," said Canavan.

He submitted a copy of the Constitution of Local 310 to the Chairman and asked him to read aloud the clause referring to non-union music. The Chairman read it.

"That's the first time I ever knew the Dutch getting the better of the Irish," said Dooley, in great disgust.

Then the delegates of the Waiters' and Bartenders' Unions wanted to know why, if its members were not willing to play in the St. Patrick's Day parade, they were engaged to play at the following picnic in a non-union park. Canavan said that he had nothing to do with that.

"There is some inconsistency here," the Chairman said. "If the members of Local 310 won't play in the St. Patrick's Day parade because non-union musicians are employed, it stands to reason that it should not furnish music at the picnic in a non-union park."

But Canavan stuck to it.

"At any rate," he said, "the St. Patrick's Day parade will have nothing but non-union music."

"Will the parade take place even if there is non-union music?" Delegate Dooley was asked.

"You bet it will," he replied.

BLAZE IN TENEMENT HALL.

Dispossessed Tenant Accused of Setting It for Revenge.

To get revenge because she dispossessed him on account of his habits and nonpayment of rent, it is charged that John Kelly, 24 years old, tried to set fire to the door of the flat of Mrs. Jane Ryan, in the five-story apartment, at 18 East Third Street, yesterday morning.

Mrs. Maggie Oehler, who occupied an adjoining flat, awoke at the sounds of steps in the hallway. She opened her door and looked into the hall. Against Mrs. Ryan's door she saw a heap of old clothes blazing.

In the light of the flames, hurrying down the stairway, she saw a man whom she says she recognized as Kelly. Patrolman Cruise caught him after a run of a half a block.

Kelly would neither deny nor admit the charge of arson and Magistrate Moss held him for examination to-day.

Russian Priest Ordained.

Archbishop Tikhon, at the high mass yesterday in the St. Nicholas Russian Cathedral, raised Alexander Varchal of Minnesota to the priesthood and assigned to him a parish in Canada. The services were attended by several hundred persons. Archbishop Tikhon celebrated the mass and assisting him were the Rev. Alexander Hotovtsky, the Rev. Elias Zotokoff, the Rev. Joanniky Keyko, and the Rev. N. Irvine.

Germany's Invasion of India.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—In British India the door of commerce is open to all nations on the same tariff basis. Germany has seized advantage of this, according to a report forwarded by American Consul Brittain of Kehl. During the last ten years the total value of the annual imports from India to Germany has increased about 50 per cent., while the total value of the annual exports from Germany has increased about 100 per cent. Germany now ranks third in Indian trade.

THE COURTS WILL HEAR DR. LEE'S FIGHT SOON

Meanwhile an Inquiry Into the Presbytery Is Going On.

MANY PRAYERS FOR CHURCH

Westminster Church Session Has Refused to Sit with the Presbytery's Moderator Over It.

That civil suits to oust the Rev. Dr. John Lloyd Lee from the pastorate of the Westminster Presbyterian Church may be begun within two weeks became known yesterday. Concerning the difficulties between the church and the Presbytery, it was also said that there would be other developments within a week.

It is said that the officials of the Westminster Church have instituted a secret investigation of the internal affairs of the Presbytery, and hope to bring to light information that will have a material bearing on the success of their effort to retain the church apart from the Presbytery, which seeks to control the property. The church officers have been looking into the affairs of the Presbytery for some time. They declare that the report is likely to have a startling result.

Presbyterians generally, Dr. Lee told his congregation yesterday morning, are supporting the contention of the Westminster Church congregation. Just before the sermon this statement was read:

"To the members and friends of the Westminster Presbyterian Church: I desire to say for your encouragement that I have received a great many communications, from Maine to California, offering us prayers, encouragement, and substantial support in this crisis in our church and urging us to stand firm and unmoved in our position.

"I wish to express the hearty thanks of myself and this church to all who thus aid us, and to the press of the city for valuable assistance.

"I am convinced that there is no other church, in this country or in the world, for which so many prayers are ascending to God. A great host of God's people is standing with us at His throne, thanking Him for the peace and freedom which He has vouchsafed to grant us and beseeching Him that this peace and freedom many continue in all our future."

It was learned yesterday that a few days ago the Rev. Dr. George Alexander, who was ordered by the Presbytery to act as Moderator of the Session, or governing body, of the Westminster Church, called a meeting of that body. Dr. Alexander was appointed by the Presbytery to do that after that organization had declared Dr. Lee no longer pastor. Dr. Alexander's call was addressed to the clerk of the Church Session, John H. De Lamater. It asked him formally, it is said, to call a meeting of the Session, and to return all information as to when such might be expected. Clerk De Lamater was also directed, it is declared, to name the place of meeting, that Dr. Alexander might take his place in the Moderator's chair.

Although a refusal to meet under his Moderatorship was expected by Dr. Alexander, it is said he did not expect to get the sort of answer that came to him from the Session by return post. In words described as "stinging" Dr. Alexander was told that under no circumstances would there be a gathering of Westminster officials under his official leadership. Whatever meetings might be held of the Westminster Church Session would be, as in the past, with the Rev. Dr. Lee in the chair.

The reply was not made public yesterday, but friends of Dr. Lee said it would be if the Presbytery did not give it out at its meeting next Sunday.

At this meeting, it is said, Dr. Alexander will report the refusal of the Session, and a resolution will be at once offered censuring the members of the Session and expelling them or suspending them from membership. Then civil action will follow, and probably quickly, it is said, looking to the ousting of the Session as a body.

Moses Displaces Joseph as the Subject of the Bible Class's Discussion.

As the result of John D. Rockefeller's publicly expressed views of Joseph and his corn corner in Egypt, there was a flocking of new Bible students to the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church yesterday. There was disappointment, almost chagrin, when W. S. Richardson, the secretary of the class, took charge of the morning's proceedings and began to talk of "Moses" without a word of explanation as to the absence of the class leader, the son of the richest man in the world.

The new-comers mistook Mr. Richardson for young Mr. Rockefeller and followed his every word with the keenest attention. When Mr. Richardson paused in his discourse on "Moses" and gave the opportunity to other Bible students to express their opinions of the original law giver, there arose a lank individual with a pronounced Scotch accent, whom Mr. Richardson suavely recognized and acknowledged as "Mr. Smith."

"It seems to me," declared Mr. Smith, "that Moses was a great leader and a great criminal. I look on the Bible as a good Book as I look on other books that are good as good books. The story of Moses is interesting in that it shows Moses as a man who committed murder."

Another member of the class defended Moses as a character higher than any other character in the Bible. He thought him even higher in type than Joseph.

Mr. Richardson declared that out of a black race sprung Booker Washington, and out of a humble people sprung Abraham Lincoln. So it was, he said, with Moses.

The Scotchman arose and said that "Abe" Lincoln was a greater man than Moses.

A hush fell over the Bible class, and then the young gentleman who reads the announcements about the weekday meetings walked up the aisle and performed his Sabbath function.

"Do Not Pass Me By" was the hymn sung as the collection baskets were passed, and when the baskets reached the rear pews they were plentifully supplied with pennies and nickels.

After the meeting inquirers at young Mr. Rockefeller's home were told that he was taking a nap.

HIT THE DOG THE THIRD SHOT.

The Policeman's First Two Bullets Shot Paper Chorus Girls.

Strollers along the Fifth Avenue side of Central Park yesterday afternoon witnesed the slaughter of several paper chorus girls on a billboard around an empty lot at the southeast corner of Seventy-third Street. A mongrel dog that had been sheltered in the house of James McEvoy, at 12 East Seventy-third Street, and had developed suspicious symptoms was turned outdoors, and Policeman Delaney was called to shoot it.

He cornered the dog in front of the billboard upon which the posings of a line of chorus girls were represented. Delaney fired, and hit a paper chorus girl. He fired a second time, and hit another pictured soubrette. At the third shot the dog ran between the board and the revolver. The dog stopped the bullet, and the bullet stopped the dog.

SOFT COAL MEN PLAN FOR ANTHRACITE STRIKE

Robbins Tells Mitchell He Must Enforce Demands in East.

TO HELP BITUMINOUS TRADE

Advance on Hard Coal Expected If Operators Yield—To Abolish "Check-Off" If the Union Weakens.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 4.—In order to get a favorable settlement with the soft coal operators, John Mitchell has agreed to force terms or a strike with the operators of the anthracite field. F. Robbins, President of the Pittsburg Coal Company, one of the chief representatives of the operators, has informed him that he must make the Eastern men come to an agreement or the soft coal men will cut out the "check off" system, even if they do grant an advance.

The "check off" in the bituminous regions is a system by which the operators collect the miners' dues for the organization, and is the financial backbone of the United Mine Workers. Without it the organization often would be lacking funds.

Independent operators here who have been bucking against the propositions of Robbins to settle with the miners for an advance have now agreed to go along. A strike in the hard-coal region will let them into the Eastern market. Mitchell, under the terms of the agreement made, must force a strike unless the Eastern operators grant all his demands. In either event it will shove up the price of coal enough to let the soft coal men get even on an advance.

"Make the anthracite people come up to the mark or close their mines and we will deal with you. If you don't we may deal with you any way on the advance, but we will stop the 'check off,' and you know what that will mean," was the way in which the proposition was handed to John Mitchell less than three days ago. It set Mitchell thinking.

Mitchell and others know what the abolishment of the "check off" by the bituminous operators would mean. All admit that, if left to the miners themselves, the dues never would be paid. The threat to stop this collecting or "holding out" from the miners' pay has had an effect.

The anthracite operators are not bothered with the check off, and that is the reason, according to the people here, that the collections do not come in from the miners there. With the operators in the bituminous field refusing longer to collect dues for the union before the miners are paid, the United Mine Workers soon would go down.

The independent soft coal operators are looking for a chance to boost bituminous prices and get into the Eastern markets. It is asserted that the proposition of the bituminous operators has been as good as accepted.

Another meeting of the independent coal operators of the bituminous field probably will be held in Pittsburg before the Indianapolis meeting on March 19. George A. Magoon, representing the Pittsburg and Westmoreland Coal Company, and F. L. Robbins met in this city on Saturday and agreed to call another meeting of the operators before March 19.

William Dodds, Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, has received a letter from President Mitchell informing the District Secretary that he will be held responsible for the payment of all moneys out of the district treasury. The National leader contends that President Dolan should not receive any more money from the miners of this district.

Dolan asserts that he is still the District President, and demands $110 each month as his salary. Dolan holds a $4,000 bond furnished by Dodds, providing for a "faithful performance of duty on the part of the District Secretary." Dodds paid Dolan his salary for the month of February on the ground that a portion of the month had elapsed before action was taken.

A meeting of the anthracite operators' committee of seven appointed to confer with the mine workers will be held to-morrow, it is expected, in the office of the Jersey Central Railroad, 143 Liberty Street. The demands of the anthracite mine workers will be considered. President Mitchell of the mine workers will be notified after the meeting, and a joint meeting of the two committees will be held to take final action. The members of Mitchell's committee are expected to return here to-day.

In anticipation of a strike the anthracite operators have been mining coal freely during the open Winter, and have a surplus, it is said, of at least 7,000,000 tons of hard coal. In case a settlement is reached with Mitchell and his committee, which is more probable now than before President Roosevelt intervened, it is said the anthracite operators may have to restrict production.

Mitchell said at the Ashland Hotel last night that there was no change in the situation. He added:

"I do not know what the next move will be, and could not tell if I was possessed of that information."

JAPAN'S MARINE ACTIVITY.

Her Ships Soon Will Reach Every Port Touched by Pacific Waters.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Consul General Rodgers, at Shanghai, reports that since the close of the war with Russia Japan has entered actively upon the extension of her merchant marine. He refers to semi-official announcements already made that Japan's ships will soon reach every port touched by Pacific waters, and says the shipbuilding companies of Japan are building new vessels, repairing old ones, altering captured craft, and adapting everything they have afloat to double the carrying trade of the Pacific.

He also calls attention to the new treaty between China and Japan by which the former agrees to open more Manchurian cities for places of international trade and residence as follows: In Shin-King Province, Feng-Kwang-Cheng, Liao-Yang, Sing-min-Tung, Tie-Ling, Tung-kiang-Tse, and Fa-ko-Men. In Kirin Province, Chang-Chun, Kirin, Harbin, Ninguta, Hun-Chun, and San-Sing. In Hi-lung-Kiang Province, Tsitsihar, Khailar, Ai-Hun, and Manchuli.

JAPAN'S NEED STILL GREAT.

The New York Branch of the Red Cross Asks for Further Funds.

The New York State Branch of the American National Red Cross, of which Jacob H. Schiff is Treasurer, in acknowledging the generous contributions which the organization has already received for the benefit of sufferers in the northern provinces in Japan, urges the necessity of a larger membership for the Red Cross and further contributions to the fund. While the Japanese Government is doing all in its power to modify the present conditions, but little actual benefit can be realized without money until the harvesting of the next rice crop, which will not be until September.

From its headquarters, at 500 Fifth Avenue, to which contributions may be sent, the organization, through its officers Cleveland H. Dodge, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and W. C. Langdon, Secretary, acknowledges the receipt of $23,904, including subscriptions of $100 each from Gov. Higgins and Mrs. J. H. Ten Broeck.

COCKRAN, GRAND SACHEM.

To be Installed by Tammany To-night —'Tis an Ornamental Office.

W. Bourke Cockran will be installed as Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society to-night at a regular meeting in the Fourteenth Street Wigwam. Mr. Cockran was elected Grand Sachem by the thirteen members of the Council of Sachems at a meeting held nearly two months ago, but since then his duties at Washington have prevented him from attending a meeting of the order.

Twelve years ago Congressman Cockran had a bitter quarrel with Richard Croker, then leader of Tammany Hall. At that time Mr. Cockran was a member of the Council of Sachems of the society, but he retired at the next election and held no office in the society and had no standing in the political organization until the Murphy régime, when he was sent back to Congress. In January he was elected Grand Sachem of the society, to succeed Justice O'Gorman.

The election to the office of Grand Sachem is for life unless the incumbent resigns. The chief function of the Grand Sachem is to don the silk hat and regalia of office and preside at the annual Independence Day celebration in Tammany Hall on July 4.

The Tammany Society is the only organization which has continuously held Independence Day celebrations for more than a century. Since its organization in 1789 by William Mooney, it has regularly held patriotic exercises on the Fourth. Another interesting feature is the book which contains the constitution of the order and the signatures of every man who has been elected since its foundation. This book is in the possession of Thomas F. Smith as Secretary. The first signature signed to the constitution is that of Mooney, affixed Oct. 13, 1789.

There are upward of 21,000 signatures to the constitution in this book, and as the pages become filled new ones are added. A member, once elected, holds his membership for life with no dues except $25 on initiation, and $1 at the time of each annual election if the member wants to qualify to vote for sachems.

The Tammany General Committee, which is the Democratic County Committee, will be called to meet toward the end of the week to select the members of the committees of the organization.

It is understood that Charles H. Knox will be reappointed Chairman of the Committee on Law, Senator Thomas F. Grady Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, Magistrate Charles G. F. Wahle Chairman of the Committee on Printing, and Thomas C. T. Crain Chairman of the Committee on Public Meetings. The Chairmanship of the Committee on Election Officers will have to be given to a new man, as the old Chairman, George W. Plunkitt, lost his district in the last September primaries.

LAWSON WRITES TO SHAW.

A Pamphlet in Slang on the Subject of Government Deposits.

Thomas W. Lawson of Boston sent out yesterday a one-page pamphlet in slang attacking Secretary Shaw for his statement in Saturday's papers that $10,000,000 of Government funds would be immediately deposited in the existing depositary banks of the United States in the larger cities, and that "satisfactory bonds" would be accepted as security on a basis of 90 per cent. of their value, inasmuch as the $10,000,000 deposits would be only temporary.

Mr. Lawson dates his pamphlet "Middle of Wall Street," addresses "Our Dearest Secretary," and signs himself "U. R. Alrite, President Alrite Bank and Trust Company." Here are some extracts:

"Me and the gang have just read about your letting the boys have a hunk of the Treasury dough. Bully for you, old man! You're the right sort. You know your cue all right, all right. Don't let none of those flip guys who are running around these times with jack-o'-lanterns give you a shakedown with their warbles about the rights of the common people.

"The sooner the common people get it rammed down their crops that any long green left over in the Treasury's kitty is going to be sent back to the baize for new chips, the quicker they'll get their trolley fixed on the wire that kerlooloos.

Work, you chumps, work and sweat,
And leave the mazoom to them as bet.

"If you only keep plugging your surplus dough into the banks on this ten-point margin lay, we'll soak every mother's son of these suckers from the South and West until by next Fall they won't know whether they harvested a crop last year or not.

"You just sail in and get the dough pile down here in record time, and we'll show you a stunt that will make all the old ex-Secretaries throw flipflops."

The postscript says:

"If only you had started earlier, old man. Our friend Johnnie Walsh had 14 trunkfuls of new Injeana coal bonds that only stood him 11 mills on the dollar, and they got the hook around his shins because the Chicago National only had 26 millions of deposits for Johnnie to pull on. With the Treasury kitty to play up to, Johnnie could have given John D., inside of a year, a 40-yard start and beat him out 200 millions at the wire. Oh, if you had only started earlier, old man."

FATHER SHERMAN ON WAR.

The General's Son Tells a Big Crowd Why God Tolerates It.

The Rev. Thomas Ewing Sherman, son of Gen. W. T. Sherman, began last night a series of Lenten lectures for Protestants and Catholics in St. Patrick's Cathedral. The cathedral was as crowded as it is on Easter Sunday, rows of camp stools being placed in the aisles. Father Sherman is tall and spare, like his father. He has a deep and musical voice, and was easily heard in all parts of the cathedral.

It is his custom to have a question box at the entrance. Written inquiries he answers on the succeeding night. Not the least interesting part of his lecture last night was his answer to a question from a man who heard a previous lecture.

He was asked how an omnipotent and good God could tolerate war. His reply was that though war is a great evil, yet it is conducive to national activity, the training of character through order, subordination, patience, and a hundred other virtues, such as gallantry and chivalry.

Father Sherman's theme last night was "The Reign of Law." The greatest law, he said, was the moral law of right and wrong, virtue and vice, known even among savages. The moral law of itself proved God's intimate relationship with us.

Father Sherman's other lectures will be: "The Human Soul," "The Rock of Faith," "Why I am a Catholic," and "The Modern Popes."

DREAM MAY COST HIS LIFE.

Man Shot by His Business Partner in Mistake for a Burglar.

Special to The New York Times.

LEBANON JUNCTION, Ky., March 4.—Shelby Patterson early this morning shot his business partner, Samuel McGruder, mistaking him for a burglar, and McGruder is believed to be dying.

McGruder says he awoke at his home at 2 o'clock after dreaming that he had failed to lock the door of the safe in his store. He hurried there, quietly slipped in, and while trying the combination was fired upon twice, both shots taking effect. McGruder is the second man shot by Patterson under the belief that he was firing at a burglar.

Sailor on Transport Lawton Lost.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 4.—After a leisurely trip from Manila, the navy transport Lawton, Capt. Charles F. Pond, arrived yesterday with seven passengers and about 150 men of the navy who have served their time on the vessels of the Asiatic Fleet. The Lawton was in a severe southwest storm off the coast last Friday and lost a man overboard, Augustine Nable, an ordinary seaman.

WOMAN PIANIST'S PLEA TO STATE DEPARTMENT

Mme. Samaroff Asks Protection Against Her Husband.

AFRAID TO GO TO GERMANY

Says That in London She Had to be Protected by Detectives While Playing.

Mme. Olga Samaroff, an American pianist, has been compelled to get assurance from the State Department at Washington that she will be protected from her husband before making arrangements for a tour in France and Germany. She has received assurances that the United States will see that she gets all her rights, and she has in consequence entered upon arrangements for the tour in the coming season.

Mme. Samaroff came from Texas. She studied music abroad, and while in Germany met Boris Loutsky, a wealthy Russian, and married him. They separated after a few years. It is explained by the friends of Mme. Samaroff that she found the Russian view of the status of a wife to be greatly different from the American view, and that she could no longer stand the treatment of her husband.

About two years ago she escaped from his home in Berlin and managed to get aboard a steamer before he discovered her absence. She came to America and took refuge in the home of her mother in St. Louis. Since then she has been playing in the United States. She gave her first recital in New York in November.

Offers have come from Germany for her appearances in concerts there, where she has been known for several years. In consequence she recently went to Washington and saw officials at the State Department in an effort to learn whether it would be possible for her husband to enforce against her in Germany the Russian law which makes the husband the absolute master of the wife.

In explanation of her course, Mme. Samaroff has given out a statement in which she says:

"I deeply regret that it is necessary for me to make public any of the details which are necessary in order to explain my appeal for protection from the United States authorities. I would not do so except that my husband has written to me and said that he will in the future make every effort to ruin my career, sparing neither energy nor money in the task.

"An article attacking me was published in the Berliner Tageblatt and copied in the United States, and I have no doubt that efforts will be made to publish others of the same tenor, both here and abroad. I have remained silent under attacks for more than a year, but now I want the public to understand precisely what is the animus behind such things.

"I found it impossible to live any longer with my husband and left him in Berlin. After staying for a short time in St. Louis with my mother, after my arrival in this country, I decided to take up a musical career, the only source of independent livelihood open to me, and came to New York for that purpose. My husband, although abroad, disturbed me in one way or another while I was in New York, but it was not until I went abroad for recitals in London last Summer that the matter became serious.

"I had taken the precaution to obtain letters to the representatives of the United States in London, and as soon as I arrived I placed myself under the care of a London solicitor. I soon learned that my husband had been keeping track of all my movements and had started for London on hearing of my visit. Attempts were made to decoy me to places where I was convinced he would be waiting for me.

"On the morning of my first concert a Berlin manager called to see me and warned me not to go on the stage, as my husband had threatened to kill me. I had two Scotland Yard men stationed in the audience, and they watched my husband during the recital and were prepared to interpose in case he should try to do anything.

"It has been necessary to seek aid of the State Department now because, unless there is some official protection, it is doubtful whether it would be safe for me to visit Germany."

"JIM CROW" SCHOOLS.

East Orange School Board's Segregation Approved by State Officers.

The members of the East Orange Board of Education are filled with jubilation over the receipt of a letter bearing on negro segregation, received from Charles J. Baxter, State Superintendent of Schools. Supt. Baxter sides with the Board of Education in forming the "Jim Crow" classes. He declines to continue the discussion of the matter as the Board of Education has capitulated to the colored people and rescinded the obnoxious measures.

The complaint was that sixteen pupils were unlawfully removed "from their proper classroom or rooms and placed under a different teacher in a different and distant room" last November. The answer to this charge was that the class was "a backward class," consisting of both white and colored pupils. Supt. Baxter finds that with few exceptions the sixteen pupils have remained in that class. He adds:

"It appears, therefore, that with respect to the pupils above named the school authorities have acted in accordance with law in the exercise of a wise discretion and for the best interests of the pupils concerned; also that there was no discrimination on account of 'religion, nationality, or color.' I am of the opinion, therefore, that no action by this department, with respect to these pupils, is necessary at this time."

The colored people who have been fighting the "Jim Crow" schools are preparing a reply to Mr. Baxter in which they will endeavor to elucidate some points which they think he has either overlooked or misunderstood.

FARMERS AND COTTON PRICES

Southern Planters Untroubled by Declines—Their Sales.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 28.—Farmers in this section of the South are not particularly troubled because the last eight days or so have been marked by a gradual downward tendency of cotton prices. They accept it as the inevitable result of a good movement of the staple at this time of year, combined with a certainty that there is no impending shortage of supply and the promise which the weather now gives of favorable conditions for starting the new crop.

The increased movement of cotton into sight of late does not indicate to the farmer a general apprehension of a further fall in prices, nor yet does it portend a startling discovery of a hidden surplus of the 1905 crop, to appear when the last ginners' report is made. He accounts for it by the simple fact that farmers are beginning to need money again. It is characteristic of the small farmer of the South—whose name is legion—that, either from long habit of poverty or because of constitutional improvidence, he conducts his finances as well as his farming on the hand-to-mouth principle. He never buys his seed till he is ready to put it into the ground, and he does not sell his cotton—unless unduly stimulated by a high market—until the change in his pockets has become painfully noticeable by its absence. In the nature of things, his supplies, laid in at the beginning of Winter, are now running short. His stock are out of feed, the flour barrel in his pantry is empty, all the cornmeal in the bags has been converted into johnny cakes and eaten, and besides, it is time to begin his Spring work, to get new plowpoints, and to buy his fertilizers. For any or all of these reasons he takes his remaining bale or bales of cotton out of storage and hauls it to market. And it may be remarked that when he comes to this point of "needs must" he does not in the least concern himself as to what the Cotton Association has been telling him about holding his cotton for 15 cents or any other figure. He is out of money and the cotton must go, whatever the market figure may be at this point. I have known a good many farmers in my day, in the East and West as well as South, but never saw any who accepted the ups and downs of the market with such cool philosophy as he of the Cotton Belt. Oh, he no doubt says some very bad words about his luck if the price is down at his selling time, but when he has thus vented his wrath he wastes no more breath in grumbling.

Now the increased movement into sight, of late accounted for as above, is worth noting in detail. The statement of Secretary Hester of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, at the close of business on Saturday, the 24th, showed that there had come into sight during the seven days preceding 214,095 bales of cotton, an increase, compared with the movement of the seven days ending this date last year, of 60,000 bales, (in round figures,) and an increase over the movement during the same time in 1904 of 77,000 bales. In fact, in spite of the quiet market prevailing during most of the time, the movement during the first twenty-three days of February was markedly strong. The total brought into sight in that time was 644,789 bales, against 455,242 in the same time last year, and 607,905 year before last.

The export market during the past week has been better than that at home. Our own spinners are still buying, but moderately. They feel assured that there is no shortage in view, and as I may have before noted they have come to the conclusion that it will pay them to compel the producers to bear the cost of storing the cotton. Since September the takings of home spinners have been larger, proportionately, than those of foreign manufacturers, and it is probable that they are fairly well stocked now. English and Continental mills have taken largely of the cotton of India and Egypt, and Japan, although her war is now over, has not even yet begun to call for her wonted supply, while China is spoiling our market with a determined boycott.

But with an eye on the proportionate increase of the world's consumption of cotton during the past five years, and noting the thriving condition of the cotton goods trade, the farmer of the Cotton Belt is pretty sure that his market will not seriously fail him for some time to come at least.

SUNDAY RAIDS IN PATERSON.

City Office Holders and Business Men Captured—Bars Closed.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., March 4.—After compelling all the hotels and restaurants here to close their bars after midnight last night, Chief Bimson to-night sent out two squads of plain-clothes men, who raided a poker game at Ellison and Washington Streets and a stuss game at 119 Ellison Street. Forty men were taken in the two raids. Among them were prominent officeholders and business men.

WHITE HOUSE BRIDE IN HER OWN HOME

Mr. and Mrs. Longworth Return to Washington from Cuba.

LUNCH WITH THE PRESIDENT

Also Go for a Stroll and Meet Many Friends on the Street—To Visit in Cincinnati Soon.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Representative Nicholas Longworth and his "White House bride" returned to Washington from their wedding journey to Cuba this morning. They were passengers by the Southern express, which got in at 9:50, and for the first time since her father has been President "Miss Alice" came to Washington and was not driven from the station in a White House carriage. Mr. Longworth's automobile was waiting for them, and as soon as their light luggage was piled in they were whisked away to their home at Eighteenth and I Streets.

They both looked extremely well and happy. Mr. Longworth lent a helping hand to the stowage of the luggage in his car, while his wife looked on, evidently pleased to be so near her own home. She wore a gown of light brown cloth, with handsome sable furs, and a large brown hat. They responded pleasantly to the greetings of the few persons at the station who recognized them, and settled comfortably back in the automobile as they drove off at a rapid pace.

At the Eighteenth Street house they were received only by the servants, who had the house in readiness for their new mistress. After resting for a few hours they went over to the White House at 1:30 to lunch with the bride's family. Mrs. Longworth gave her father an enthusiastic hug and kiss, and bestowed similar greetings on Mrs. Roosevelt and all her brothers and her sister.

Soon after 3 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Longworth returned to their home, where they remained until about 5, when they went out for a walk on Connecticut Avenue. The bride wore her favorite gown of Alice blue cloth, and toque of the same color with white osprey feathers. They met scores of friends, some of whom they stopped to shake hands with and exchange greetings. They dined at home at 7 o'clock alone.

Few entertainments have been arranged for them so far, as it is Lent, and there is at least an excuse for an absence of functions of all kinds. They will, however, be entertained with great frequency during the Spring season while they remain in Washington. They will go to Cincinnati soon and take a trip to Europe during the Summer, in spite of the coming campaign, in which Mr. Longworth will be a candidate for re-election to Congress.

Mrs. Longworth, mother of the bridegroom, did not return to Washington to greet her son and his wife, but remained in Cincinnati with her younger daughter, Mrs. Buckner Wallingford, who is in frail health. The Countess de Chambrun, Mr. Longworth's other sister, who came over from her home in Paris for the wedding, returned to Paris last week.

Union Hears Federation Accused.

The Executive Committee of the Workingmen's State Federation was accused at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union in a report made by James Holland, Chairman of a committee which went to Albany to agitate for the Eight-hour bill of Assemblyman Rock, of favoring the Gates bill, which the labor unions in New York are against. The Gates bill, it is charged, nullifies the eight-hour provisions in a number of trades.

RUNNERS IN DEAD HEAT IN CROSS-COUNTRY RUN

McCherry Wins on Toss in Mott Haven's Event.

FRANK TAKES TIME PRIZE

Olympic Games Representative Shows Good Form — Mohawks Capture Banner for Points.

Sixty-six of the best long-distance runners in the metropolitan district took part in the Mott Haven Athletic Club handicap cross-country run yesterday and sixty-one finished. The race was close throughout. M. Driscoll of the Mercury Athletic Club and G. McCherry, unattached, tied for first place. They tossed for the prize and McCherry won. W. G. Frank of the Irish-American Athletic Club, who will represent the United States in the Marathon race in the Olympic games at Athens next month, finished in the forty-first position, from scratch, but secured the time prize, his time being 29:56. J. Malone of the Mohawk Athletic Club won the novice time prize. He ran a good race and finished third, only seven seconds behind the two leaders. The team prize went to the Mohawk Athletic Club.

One of the most interesting features of the run was the race between Frank, Basson, and Mellor for the time prize. Frank started from scratch and the other two men received 0:30 handicap. The trio kept together throughout, and Mellor, who is one of the most consistent cross-country runners in the East, was defeated by 0:26 in actual time. Basson was two seconds behind Mellor.

The rains made the roads very heavy, and the contestants were covered with mud when they returned. The course was from the clubhouse, 138th Street and Third Avenue, to Cedar Park and return, by way of Gerard and Jerome Avenues, with the finish at Mott Haven Avenue and 138th Street. Summary:

Two Harlem River boat clubs held weekly runs yesterday. M. Livingston finished first in the Crescent Rowing Club event, covering the six-mile course in 35:06. The first four men to follow Livingston in were: W. Koop, J. Dingi, J. Betts, and C. Graham. An unusually big field of runners left the Metropolitan house, but many fell out before the end of the run. Andy Corbett won the race, which was seven miles, in 40:18. The others finished as follows: J. Callahan, J. Gottsell, L. Rivas, J. McKenna, C. Putnam, H. Hertel, and F. Metz.

STOLEN TRANSFERS TRACED.

Two Men Charged with Robbing the Union Railway Company.

Dressed in the uniform of an elevated railway conductor, Detective Gordon of the Tremont Police Station last night arrested Alfred J. Creace, who keeps a restaurant and boarding house at 1,246 East 176th Street, on a charge of receiving stolen property. Later in the evening Detective Keeling of the same station arrested Augustus Fidler of the same address on a charge of grand larceny.

According to the police, Fidler, who is in the employ of the Union Railway Company, and Creace have been concerned in the stealing of eighteen pads of transfer tickets to the value of $54.

Chief Inspector Carrigan of the Union Railway found a conductor named Edward Kelly issuing some of the missing tickets. Kelly told him he bought the transfers from Creace.

Creace said he got the tickets from Fidler, and Fidler declared he found three pads of tickets on a flat car.

The cases were adjourned until to-morrow.

BLAMES SCIENTIFIC BOOKS.

Bishop Andrews Says They Keep New Yorkers from Church.

Bishop F. J. Andrews preached at the closing ceremonies of the Seventieth anniversary of the Eighteenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday morning in place of Bishop Fowler, whose wife was ill. The congregation numbered about 100.

"Some persons have the power of making people believe that things that are are not," said he. "Scientific books are printed for this purpose every day. They all seem to be for the purpose of putting into the public mind a leavening of doubt of the hereafter, and they inject sacrilegious ideas and absolute unbelief.

"That is the reason that as I stand in this pulpit I see all these vacant seats. It is not the struggle for money that is keeping the people from the west side of New York from going to church. It is the literature that is read to-day that is doing it."

KILLS WIFE WITH HAMMER.

Dentist Then Blows His Head Off—Had Been in Sanitarium.

BUFFALO, March 4.—Henry L. Whitbeck, a dentist, killed his wife with a hammer to-day and then shot off the top of his head with a Mauser rifle.

Whitbeck walked up behind his wife as she was sitting in a rocking chair and struck her two blows, one on the right temple and one on the left, each time fracturing the skull. He laid the hammer on a table and walked into the next room, where he took up a rifle. Resting the butt end on the floor, he leaned his forehead against the mouth of the barrel and pulled the trigger.

Mrs. Whitbeck was taken to a hospital where she died in an hour. She had been an invalid many years. She was about the same age as her husband, 45 years. Whitbeck came from Albany, where he has a brother. In addition to being a dentist, he was a graduate physician. He recently came out of a sanitarium, where he had been treated for intemperance.

HENRY W. TAFT PROTESTS.

Two School Bills Dangerous, He Tells Assemblyman Chairman.

Henry W. Taft, a brother of the Secretary of War, a former member of the Board of Education, and one of the revisers of the Greater New York Charter, has sent a letter to Chairman Burnett of the Assembly's Committee on City Affairs, protesting against the passage of two bills amending Sections 1,079 and 1,089 of the Revised Charter. One of the bills is designed to take from the Board of Superintendents of the Board of Education certain powers and vest these powers in the Board of Education itself.

The measure takes from the Superintendents the power to nominate District Superintendents. Mr. Taft points out that the work done by the District Superintendents is largely of the same character as that performed by the principals of the schools, only more important. Mr. Taft says this requires professional qualifications in the District Superintendents and that the Board of Education, composed of laymen, is less competent to judge of these qualifications than the District Superintendents, who are themselves teachers by profession.

In the second place, Mr. Taft says, the power of appointment, if vested in the Board of Education, would be attended with danger of favoritism, and that it was this the revisers of the charter had in mind when they vested that power in the Superintendents.

The other bill, which is said to have the backing of Mayor McClellan and would take from Supt. Maxwell the power of nominating members of the Board of Examination, Mr. Taft pronounces a most dangerous reactionary measure.

"Everything that I have said in relation to the unwisdom of vesting in the Board of Education the power to select District Superintendents applies with even greater force to this bill," writes Mr. Taft. "It is an attempt to restore conditions which existed before 1896 and led to the scandals in the school administration which were corrected in that year by the reform school law.

"The Board of Exeaminers controls the source which supplies the entire educational system with competent teachers. If it is polluted by the introduction of political influence or the lowering of standards, the efficiency of the entire system will be irreparably injured."

THERE WAS A FIRE.

And It Wasn't the Boy's Fault the Firemen Had No Work.

As the sacred concert crowds were thronging 125th Street last night at 8 o'clock a lighted cigarette was dropped on one of the straw mattresses in Sievers's bowling alley, at 209 West 125th Street. Soon there was a fierce blaze. Joseph Gries, a boy employed in the place, rushed out, pulled the hook in the alarm box at Eighth Avenue, and awaited the arrival of the engines.

They came tearing up, but by this time a couple of portable extinguishers had put out the mattress fire, and there did not seem any reason for their run. So evidently thought Policeman Downey. He caught Gries and said:

"Are you the kid that pulled the box?"

"Sure," was the reply.

"Sure there was a fire?"

"You bet your life."

Downey, however, started to take the boy off to the station. The crowd interfered and told the policeman the boy had done just what was right. Downey then let the boy go.

SUICIDE AT A MEETING.

Accused Member of the Gapon Organization Kills Himself.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 4.—In the course of a meeting to-day of the Father Gapon workingmen's organization, which was investigating the scandal involving charges of accepting money from the Government, an accused member dramatically committed suicide.

With the recent disappearance of Matushensky, the assistant of Father Gapon, who was charged with embezzling $12,000 belonging to the Gapon organization, it was discovered that the organization, established by Gapon after the Emperor's manifesto of last Oct. 30, was subsidized by the Government.

EX-GOV. HOGG'S MONUMENT.

He Asked His Children to Plant Two Trees on His Grave.

AUSTIN, Texas, March 4.—The body of ex-Gov. Hogg arrived here this afternoon from Houston, accompanied by his children and delegations from the Houston Bar Association and union labor organizations. The body was met at the station by thousands of people, who acter as an honorary escort to the State House, where the body will lie in state until the funeral to-morrow.

On the evening before his death Mr. Hogg talked at length regarding the kind of monument he wished.

"I want no monument of stone," he said, "but let my children plant at the head of my grave a pecan tree and at the foot of my grave a walnut tree, and when these trees shall bear let the pecans and the walnuts be given out among the plain people of Texas, so that they may plant them and make Texas a land of trees."

"MAY GOD SAVE AMERICA,"

"For Unregenerate Man Cannot," Says the Rev. Dr. Anderson.

The Rev. T. W. Anderson, D. D., pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church, in West 108th Street, preached on the "Wrongs and Abuses of Public Trusts" last evening. He said that the country was no worse to-day than it was fifty or sixty years ago, but he added:

"May God save America, for it has been clearly demonstrated that unregenerate man cannot."

Mizners May Stay in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 4.—It is believed here that Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Mizner intend to make Chicago their home for the next few months at least. Mrs. Mizner has established herself at the Yerkes residence, 3201 Michigan Avenue, with a retinue of servants, and to all appearances intends to remain here indefinitely. A carload of automobiles belonging to the former Mrs. Yerkes was shipped to Chicago from New York last week.

YACHT RACING SCHEDULE INSURES ACTIVE SEASON

Clubs Plan More Races Than the Calendar Will Permit.

KING'S CUP THE BIG FEATURE

Closing Spectacle Promised That Will Afford Another Great Contest—New Boats Building.

The announcement of dates for the New York Yacht Club contests is the herald of the oncoming of an active racing season. The yachtsmen of both Gravesend Bay and Long Islang Sound are arranging elaborate schedules for the Summer that will afford a season's sport of almost unprecedented interest and importance. The building of new yachts for strictly racing purposes gives ample testimony to this same end. Over sixty boats are building or projected, two schooners, two sloops of the fifty-seven-foot class, three twenty-seven-footers, two twenty-twos and thirty eighteenth-footers, with enough of the small one-design classes to bring the total far beyond the three score total.

The complete roster of races cannot be completed for fully a month, and then it will be added to from time to time throughout the season. It is indicative, however, that the Gravesend Bay Yacht Racing Association had applications for nearly double the number of Saturdays and holidays at its disposal and has laid out a programme calling for an average of two races a week. The Long Island Sound Association is almost sure to meet the same situation and finds itself not only facing conflicts on every Saturday, but in many instances four and five races on a Saturday, and an unusual number of mid-week fixtures.

The annual regattas of the leading clubs will be held as follows:

New York Yacht Club, June 14; Atlantic Yacht Club, June 12; Larchmont Yacht Club, July 4; Indian Harbor Yacht Club, July 28; American Yacht Club, July 2; Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club, June 23; Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, June 9; Knickerbocker Yacht Club, June 2; New Rochelle Yacht Club, June 30.

The season will open on the Sound on May 23 at New Rochelle. On the same day the Brooklyn Yacht Club will fire its first gun, starting the ocean race for the Lipton Cup from Gravesend Bay to Jamaica. The Atlantics start their campaign on Decoration Day. This, too, is Manhasset Bay's opening. June will mark races at Indian Harbor, a three-day series at Oyster Bay, Larchmont, and Glen Cove, besides the starting of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club power boat race from Marblehead on June 27, to finish at College Point, and the New York Athletic Club race to Block Island on June 30. On Gravesend Bay eight races will be started in June.

July will mark the beginning of the cruises. On the 4th Larchmont and the Atlantics have race days scheduled. On the 7th the New Rochelle long-distance race to and around Montauk, to and around Northeast End Lightship off Cape May, and back to Gravesend Bay will begin. The same day the New York Yacht Club holds its Spring cup races, and later in the month its Glen Cove and Bennett Cup events.

Larchmont race week, of course, is July's principal feature. From July 14 to 21 the entire Long Island fleet and many of the Gravesend Bay boats will race. The Atlantic Yacht Club fleet will by then have returned from its joint cruise with the Seawanhaka Corinthians and the Philadelphia Corinthians, while the New Rochelle, Knickerbocker, and some of the smaller club cruises will have been held. Cruising races, too, will be part of July's programme. The Atlantics, by the way, will end their cruise with a real ocean race to Sea Gate this year.

There will be the King's Cup race in early August, and the races for the Astor cups. Then there will be the trial races off Marblehead to choose the three boats to represent America in the German-American race for the Roosevelt Cup. This would seem to be the climax of the season, but though the remainder of August may be light, September will mark a revival of interest in some special events that have not yet been announced. One, however, will be for a $1,000 gold cup, which will be worthy of comparison with the King's Cup. It will introduce a series of races of as great and more prolonged interest. The international races with Germany with this other series mentioned will make as fitting a finale for a most noteworthy season as could well be planned.

Company K's Riflemen First in Match.

The second and final competition of the season for the Seventy-first Regiment trophy was decided on the range of the Seventh Regiment Rifle Club in the armory on Saturday night, and Company K came off with flying colors. In the first competition, on June 13, Company G led, and that company's riflemen were expected to lead again on Saturday night, but they lost by ten points. The match was open to teams of five men each, seven shots standing, a t200 yards, and seven prone, at 500 yards, two competitions. Time limit, fifteen minutes for each team, counting from the first shot. The scores:

	Second Comp.	First Comp.	Total
Company K	306	293	599
Company G	298	299	597
Company I	297	297	594
Company D	300	290	590

Company H	287	282	569
Company F	284	279	563
Company A	277	276	553
Company E	236	289	525

The three prizes in the sweepstakes match were won by Sergt. H. L. Suydam, Private Thees, and Private Sherwood. Capt. B. B. McAlpin qualified as an expert, and Lieut. Kipp, Sergt. Smith, Private Spencer, and W. T. Harding qualified as sharpshooters.

New York A. C. Pool Championship.

The second week of the pool tournament for the championship of the New York Athletic Club begins to-night. J. M. Heatherton and W. A. Tilt are now tied for the lead, each having won two games without a defeat. As the pair will be drawn against each other this week, it is probable that one of them will secure an undisputed lead, as they appear to be playing stronger than the other contestants. Of the eight original entries, seven remain. E. S. Crowe has withdrawn owing to ill health. To-night C. J. McKenna and C. E. S. McCann will meet. The second game will be forfeited by E. S. Crowe to E. A. Gamble. The standing of the players follows:

Name.	W.	L.	Name.	W.	L.
J. M. Heatherton	2	0	J. W. Becker	2	1

DR. WARREN LACKS AID.

Hotel Chaplain Has Hard Work Getting Rooms, He Tells the Gideons.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Marsh Warren, who is known as the chaplain of the hotels, conducted the monthly service yesterday of New York Camp No. 1 of the organization of Christian commercial travelers called "The Gideons." The meeting was held in one of the parlors of the Broadway Central Hotel. There were about thirty men and several women present.

Dr. Warren said that the hardest task he encountered in his own work was to get a meeting place. He added:

"Doubtless it is different with you, but, although I regret to say so, my letters to the proprietors of hotels are often thrown into the waste basket. At any rate, they remain unanswered.

"I have a meeting in a different hotel every Sunday night, but although I hold myself ready to minister to the guests of hotels at any hour of the day or night, I sometimes have to make half a dozen applications before I get the consent of any proprietor to hold a meeting in a hotel."

THREE HELD FOR BURGLARY.

Man Who Picked Up Prisoner's Revolver Beaten by Gang of Toughs.

A boy rushed into the West 100th Street Station between 11 and 12 o'clock last night and told Sergt. Devery that burglars were busy in the jewelry store of Charles Geist, at 764 Columbus Avenue.

Roundsman Minogue and Policeman Craft, were sent there in haste. They say they found two young men, one who afterward described himself as Stafford Hughes, 19 years old, of 75 West Ninety-eighth Street, and James McCormick, 18 years old, of 128 West Twenty-seventh Street, inside the store. Outside and on guard, they say, was James Donovan, 18 years old, who said he also lived at 128 West Twenty-seventh Street. Donovan took to his heels when he saw the policeman, but the others were arrested. Donovan was caught later.

On the way to the police station McCormick, according to the police, threw away a loaded revolver. It was picked up later and taken to the station. Hughes and Donovan had two silver watches and two cheap fobs. They were all held on charges of burglary.

As the man who took the revolver was leaving the police station he was attacked by a gang of young toughs outside and severely beaten. He managed to get away from them, and Harry Meister, 18 years old, of 100 West Forty-eighth Street, was arrested as one of the gang. The man did not give his name to the police.

HALTS MRS. CUBUSHER'S AUTO

Police Accuse Chauffeur of Speeding—She'll See Bingham.

E. H. Hawley, who gave his address as 890 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, was arrested last night by Bicycle Policeman Dillon of the Westchester Police Station for alleged overspeeding of the automobile which he was driving along the East Chester Road at Pelham Parkway. In the automobile were three women, one of whom gave her name as Mrs. Charles Cubusher of St. Louis, and said she owned the automobile.

Mrs. Cubusher, who also told the policeman that she wa sthe wife of a millionaire and lived while in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria, was very indignant at the arrest, and declared she would "see Commissioner Bingham about it" to-day. At the police station she left $100 cash bail for the chauffeur's appearance in the Westchester Court this morning.

Last Days of Sportsmen's Show.

The Motor Boat and Sportsmen's Show at Madison Square Garden will close on Thursday night. The finals in the water sports will be the feature during the next four days, and for to-night a novel tug-of-war is scheduled. Sixteen men in four canoes will paddle against the Buster Brown launch. Finn and Rouse are unbeaten in the round robin tilting contest, and the final rounds will bring the leaders together. David T. Abercrombie, as the fisherman, and Edward Lane, as the man-fish, will have another struggle to-night. The canoe races, swimming matches, and mattress races will be continued every afternoon and evening. The standing of the teams in the tilting contest follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Finn and Rouse	11	0
G. Renshaw and McCullough	7	1
Trede and Sterk	6	2
G. Burgess and Hubert	5	2
J. Burgess and Davis	4	2

Doings of Local Oarsmen.

The annual meeting of the Harlem Regatta Association, composed of rowing clubs on the Harlem River, will be held at Pabst's Harlem Hall this evening, when plans will be decided for the coming season. It is practically settled that the annual regatta will be held on May 30, and the regulation events are to be on the programme, with two or three races added that will increase the interest. It is possible that an octuple sculls race will replace one of the eight-oared shell events. C. M. De La Vergne will not be a candidate for re-election to the Presidency, owing to business reasons. A lively contest for the Presidency has developed between Vice President E. W. Kimmelberg of the Wyanoke Boat Club and Secretary E. S. Connell of the Union Boat Club. No one has appeared as a candidate for the Secretaryship.

An effort will be made next Sunday to organize a new association among the clubs of the Hudson River. The meeting is called for 2:30 P. M. at the Active Boat Clubhouse. It is proposed to call the new organization the Hudson River Rowing Association.

The Crescent Athletic Club will be an important factor in rowing matters this year. The Rowing Committee has purchased a four-oared shell, and also a racing gig, and it is intended to enter a crew in the Eagle Cup event of the Long Island regatta, besides entries in the other regattas, as the men develop.

The Seawanhaka Boat Club senior four has disbanded. The quartet was intent on trying to retain the championship this year, but this was found impossible. This will enable Shepheard, the stroke oar, to devote all his time to single sculling, in which he was somewhat handicapped last year. He is the best man who has been developed in local waters for a decade, and many experts believe he will be this year's National champion. He may row doubles with McLoughlin as a partner.

Clubs on Long Island are in a prosperous condition. The Nautilus Club has a full membership; the Varunas are happy over the $1,000 which was recently added to their treasury; the Sheepshead Bay Club has received a big addition to its membership; the Ravenswood and Wabnetah Clubs are in a better condition than in many years past.

MOTORING IN JAMAICA A STRENUOUS PASTIME

New York Tourists Find Garages Do Not Keep Gasoline.

FAIR ROADS, BUT BAD TURNS

Mules Scarce, So Seventeen Workmen Push American Automobile Out of a Ditch.

Automobilists who contemplate a motor tour in the Island of Jamaica will do well to supply themselves with plenty of gasoline when they ship their cars to the West Indies, for it is a scarce commodity there and very expensive. A. A. Stewart and Herbert S. Francis of this city, who are now making a tour through Jamaica in a forty-horse power touring car, came near having their trip cut short at the start through ignorance of the gasoline capabilities of the island. In a letter just received by Douglas Andrews from Mr. Francis the latter states that when they landed in Kingston with their automobile they had ten gallons of gasoline. Mr. Francis, hearing that a garage was in the town, started off confidently to replenish the tank, only to learn that not a drop of that indispensable fuel was to be had. An American who had completed a short tour heard of Mr. Francis's difficulty and offered him ten gallons. Thus supplied with twenty gallons, the first auto run of sixty-nine miles to Port Antonio was commenced.

On the subject of gasoline Mr. Francis says: "Gasoline in Jamaica, when it can be found, is worth from 50 to 75 cents a gallon. The duty on it is 15 cents a gallon—almost as much as a gallon costs at retail in New York. The auto tourist, if he is going to remain for any length of time, would do well to ship his supply from New York. A duty of one-sixth of the value of the car is also collected at the Custom House, but the amount is returned when the machine is taken out of the island."

Mr. Stewart and Mr. Francis had some pleasant and difficult experiences in reaching Port Antonio. Mr. Francis drove the car, and he gives a graphic description of the ride:

"From Kingston we went due north through Hope Gardens up Stony Hill, the steepest hill I ever experienced, and about four miles long. I went up at second speed, a feat never accomplished by any automobile on the island before. Many have to be towed to the top. From there to Annotta Bay the route winds up and down hill, through the most lovely scenery imaginable, oranges, bananas, cocoanuts, mangoes, palms, and fruits of all descriptions growing in the greatest profusion.

"You may perhaps round a corner suddenly and see a sheer declivity of 1,000 feet on one side and at the bottom a mountain stream wending its way in and out through the various obstructions. When we reached Annotta Bay we still had thirty-three miles to go, and it was getting dark. The darkness of the tropics, due to the dense foliage and vegetation, was, to say the least, conducive to a serious accident. I managed fairly well for about twenty miles, when suddenly the car swerved in some soft clay, and off I went into a ditch, with both axles buried. We were four miles from the nearest plantation, but I procured a Jamaican as black as your hat and persuaded him to run to the plantation and ask the manager to send us a mule team. I received his reply in about an hour and a quarter, saying that the mules were turned out to grass, and, being very hard to catch, he had sent his farm hands to try to push us out. It took seventeen men, with the aid of two large levers, to dislodge the machine, and we resumed our belated journey, reaching Port Antoio at a quarter to eleven, tired and dusty.

"It was one of the hardest roads I ever drove over, the corners here being practically all acute angles and exceedingly dangerous. The only pleasure derived from the journey was the way the engine worked, never giving the slightest trouble or missing all the way, and pulling up hills that seemed inaccessible on the second speed. When we came to a level stretch we easily went forty to fifty miles an hour."

Maroczy Wins and Draws at Chess.

Two games were finished by Geza Maroczy, the Hungarian chess champion, in his series at the Manhattan Chess Club yesterday, one in the early hours of the morning, with champion A. W. Fox, and the other with Julius Finn. Maroczy defeated Fox after fifty-five moves, but Finn held his adversary down to a draw after forty moves. In the game with Fox the latter played the Ruy Lopez, Maroczy resorting to the Bird defense of 3 Kt—Q5. Finn had the move against the visitor and chose the Four Knights opening. This evening Major Hanhaus will oppose the expert from Budapest in the final game of the series.

SHOT ON FALL RIVER BOAT.

Negro Galley Helpers Quarrel and One Is Wounded.

As the Fall River Line steamboat Pilgrim was passing under the Brooklyn Bridge early yesterday morning on her way to her dock Christopher Cole of 120 Grand Street, Jersey City, shot Joseph Walters of 200 Johnson Street, Brooklyn, in the side.

Walters was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital, with a serious wound. Cole was arrested when the Pilgrim reached her pier, and was arraigned in the Tombs Police Court, where Magistrate Steinert held him without bail until to-day.

Cole and Walters, who are negro helpers in the galley, had been enemies for a long time. Cole says Walters threatened him with a knife, but Walters declares Cole was the aggressor.

CALLS TAX LAW A SCANDAL.

But Mr. Purdy Doesn't Believe Rich Men Swear Falsely to Dodge.

At the People's Meeting of the Epiphany Baptist Church the subject of discussion yesterday afternoon was "Reforms Needed in Taxation to Prevent Perjury and Promote Morality." The Rev. Madison C. Peters, pastor of the church, presided. The only speaker was Lawson Purdy, who said that he was not of the opinion that men swore falsely to reduce their taxes.

"It is not necessary for the rich to resort to such means," said Mr. Purdy, "as no rich man need be liable for any personal tax. It may be difficult for men of moderate means to so arrange their investments as to be exempt from personal taxation. They are sometimes exposed to great temptations. The present system is a scandal and disgrace, and should be abolished."

The subject for the discussion next Sunday is, "Are Henry George's Theories Regarding Land, Labor, and Taxation Founded on the Bible, and Would Their Practical Application Tend to Solve Our Present Social Difficulties?" Addresses will be delivered by Charles Frederick Adams, Mrs. Belle De Rivera, and John Sherwin Crosby.

GIANTS IN THE SOUTH.

Pushball Their Favorite Exercise—Mathewson Has Not Pitched.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 4.—Red Elm Park, the home of the New York National League players for the next three weeks, is visited by a large number of the native population daily to see Manager McGraw and his world's champions do some real training. "Christy" and Henry Mathewson are the cynosures of many eyes. Henry is slightly taller than his brother, and his movements in baseball uniform are different. His action at times is awkward, but this may be removed when he becomes more accustomed to his comrades and surroundings. Owing to damp weather and rain neither "Christy" nor Henry have taken a ball in their pitching hands, but with the promised weather of the kind that makes Southern magnolias bloom steam and benders may be seen during this week.

"Broadway Aleo" Smith, who is training with the Giants, may receive a chance to play. He is, to all appearances, in good physical condition, and his friends here, who are many, say that he is joking when he talks of returning to the diamond, but McGraw makes no secret of the fact that he is fond of Smith personally, and does not deny that he is a possibility for utility catcher.

Ferguson, an American Association star, who pitched his way to a reputation that may end in his being installed a permanent member of the Giants, came from his home in Terre Haute, and although he has not attempted to show any signs of the marvelous speed he is heralded as having, he has impressed McGraw and the spectators who go to the park with his general baseball actions. He is robust in appearance without being "beefy," and is fairly fast. He won a majority of his games for Louisville last year, and in the Kentucky metropolis he is hailed as a fixture with the champions.

Batting at balls served by the blackest of pickaninnies, so common to this section of the Cotton Belt, has occupied most of Manager McGraw's time since starting the 1906 ante-Spring season. A score of the urchins are stationed in various parts of the grounds, and the Giants, dividing themselves into squads, take turns at smashing straight from the shoulder at the slow balls of the small Senegambians.

The big medicine ball and the larger pushball, the latter being over six feet in diameter, started an innovation in the manner of preliminary baseball training. Pushball has proved especially popular with the New Yorks. The sides frequently push so hard that the inflated leather is heaved high in the air and the opposing sides come together with crushes that are laughable but not dangerous.

Leon Ames and "Mike" Donlin put in an appearance to-day. They spent the Sabbath in idleness, Manager McGraw deciding on the holiday after a consultation with Trainer Tuthill, who reported many stiff limbs and muscles. One reason, however, that may have caused McGraw to abandon Sunday practice was that shortly before midnight Saturday strict orders were sent down the line by the Police Department to replace the lid which has been popularly supposed to have been lifted for several weeks. Appearance of a baseball player running from the park to the hotel and back was regarded as an act of infringement on the Tennessee law, therefore the players remained in citizens clothes.

The Cincinnati players spent to-day here en route to their Martin Springs (Texas) training grounds.

Waddell and Team Beaten in South.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, March 4.—The game to-day between the Philadelphia Americans and the local team was won for New Orleans by the good work of Huber, while Waddell did the star work for Philadelphia. The score was 4 to 3. Waddell only pitched for four innings, but during that time New Orleans got only one hit. Philadelphia played a snappy game, showing some excellent work for the time of year. The Quakers will stay out the week, probably playing next Saturday and Sunday. A fair crowd watched the game to-day.

TENNIS FOR SCHOOLBOYS AIM OF LOCAL LEAGUE

Plans Big Tournament to Make Youthful Players Proficient.

BRITONS TRYING SAME IDEA

National Association Will Be Asked to Promote Similar Meets in Other Cities.

An innovation of much importance is to be tried by the lawn tennis organizations this season, in an endeavor to recruit the top class of players. The scheme is to hold a series of tournaments for the boys of the public schools and high schools, and then have the winning players of each series meet for the championship title. This is the same manner in which the interscholastic championships are decided by the lawn tennis associations of the various colleges and universities each year, and which usually brings out youths who have qualified from the Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Pennsylvania, and other meetings.

The idea advanced for this year is of broader scope, and in a measure it was forced upon the Executive Committee of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association when seeking competitors for the American team that will strive to return the Dwight F. Davis International Challenge Cup to this country this year. After much correspondence it was found that at best only a small number of men were available and that these few lacked even good second-rate support. Both Raymond D. Little of the West Side Lawn Tennis Club and Frederick G. Anderson of the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club of Brooklyn realized the urgent need of bringing out newer men, not only to strengthen the international team of future years, for the Davis Cup is a perpetual trophy, but also to raise the standard of the many championships and sectional tournaments of this country.

It is planned to hold the first series of tournaments for the schoolboys in this city and have every section of Greater New York represented by as many players as possible. The Metropolitan Lawn Tennis League, which has accomplished such excellent work during the past two years, it is expected, will direct the tournaments, and the matches will be played on the courts of the clubs that are members of that organization.

The list of clubs in the Metropolitan League includes the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club of Brooklyn, twice winner of the championship; the New York Athletic Club, the Crescent Athletic Club, the West Side Lawn Tennis Club, the New York Lawn Tennis Club, the Hamilton Grange Lawn Tennis Club, the Siwanoy Lawn Tennis Club, the Knickerbocker Field Club of Flatbush, the Englewood Field Club, Englewood, N. J., and the Montclair (N. J.) Athletic Club. This list will probaby be increased by two other clubs this season, so as to afford ample facilities for the boys to engage in their tournaments.

Indirectly, the National association will be asked to further the project of bringing the schoolboys into the sport in the same manner that the English Lawn Tennis Association is now doing in London. The Britons have also awakened to the fact that fresher and stronger material must be developed from the second raters, and even in the classes below that, and London promises to hold a number of schoolboy meetings this year that will be keenly watched by followers of the sport in all countries where the game has obtained a foothold of importance. The plans will be discussed at the annual meeting of the Metropolitan League this week, and then brought before the National association, with a view to promoting similar tournaments in Boston and Chicago.

It is the most important movement that the players of this city have ever undertaken, and promises to advance interest in the sport to a widespread degree.

PENN BASKET BALL CHAMPION

Columbia Will Have Fight to Hold Second Place in College Race.

Columbia's defeat by Yale and Pennsylvania's victory over the New Haven collegians dissipated the Morningside boys' last chance of recovering their lost ground in the race for the intercollegiate basket ball championship and gave the title to the Quakers. Though Pennsylvania should lose the remaining game she has to play with Cornell, the tailender, there is no possibility of Columbia tieing her. Indeed, the Blue and White has to worry now about second place, for should Harvard win next Friday's game in New York the Crimson would take second place away from the New Yorkers.

Two games are to be played this week, Cornell and Pennsylvania finishing their schedule and Harvard completing Columbia's. This will leave only the Yale and Harvard game to be played. The record of the teams:

Team.	W.	L.	P.C.	Team.	W.	L.	P.C.

Athens Athletes for Eighth's Games.

George V. Bonhag, J. P. Sullivan, and William G. Frank, three of the athletes selected to represent the United States at Athens, Greece, in the Olympic Games, have entered for their respective events in the meeting of the Hospital Corps, Eighth Regiment, to be held at the armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue, on March 10. The prize list has attracted a fine list of competitors, including relay teams of the Public Schools Athletic League and the Police, Fire, and civil departments of the city. In addition to the Olympic athletes named there are a number who hope to be among the second selection to be made to-day, and inasmuch as these games will be an opportunity for most of them to try out for the various championships to be held a week later in the Madison Square Garden, competition of the highest order is assured.

Bothner and Kazzi Ready to Wrestle.

All indications point to a hard struggle between George Bothner, the lightweight champion, and Abraham Kazzi, the Turkish champion, in their wrestling match, catch-as-catch-can style, to-morrow night at the Grand Central Palace. The men will be required to weigh 138 pounds at the ring side, and $500 has been posted by each man as a guarantee that he will make the weight. Bothner, who is the wrestling instructor at Princeton University, is said to be in fine condition and will have a strong following on the night of the match. Kazzi, who is the first lightweight Turkish wrestler that ever appeared in this country, will also be backed heavily by the Turks and Syrians in this city on account of his great strength and aggressiveness.

WANT VANDERBILT CUP RACE.

To Circulate Petitions in Nassau County to Insure Contest.

MINEOLA, L. I., March 4.—Petitions asking that two days next Fall be set apart for the Vanderbilt Cup automobile race and the preliminary race will be circulated to-morrow, and signatures sought for in all parts of Nassau County. The Supervisors will be asked to set aside last year's course or such modification of it as may be asked for.

There now seems to be no doubt but that an application for permission to run the race will be granted. Chairman Jones of the board is favorable, and so is Supervisor Willetts. Supervisor Seabury of Hempstead is personally opposed to the use of the public roads for such high speed tests, holding that the automobilists should develop a course of their own if they wish to have high speed races, but as there are but three members of the board his opposition will be overruled.
